STUDENTS BOOK MATCHING

Register your books in S.U. Rm. Every student will your course next semester will need your books money, sell direct.

Can YOU Make The Grade?

This is an attempt to summarize some of the major points contained in the new grading system adopted by the University for the fall semester of 1971.

The grade of F will continue to be recorded but will not be included in quality point average calculations. The grades of Incomplete and WF as well as missing grades will not in included in computing averages.

The new grading system is not retroactive.

The new system places emphasis on quantity as well as quality in terms of progress toward a degree. Students must earn a minimum of 12 credits per semester or be placed on academic warning.

The new grade values are as follows: A - 4.0, AB - 3.5, B - 3.0, BC - 2.5, C - 2.0, CD - 1.5 D - 1.0, W, F, WF, Inc, Missing Grade, all equal no value.

The following table summarizes the qualifications for the various academic categories. It should be emphasized that the student must meet all of the average and credit requirements listed under good standing in order to qualify for good standing. If any one of the minima are not met, academic warning will result.

by SYDNEY OMARR

Leo individuals find it extremely difficult to extinguish torch for "first love." For Capricorn, current love is always "first." Gemini and Virgo can keep torch going in many areas simultaneously. The Pisces native never quite puts out any torch! For Scorpio, "carrying a torch" can be a way of life.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent on friends, desires, fulfillment of wishes. Family members now figure prominently in numerous areas. Income from professional efforts is spotlighted. Accept social invitation. See and be seen.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You get chance to put theories into action. Be confident. Professional associates are willing to lend helping hand. What might appear as opposition should be regarded as healthy challenge.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Good lunar aspect now coincides with journey, development of basic concepts. Keep communication lines open. Write, publish and advertise. Refuese to be restricted by one who lacks imagination.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Legacies, investments, money of mate, partner these command attention. Burden, not rightly your own, is lifted. You are more free to carry out desires. Relationships now are intensified.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Emphasis is on public relations, partnerships, joint efforts. You can put forth originalideas. But you will need co-operation of one close to you. Subject of marriage may take precedence.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your work may now encompass travel by air and water. Obviously, cycle is such that you get things done through persistence combined with imagination. Avoid extremes in dining habits.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Clear away debris-emotional and otherwise. Reach beyond supposed limitations. You have more going for you than might be imagined. Make changes. Encourage variety of experiences. Stress versatility.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Basic issues likely to dominate. Stick to facts. Leave speculation to others. One at home needs advice. Give it without playing role of wise guy. Gentle approach now achieves purpose. Act accordingly.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Ideas now are plentiful-a key is to select quality. Don't spread efforts in too many directions. Being in touch with one at a distance aids cause. Know this and get busy with correspondence.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Accent on what you own, pay and collect. General gain indicated. Avoid the sensational. Maintain steady pace. One who advocates otherwise speaks from lack of experience. Family member now is on target.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Take initiative. Begin project. Welcome new contacts, challenges. Many now compliment you on appearance. Special accolade comes your way. No time for false shyness. Stand up and be counted. Assert views.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Activity indicated in connection with libraries, hospitals, other institutions. Charitable cause benefits through your efforts, talents. Especially good for you if in motion picture, TV industries.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are generous, receptive to ideas of others -but, at times, lack personal forcefulness. You should soon be making adjustment in home area which is beneficial. You often inspire others to great feats. Key now is to build greater self-confidence. If you do, the sky is limit.

How About Those Patriots

BALTIMORE (AP) — Jim Plunkett's 88-yard touchdown pass to Randy Vataha, after New England stopped a late Baltimore bid, ensured a 21-17 victory for the Patriots Sunday which knocked the Colts out of first place in the American Football Conference East.

Despite the loss, which left Baltimore one-half game behind Miami, the Colts qualified for the playoffs with a 10-4 record and will play Cleveland's Central Division winners in the post-season opener next Sunday.

Plunkett's second TD pass of the game to Vataha, with 2:22 remaining, came after the Patriots preserved their 14-10 lead by stopping the Colts on the 13.

The bomb to Vataha came on a third-and-11 play from the 12. The speedy wide receiver caught the ball over his shoulders at about the Baltimore 40 and ran the rest of the way untouched.

Baltimore scored with 26 seconds remaining on a 13-yard pass from Johnny Unitas to Eddie Hinton, and then the Colts failed to recover an onside kick.

Plunkett, who completed 10 of 17 passes for 170 yards, finished with 18 touchdown passes for the season, the second- best ever by a National Football League rookie.

Vataha caught a one-yard TD pass from Plunkett early in the second quarter and New England moved ahead 14-3 by half-time when cornerback John Outlaw picked off a Unitas pass with 1:08 to play and ran 60 yards for a touchdown.

Unitas, who was held to zero passing yardage in the first half, finished with 16 of 32 for 164 yards. His 31-yard pass to Hinton pulled Baltimore to within 14-10 in the third quarter, after Jim O'Brien booted a 12-yard field goal.

49ers Edge Lions; Gain Playoffs

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The San Francisco 49ers came from behind for the third time in the game on a desperation 10-yard touchdown run by quarterback John Brodie in the fourth period Sunday to beat a gambling Detroit Lions team 31-27 and claim the last remaining berth in the National Football League playoffs.

Brodie also threw three touchdown passes in the wild nationally-televised game in which he lead changed hands five times.

The 49ers finished the season with a 9-5 record to win their season-long struggle with the Los Angeles Rams for the National Football Conference West championship.

The Rams had pulled into a temporary tie for the lead with a 23-14 victory over Pittsburgh in a game that ended shortly before the opening kickoff here. The Rams finished 8-5-1.

Brodie's touchdown run came after the Lions, knocked out of playoff contention a week earlier, went for a first down on the first play of the fourth period on a fourth-down play at their own 40-yard line.

Quarterback Greg Landry, who needed a half-yard, was stopped as he tried to sneak through the middle.

The 49ers, trailing 27-24 at that point, went in for the game's final touchdown in nine plays. Brodie passed 10 yards to running back Larry Schreiber on a third-and-four play for one first down and an offside penalty against Detroit gave the 49ers another crucial first down at the 12.

On a third-and-eight play from the 10, Brodie faded back to pass, escaped two rushing Lions and scrambled up the middle for the winning touchdown with 10 minutes to play.

Detroit was unable to threaten again, and linebacker Frank Nunley intercepted a Landry pass at the Lions' 37 with 1:13 to play to ice the game.

BLOCKED!-Mike Pagliara blocks a shot on Manhattan's high scoring guard Rich Garner who scored a game high of 32 points Thursday. The hot shooting of the Redman's backcourt duo of Betancourt and Pagliara offset Garner's performance. (MDC photo by Dan Kamal)

Girl Gymnasts Eke Out Win

By KAREN ATRAN

It was a close meet Saturday, as the girls' J.V. gymnastic team pulled ahead in the last event to overtake the Montclaire YMCA, 82.35-76.9. Montclaire concluded the floor exercise event with a one point lead and maintained that position throughout vaulting and balance beam. Then our girls fooled Montclaire with a sensational performance on the uneven parallel bars, to overwhelm the YMCA by six points.

The floor ex. event was won by Diane Lorato of Monclaire, with a score of 7.95. Second place also went to Montclaire. However, UMass co-captain Marion Kulick placed third with a 7.65. The UMass girls grabbed first place on each of the other three events. The vaulting event was extremely close. Judy Cardozo won, with a score of 7.95 for her handspring vault. Although Montclaire placed both 2nd and 3rd, Heidi Armstrong from UMass achieved a close fourth place with a 7.5. Heidi also won the last two events with a 7.3 on the balance beam and a 6.25 on the bars. Although Montclaire placed both 2nd and 3rd on the beam, UMass took all the glory on the bars. Marion Kulick placed 2nd with a 6.15, and Thanne Poth earned a close 3rd with a 6.1.

The young Montclaire team gave UMass a pretty rough time with their amazing display of skill and talent. Assistant UMass coach, Miss Lynn Cross, comes from Montclaire and feels that the YMCA team has improved a lot in dance and composition. The Montclaire coach, Mr. Eli Snyder, said his girls range from ages 10 to 18. He said that the youngest girl competing is 10 years old and has had only one year of gymnastic experience. Some of his girls have worked with him for 4 or 5 years; and many of them have a dance background. Coach Snyder remarked, "There is a definite advantage to starting the girls at a young age, and for two basic reasons. First, as the girls approach their teen years, they tend to gain weight, and secondly, as they grow older, they tend to let social activity interfere with practice time."

UMass coach, Miss Virginia Evans, praised the girls for a job well done. She remarked, "Since the intersquad meet, the team has improved by about 20 points." However, she feels that there are still a few weak spots which should iron out as the season progresses.

Both the varsity and the J.V. squads will be practicing throughout the intersession to prepare for their forthcoming meets, which will be held 2nd semester. Both teams are quite skilled and should experience a most exciting season of competition.

Skins Lose

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mike Howell's 68-yard return with an intercepted pass set up a four-yard touchdown toss to give Cleveland a come-from-behind 20-13 victory over Washington Sunday in a final regular-season game of the National Football League.

Howell grabbed a Billy Kilmer pass deep in Cleveland territory, then threaded his way down the right sideline to the Washington 26.

Five plays later, quarterback Bill Nelson found tight end Chip Glass just inside the end zone to complete the four-yard TD aerial.

The Redskins made a concerted effort to salvage a tie, but Kilmer's fourth down pass to Charley Harraway was knocked down by linebacker John Garlington.

Cleveland scored first on Dock Cockroft's 3-yard field goal. After the Skins' Curt Knight knotted the score with an 18-yard boot, Nelson collaborated with tight end Gary Collins on a 17-yard scoring pass.

Washington took a 13-10 lead into the dressing room at intermission on Kilmer's 29-yard TD pass to Brown and Knight's 35-yard three pointer.

Dolphins Rout Packers

MIAMI (AP) — Playoff-bound Miami exploded for three touchdowns in five minutes Sunday and smashed the Green Bay Packers 27-6 in a National Football League game played before a record Dolphin crowd of 76,812.

Miami, finishing the season 10-3-1, made one final stab at catching world champion Baltimore in the Eastern Division of the American Conference.

The Colts, 10-3, needed a victory over New England to tuck away the title although both Miami and Baltimore clinched playoff spots last weekend.

Not even the return of Bart Starr as Green Bay's starting quarterback was able to ignite the Packer offense.

Miami crunched 84 yards to snap a 6-6 battle of placekickers, taking a 13-6 lead at 2:33 of the third quarter on Jim Kiick's one-yard smash.

Green Bay's Donny Anderson fumbled on the next offensive play after being clobbered by Dolphin end Jim Riley and Miami's Bob Matheson recovered at the Packer 25.

Three plays later Larry Sconka, who became the first Dolphin ever to rush for 1,000 yards in a season, slammed over from the 1 to make it 20-6.

The Packers finished Coach Dan Devine's first season in the pros with a record of 4-8-2.

Giants Bombed

NEW YORK (AP) — Philadelphia's Pete Liske fired three touchdown passes and Tom Dempsey booted field goals of 37 and 50 yards to power the Eagles to a 41-28 victory over the New York Giants Sunday in the National Football League finale for both teams.

The victory for the third-place Eagles, their sixth in the last nine games, gave them a regular season record of 6-7-1, their best since 1967, the last time they finished out of the cellar. The Giants wound up at 4-10, their worst mark since 1966, to end the season last in the National Conference's East Division.

Liske tossed scoring passes of three yards to Steve Zabel, 22 to Ben Hawkins and 63 to Harold Jackson.

It was the Eagles' defense, however, that opened the scoring in the first quarter as cornerback Al Nelson picked off a Randy Johnson pass and ran it 19 yards for a touchdown.

Johnson guided New York 72 yards in 13 plays on the ensuing kickoff with Rocky Thompson slamming over from one yard out to tie the score.

Then, in the second quarter, Liske went to work, directing Philadelphia 54 yards before hitting Zabel for the go- ahead touchdown.

Seven minutes later the Eagles made it 21-7 with Liske again connecting with Hawkins.

The Giants cut the margin to one touchdown, but Dempsey's 37-yard field goal gave the Eagles a 24-14 halftime lead.

Then they broke it open in the third period as Lee Bouggess scored on a two-yard spurt, Jackson hauled in Liske's 63-yard bomb and Dempsey added his 50-yarder.

Rams Beat Steelers; All For Naught

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Los Angeles Rams scored the first three times they had the ball, then held on to defeat the Pittsburgh Steelers 23-14 Sunday, keeping alive the Rams' hopes for the West Division title in the National Football Conference.

Los Angeles' chances of winning the title depended on the San Francisco-Detroit game later in the day. The Rams, a half game back of San Francisco, needed a 49er loss or tie to win the title.

Two field goals by Dave Ray and a 20-yard touchdown pass from Roman Gabriel to Jack Snow gave the Rams a 13-10 first quarter lead.

Ray added another field goal in the second quarter after the Steelers scored their first touchdown.

The Steelers, 6-8, got within striking distance when quarterback Terry Bradshaw led them on an 87-yard touchdown drive in the second half, hitting Ron Shanklin with a three-yard scoring pass. But the Rams, 8-5-1, helped by a broken pass play completion to Larry Smith, scored again as the clock ran out on the third period.

The Steelers first three scores were field goals of 15 and 10 yards by Ray and a touchdown on a pass to snow from Gabriel.

Svare Named Head Coach

HOUSTON (AP) — Interim head coach Harland Svare was named head coach of the San Diego Chargers Sunday following their 49-33 loss to the Houston Oilers in the season's finale for the two teams.

Svare, who has also been serving as Charger general manager, replaced Sid Gillman during the 1971 season.

A San Diego spokesman said further announcements would be made in San Diego Monday, adding that Svare would not continue as general manager.

One Bucket; One Goal--Two Losses

Hoopsters Upset Bid Fails At Harvard

By EARLE BARROLL

CAMBRIDGE--Many things can be said about the super game that has a special niche for itself from the rest. And Saturday night after Harvard had snapped the UMass winning streak at six, 80-78, Jack Leaman and Tom McLaughlin had this to say:

"We didn't lose, they beat us."...McLaughlin.

"They may have four high school all-Americans on Harvard, but there wasn't much difference between the red and white teams tonight."...Leaman.

This in itself tells the story of perhaps the finest college basketball game that will be played this season in the Boston area and possibly in New England. It was a classic confrontation between David and Goliath, the prince of Boston against the pride of the "Aggies", and a "Sports Illustrated" favorite versus a team not able to make the pre-season top 100 in "Basketball Weekly".

And when the final buzzer sounded the super-giants had all they could handle for an evening from a bunch of on-paper-mismatches from Amherst.

The Redmen went right at the Crimson and took the initiative to force the night's proceedings in the dinky Harvard athletic complex which held some 1800 people, 1200 or so from UMass. They put on a total team effort that had one Boston writer in raves throughout the game.

"We couldn't match them man for man," said Leaman, "but it was a great team effort and I'm very proud of them. We were just a little too small to win tonight."

What the final score does not indicate is how close this two-point loss came from being a 30-point loss. With six minutes to play the Redmen were down by ten points, 68-58, and seemingly falling into an endless rut of mistakes and overpowering Crimson play. (Harvard was on a 15-4 spree.)

Al Skinner had fouled out three minutes earlier, Chris Coffin followed him to the bench with five minutes to go in the game. The two big UMass rebounders were gone and against the Harvard front court of super-James Brown (6'7), Tony Jenkins (6'8) and Floyd Lewis (6'7) this was a bad situation.

But the Redmen went into a one-three-one trap press that had produced a ten-point spree in the first half and it likewise did the trick at this juncture as UMass came roaring back to take the lead at 74-73 on two John Betancourt free throws with two minutes left.

Harvard came back on a Brown hoop, Betancourt made two more free throws and Brown did his thing for another hoop and the Crimson went back in front by one. But the UMass J.B. went one better and scored again on a jumper from the corner (he was being mauled at the time) and the Redmen had the lead again.

With a half-minute to play, Jenkins took a jumper from the corner, a shot UMass wanted him to take, and he stuck it in the hole. The Redmen came right back, Betancourt missed a jumper with seven seconds to go, Lewis was fouled, he made one of two and Rick Pitino, who did a great relief job, got the rebound and UMass called time.

On the ensuing pass in, with five seconds left, Tom Austin hit McLaughlin who took a 30-footer which hit the rim, bounced off the backboard and with the crowd in a state of pandamonia it just rolled to the side of the basket and off.

And this is why McLaughlin and later Leaman said the Crimson beat them, they did not lose. Leaman himself said it was a down the stretch."

He also emphasized the fan support at the game which sounded like Curry Hicks Cage. "There had to be almost the entire gym full of UMass fans, they were just super."

The first half ended in a 38-38 deadlock, but the opening minutes were all Harvard as James Brown and company hooked up on a couple of "feed Brown with the lofty passes that couldn't be reached by the Redmen" that went for easy hoops. (He could really leap...like to the rafters.)

At 7-2 in favor of the Crimson, the Redmen went to work and at two different points had six and seven-point leads. On both occasions, Harvard called time and their top scorer this season, Jim Fitzsimmons went on scoring binges to bring them back. This was his only major outbursts as Betancourt and Mike Pagliara took him out of the game the rest of the way.

McLaughlin was outstanding in the first half with 16 points and along with Coffin and Skinner, went right at the big Crimson skyscrapers. On two notable plays, Skinner went under the basket under Brown and Jenkins and put the ball in the hoop. No sooner had the crowd quieted down when McLaughlin did it again to Brown who along with Jenkins had fits with Mac in the first half. There was to be no intimidation in this game.

Next year these two will go at it again....At Amherst.

credit to his players that they hung in and came back when they were on the verge of getting bombed out of the gym.

"Tom McLaughlin said to me a couple of games ago that nobody thinks about losing, we just think about how we're going to win the game," Leaman said.

"Our kids executed as well as they ever had," he added, "and they had to stay in the game. Harvard played well and this was a very, very good New England basketball game. Give Harvard credit, they made the three baskets

Skaters Edged, 5-4

By BILL BALLOU

Summer ends. Vacations end. Love affairs end. And winning streaks end.

The latter was the case Friday night at New Haven as Yale's Bulldogs stopped the UMass hockey team's winning streak at six games. The match was the first for the Redmen against a Division I club and UMass blew too many scoring chances while Sophomore goalie Steve Fernow was playing incredible hockey for the Bulldogs with the result being a 5-4 loss pinned on the Redmen.

Fernow was the story as far as this one was concerned. The Snyder, New York native was simply phenomenal in the Yale goal as he turned back 28 UMass shots, most of them on the tough side. His save off of Chico Shea midway through the first period would have resulted in larceny charges in any other city beside New Haven. He also robbed Pat Keenan on numerous occasions and was able to "hold" the Junior scoring sensation to just one goal.

The game was the type that fills statistics sheets, as a total of nine goals were scored and the two clubs combined to spend 26 minutes in the penalty box, with 13 minors being called.

If there was one spot in the game that UMass had Yale on the ropes it was in the first period. They outshot the Elis by 14 to 5 but were only able to beat them once, that one coming on a great individual effort by Pat Keenan.

This one goal in 14 shots was answered by 2 goals in 5 shots. The Bulldogs got on the board quickly as little Bob Kane finished off a three on one break by slamming a 10-footer past UMass goalie B. J. Flaherty. Five minutes later, Keenan tied it with his 12th of the season. At 11:50 Yale's Larry Bisaro went off for hooking. Toward the tail end of the UMass power play Fernow made THE SAVE off Shea and just a few seconds later Greg Rivet of the Bulldogs found himself alone in front of Flaherty with the puck and had no trouble in beating the senior goaltender. The effect of THE SAVE was to turn an almost certain 2-1 UMass lead into an actual 2-1 lead for Yale. If there was a single turning point in the game, this was it. The Redmen continued to fire at Fernow but he held them off and the period ended at 2-1.

The second period was enough to give the two goal judges tired fingers and the statistician writing cramps. Five goals were scored, three by Yale and two by the Redmen. Considering that the teams combined for only 15 shots on goal, the skaters were finding the net with uncanny accuracy. Dan Reidy tied the game up at 2-2 when he tipped in a bullet off the stick of Bob Shilalie at the 00:47 mark, but the next eight minutes were to see the Redmen donate two "gift" goals to Yale and put themselves in a hole they could never get out of. At 2:02, with the Bulldogs on the power play, Captain Roger Demment intercepted an errant clearing pass by Don Riley and quickly fired a close-in shot by Flaherty. Then at the 7:45 mark, P.J. Flaherty made a couple of good saves in succession off the line of Rivet-Demment-and Greg Luck, but no one was covering Rivet on the third rebound with the result being Rivet's second of the night and a 4-2 Yale lead. Three minutes later Redmen defenseman Don Lowe made it 4-3 on a 40-footer, but with just seven seconds left in the period Dan Hurtubise tipped in what proved to be the winning goal, getting assists from Steve Whalen and D'Arcy Ryan.

The defense tightened in the final stanza and it wasn't until 17:47 that anyone could turn the red light on. That one was Don Riley and he made it 5-4 on a power play goal. Yale then did a great job of keeping UMass bottled up in its own end for the remainder of the game, and even with goaltender Flaherty pulled in favor of a sixth skater the Redmen could not tie it.

Yale outskated the Redmen, but by no means was UMass outclassed. Some phenomenal goaltending by Fernow and some costly defensive mistakes resulted in the winning streak ending. However, the loss does no damage to UMass playoff aspirations, as Yale is a Division I club and games with that division just don't count.

PUCK PICKINGS--After Dan Reidy's tip-in of a vicious Bob Shilalie shot, someone in the press box remarked, "With his eyes, I don't know how he ever saw it". Keenan continued his fantastic scoring pace with a goal and three assists. He now has scored ten goals in his last four games. The UMass hockey cheerleaders were at the game as usual and were a real "joy" to behold. Another UMass rooter in the audience was ex-chancellor Oswald Tippo.

Joe Willie Leads Jets

NEW YORK (AP) — Joe Namath passed for two touchdowns, one a 74-yarder to Don Maynard, and reserve Clifford McClain raced 63 yards for a touchdown as the New York Jets overwhelmed Cincinnati 35-21 in a National Football League regular season finale Sunday.

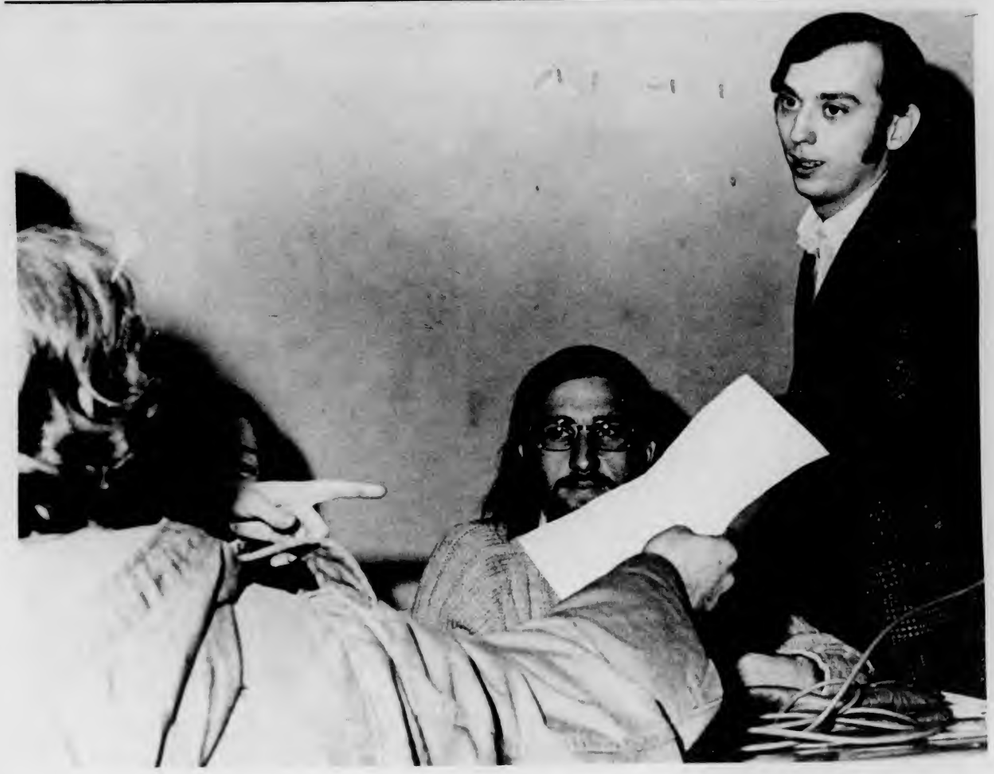
Namath also connected with Rich Caster on an 11-yarder and Emerson Boozer scored twice on runs of one and seven yards as the Jets finished with a 6-8 record in the American Conference East.

The pass to Maynard and the run by McClain electrified a crowd of 63,151 sitting in chilly 29-degree weather and witnessing the most points scored by the Jets this season.

Maynard, who last week became only the second player in history to reach the 600-mark in receptions, scored midway in the second period when he broke away from Lamar Parrish, pulled in Namath's pass on the Cincinnati 40 and sped the rest of the way untouched.

It was the longest offensive play by the Jets since the 1968 season.

Namath Poses



BETTER THAN NOTHING--With Joe Willie Namath improving so steadily since his return to the Jets' lineup, including yesterday's big game over the Bengals, the Collegian sports department felt it should send a photographer to New York to get a candid photo. Joe wasn't around, so this lifelike toy from Macy's will have to suffice. (Photo by Dan Kamal)

Parking Fines To Be Collected

By MDC STAFF

As of last night, students will now be required to pay all back parking tickets or face action in Northampton District Court. The ruling, laid down by the General Court, affects over 30,000 dollars in back parking tickets owed by UMass students.

Jerry Moriarty in presenting the ruling supported the present parking system, calling it "Generally fair."

The suit to have the back tickets paid was entered by John McEleney. McEleney felt that he was being deprived of a source of financial assistance since all traffic ticket money is returned to the University by the courts for use as a scholarship fund.

The Student Senate asked in a writ that the suit be dismissed on the grounds that the parking system was "patently unfair." Upon hearing of the General Court's decision to collect fines, and their support of the present parking system, Senate President Lee Sandwen termed the move, "Bad, very bad."

The session was attended by a small group composed of the interested parties, the Senate hierarchy and a number of Collegian reporters and photographers. Also present were the participants.

Under the decision, Henry Bouffard, the student attorney general, would coordinate a group to assist in the collection of $31,000 in fines. Bouffard said the procedure involved would be the same as the one used to collect $99,000 in non-student fines. Bouffard has said earlier that if the decision did rule in favor of collecting student fines, he would then initiate action in the collection of $4,000 in faculty fines.

Bouffard in outlining the plans for collecting the fines said letters would be sent to all offenders asking them either to pay or to contest the fine within 30 days. The offender may also make arrangements to pay the fine within the 30-day period.

If the offender refuses to follow these recommendations within the stated period, he will be issued a summons from the Northampton District Court. Bouffard said the letters will not be sent out until after Christmas in order that "no undue burden" be placed on the offenders.

Section E-3 of the Student Handbook states, "Charges and fines owed to the courts for violation of the University's motor vehicle regulations are viewed as charges owed to the University since these funds are returned to the University by the courts for the scholarship fund. These charges, if unpaid may result in denial of permission to register as a student for a succeeding semester, or for permission to register a motor vehicle, or both.

Randy Dahl staff assistant to the Dean of Students said, "Holding up registration is a possibility under limited circumstances." He said it will not be taken under mass action.

Dahl said the holding up of registration might be used against people who are reluctant or non-willing to pay traffic fines in the area of $50. He called the $50 an arbitrary sum and said it might be lower but doubted if it would be higher.

"The holding up of registration would take place as a last recourse," said Dahl. "The people involved would be given a fair amount of forewarning."

The Ethics of Rapping

By JOEL SOLKOFF

I seem to do fashionable things and then remember the ethic and the fashion at embarrassingly unfashionable times. I will swallow my pride and remember (oh God, no, I didn't) walking up to a row of official paratroopers (landed from Mars wearing gas masks and carrying weird grenade-launchers) and yelling at them, "We love you" shortly before they decided not to return the sentiment and make me cry. The year was late 1967 and the location was halfway between the Pentagon and one of its parking lots. The ethic I was following later became known as rapping.

"Rapping" as a political word has a very specific definition. A rapper talks to a rappee until the latter sees the light and joins the Movement.

When I lived in the Columbia dorms and later in an apartment on West 108th Street, I was on the receiving end of many such conversations by P.L. people (a rather friendly, earnest bunch of talkers) who always reminded me of my rabbi in confirmation class. (My rabbi was interested in what I had to say inasmuch as he could use it to persuade me to remain a virgin until he married me to the Jewish woman I wanted to fuck.)

Shortly after Columbia blew in late 1968, I became a victim of the ethic, and the Strike Committee sent me out to Nebraska, I attended a convention of organizers in Iowa City which sought to propagate the ethic. The idea was to ingratiate yourself with people in the street, people in factories, people in bars, et al. until they liked you so much and trusted you so well that they would be prepared to listen and blindly accept the Movement "we" had to offer.

Later demonstrations encouraged such evangelical thinking. At Columbia, Acting President Cordier walked out of his office in Low Library to attend a demonstration at South Field, thus proving what an amiable fellow he was. The intent of the rabidly radical hecklers was to prove to Cordier that he had indeed killed Lumumba, that he was a murderer, an imperialist, and a fink.

At Fort Dix, some girls tried to convince the soldiers bouncing them from their anti-war rally that they really shouldn't be doing that.

The illogical extreme of the argument, or the inability to communicate verbally.

A pro-Panther rally in front of 100 Centre Street had white radicals trying to argue a discovered undercover policeman out of his pig sympathies. The McCarthy people used the same motivation in New Hampshire, Indiana, Oregon and so on, telling the natives which side the truth stood on.

The ethic of talking to people is a good one, but more often than not the kid at the doorbell or at the rally, who raps and doesn't listen, is forcing the rappee into a state of white heat. Nobody likes being talked down to. Even people who are wrong.

Lately, television, as could be expected, has institutionalized the rap in an endless series of mercials. Earnest men in their mid-30s, dressed in well-tailored suits, come out at you in heavy close-ups, saying : If you are serious about pain take two of these. If you are serious about getting good mileage and ending pollution, you must buy our gas. If you are serious about saving money on food, you have no choice but to buy in our supermarket.

Two things have been making me re-consider this ethic of communication. 1. Looking for a job. 2. Reading that 1950s book (I kid you not) Vance Packard's "The Status Seekers." Both experiences have forced me to admit that almost everyone I've talked to in the past is young, white, Jewish, is pissed-off at God, has been busted or is repentant for not having been, takes dope, goes to college or has finished college or has dropped out of college or is so sensitive that the individual balked early and never went, has been against Vietnam since day one, loves blacks, wants to do something meaningful with his or her life, follows the divine command "Thou must cheat the telephone company," likes to fuck frequently and indiscriminately, thinks Johnson murdered Kennedy, and believes that Nixon eats Vietnamese babies for breakfast. In short everyone I've talked to thinks, looks, tastes, and smells exactly like I do. We're all in the same class, and while I've occasionally strayed by trying to teach Uncle Louie how evil the Middle Class are, I've been a damn snob.

Since I've been looking for a job I've met the following people and I'm here to report that in fact they are numan.:

A short, round advertising director for a Wall Street financial firm. The gentleman looks like Pickwick, has Dickensian cartoons on his walls, and produced an incredibly beautiful speech about how layers will be the down fall of America because they have rigged things in such a way that every time you turn around you have to consult one.

An executive in a Bronx furniture store who has on his wall: two photographs inscribed to him by President Johnson, one inscribed photograph by President Kennedy, one framed photo and one framed portrait of Abraham Lincoln, one framed New York Times from the day he was born, one framed New York Times from the day the men first walked on the moon, one unframed, matted Ben Shahn Sacco-Vanzetti sketch quoting Vanzetti's last statement: "If it had not been for this thing I might have lived out my life talking at street corners to scorning men..." The furniture executive was a very complex man.

An editor at Newsweek who wished he had bummed around the country when he was young and who earnestly was torn among professional standards, hard times, and the necessity to hire blacks and women researchers. (Shut up).

I am slowly beginning to see and listen as well as talk, and I am learning that there are people who are different from me, who hold different opinions, and who though wrong-deserve a hearing. I suppose I am suggesting getting together and reasoning (although I wish there were a better way of saying that without those pre-1968 bad vibes). I am saying that listening is a political weapon simply because a polite revolutionary is a delight and a joy. But remember the words of Emily Post on the subject: "It must, of course, be remembered that a sympathetic listerner really listens. To hold a fixed expression of sympathy and let your mind wander elsewhere won't do at all."

Bhutto Becomes President Of West Pakistan

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

President Agha Mohammed Yahya Khan resigned today, and Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, West Pakistan's most powerful political leader, succeeded him as president and chief martial law administrator.

Yahya Khan resigned because of his army's defeat in the two-week war with India. His resignation ended 13 years of military rule in Pakistan, but the retention of martial law indicated that the army would continue to play a key role.

Bhutto was sworn in shortly after he returned from the United States, where he had argued Pakistan's case gainst India at the United Nations and conferred with President Nixon on Saturday. U.S. Ambassador Joseph S. Farland was in the large crowd that met him at the airport in Islamabad.

Bhutto said Sunday it was premature to speak of the future of Sheik Mujibur Rahman, the political leader of Pakistan's now independent eastern province of Bangla Desh, who is a prisoner of the Pakistani government.

He told newsmen in Rome that President Nixon, at their meeting in Washington Saturday, had reaffirmed U.S. support for the principle of Pakistan's sovereignty and unity.

"Pakistan is one single thing," Bhutto said. "The nation's unity must be safeguarded. India has forcefully occupied Pakistani territories and a lasting peace cannot be achieved if New Delhi fails to give back what it conquered with its tanks. We do not want to be involved in a war every five or ten years."

Bhutto's leftist Pakistan People's party is the largest in the National Assembly, with 82 of the 138 seats allotted to West Pakistan. Sheik Mujib's Awami League won 167 seats, all in East Pakistan, and that gave it a majority in the assembly, but Yahya Khan canceled most of the Awami victories when he ordered his army to crush the league last March.

Yahya Khan put Mujib on trial before a military court on charges of treason; sources in Rawalpindi said the trial has ended, but there was no word of a verdict. They added that Sheik Mujib had sought a meeting with Yahya after the two-week war started, but the president refused to see him.

After Indian forces invaded East Pakistan on Dec. 4, Yahya Khan named a minor East Pakistani political leader, Nurul Amin, prime minister with Bhutto as deputy prime minister and foreign minister.

Since the army's surrender in East Pakistan last Thursday and Yahya's proclamation of a cease-fire on Friday, there have been demonstrations throughout West Pakistan against his conduct of the war.

Mohammed Asghar Khan, the air force chief when Yahya took over in March 1969, told a news conference Sunday that Yahya should be put on trial for conducting the war in a manner "which humiliated the army." He called on the present air force chief not to give the president a plant to escape in.

Asghar later was beaten up at an anti-Yahya rally at which hecklers accused him of helping lose East Pakistan.

In Lahore, another retired air force chief, Noor Khan, led an anti-Yahya protest march. Several thousand persons took part in another march shouting that Yahya should "quit or be shot."

Diplomats in Rawalpindi said Pakistan and India will exchange more than 200 diplomats trapped by the two-week war. Two Swiss jet transports will carry out simultaneous exchanges starting from Bombay, the informants said. Pakistan broke relations with India Dec. 6 after New Delhi recognized Bangla Desh.

Nixon Chafed For News Atrophy

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Nixon administration has come under new attack from both sides of Congress for its action last March eliminating news briefings on unemployment and cost-of-living figures.

A House subcommittee on government information and Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., chairman of the Joint Economics Committee, have charged the administration with using theoretically objective and routine announcements of government statistics for the best possible political advantage.

The subcommittee, headed by Rep. William S. Moorhead, D-Pa., released a report Sunday night criticizing Labor Secretary James D. Hodgson for ending last March the 18-year-old practice of news briefings in connection with the release of the Bureau of Labor Statistics unemployment and cost-of-living figures. Moorhead's panel urged Hodgson to reinstate the briefings, calling them important to the understanding of economic data by newsmen, businessmen, investors, and all levels of government.

Proxmire, in a statement released this morning, was critical of several areas of the administration but zeroed in on the Labor Department, too.

"It is time to stop this blatant politicizing of the economic indicators," Proxmire said. He also recommended resumption of the news briefings.

The Winner

"I Would Like To Thank..."

Sunday night in the lobby of Wheeler House, the annual S.C.R.E.W. award was presented to this year's winner-- (or loser--depending on whether the recipient has a sense of humor. In this case, judging from the picture, it is evident that the recipient is a 'loser'. As a matter of fact, he is shown here refusing to accept the award at all.) Trying to present the trophy is Charlie Mavrelion (left) a member of this year's pledge class of Alpha Phi Omega fraternity. The S.C.R.E.W. contest was the project of the pledge class--designed to raise funds for a foster child. Refusing the award is this year's 'loser', Rich Perkins (right)--a PhD candidate in the Department of Sociology. Rich's "popularity"--the major factor in his "victory"--evidently came from his years of assistantship to the late great G. Putnam Barber, former instructor of Sociology 101. Observing the ceremony was Sam Galzerano who, like any typical Umie, was so awestruck by the importance of the occasion that he appears to be overcome by emotional reaction.

Grass Roots Christianity

Members of the Black community and international students are invited to attend a special weekend conference to be held early next semester-Friday evening January 28th through Sunday noon, January 30, 1972-at Grotonwood Conference Center in Groton, Mass. The main emphasis of the conference will be: the relevance of the Jesus Christ of the Bible to the disfranchised minorities and to pressing social issues like racism.

The principal speakers for the weekend will be William Pannell Black speaker and author, and James Weston, former Black Panther leader from Berkeley, Calif. Discussions will be led by Black students who have organized this weekend in order to aid people in their awareness of the radical nature of the Gospel of Jesus Christ and its relevance to all races and conditions.

Bill Pannell, who has written a book entitled MY FRIEND THE ENEMY, a piercing commentary on racism in White churches, is director of the Campus Ministry of Tom Skinner Associates. This movement on Black college campuses. For example, at Hampton Institute in Virginia, there are now more than 15 cell groups active. This movement began as Mr. Pannell spent a week answering questions on the relevancy of Christ in sociology, psychology, and history classes.

In other meetings in dorms and at supper meetings, presentations were followed by dialogue sessions. Similar activities will be conducted in the Black community at UMass during the two days before the conference.

James Weston was active in the Black Panther Party until two years ago, when he committed himself to Christ. In speaking at a similar conference in California, he said, "I have a tremendous burden upon my heart to minister the gospel of Jesus Christ to my Black brothers and sisters...because I've recognized that Christ has seldom ever truly been preached to them. Most Blacks have been exposed to distorted Christianity, they have not been exposed to Jesus of the Bible." Mr. Weston is now appearing on college campuses throughout the country.

Also featured will be "The Apostles," a mod Gospel-soul group from Brooklyn, New York City.

International students are being invited to participate in the weekend because the issues to be wrestled with there are of special interest to students from third world nations. The conference, being sponsored by Campus Crusade for Christ, will bring together students from the Five-College-Area, Springfield, Boston and other New England Colleges.

The gathering will be held after two-and-a-half days of appearances by Pannell and Weston on campus. Tentatively scheduled are a meeting with the Black community at The New Africa House (Mills) on Wednesday evening, January 26th and a campus-wide program on Thursday evening January 27th in the Campus Center.

The cost for the weekend, including room, food and registration, is $15.00. Transportation will be arranged through a car-pool. Complementary scholarships will be made available to those interested who could not otherwise afford to go.

Watch for more information during registration.

Thoreau Smoked Out

A Box Alarm was reported by the Amherst Fire Department yesterday afternoon at Thoreau House in Southwest where a wastebasket fire was extinguished on the third floor. Smoke ejectors were used to clear the corridors of the accumulated smoke. The Fire Department was called to Gorman House minutes later where the fire was extinguished by a male student.

Help Them To Spend Your Money

By BOB CALLAHAN

This year the Senior Committee of the Class of 1972 is seeking class participation in the spending of this year's funds. Unlike other years, the Committee under the direction of President Margie Davis, wants to let the members of the class decide what they want to do with the funds which this year total approximately $12,000.

According to Miss Davis, members of the Class of 1972 will be polled to determine how they want their money spent. "We would rather have everybody have a chance to decide what to do with the funds," Miss Davis said in a recent Collegian interview.

In the past, the money has been used to hold an annual Senior Day and to purchase a class gift, but this year various alternatives are being studied, such as giving the money to charity or to form a scholarship fund.

The committee had planned on including a ballot for Seniors to fill out which was to have been included with the registration packets at Registration Day but it appears that this will not be possible. The committee had sent a letter to Registrar Jones requesting this means of polling the members of the Senior Class. So far they haven't received any formal notice from the Registrar's office as to whether this can be done.

It is now planned to set up a table in the Campus Center on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of Registration week according to Miss Davis and it is hoped that Seniors will take this opportunity to vote on their choice of spending the money which amounts to $4. per Senior.

The results of this poll will be determined at the Senior Committee meeting on January 30.

The Senior Committee still needs members. There are presently 45 members and Miss Davis reports that any interested Seniors are invited to join.

Abortion Information

A woman must go through several steps when she is pregnant and decides to have an abortion. First, she should confirm her pregnancy with a doctor and tests. Then she must find out where she can have the abortion. Third, she must make arrangements and follow instructions about having the abortion done.

A woman may suspect that she is pregnant when her period is overdue. At this time she should arrange to see a doctor to determine if she is pregnant. A student at UMass should wait two weeks after her period was due before seeing an Infirmary doctor. Before that length of time, the test may not be valid.

For the test at the Infirmary, a first morning specimen is needed. The laboratory must get the specimen before 10 a.m. in order to run the tests. The results are available to the patient the following day. She will then see a doctor who tells her the results and advises her.

If the test is positive for pregnancy, the coed must decide what to do. An Infirmary doctor can refer her to the Clergy Consultation Service. The Valley Women's Center (413-586-2011) may be consulted by students and non-students alike. Both places help and advise women with problem pregnancies.

When an abortion is desired, the patient is given the telephone number and address of a reliable clinic in New York. The woman must call the clinic herself to make an appointment. The time and date of the abortion are arranged when she calls. Information and instructions may be given to the woman about costs, preparation, and what to bring.

After arranging for the abortion and arriving at the clinic, the patient answers questions and tests are taken. If everything is in order, the woman's pregnancy is terminated.

Court Taxes Discriminatory Schools

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Supreme Court Monday upheld a ban on tax-exempt status for private white academies established to duck court-ordered integration of public schools.

The court upheld a ruling issued by the U.S. District Court here last June 30 in response to complaints by Negro public school pupils and their parents in Mississippi.

In another important action the court ruled that the government must show that a weapon has crossed a state line in order to convict a felon accused under the federal gun-control law.

A Private School Cafeteria in Virginia.

The government argued that no one convicted of a serious crime may ever legally possess a gun. While the court did not rule directly on this question, its reading of the government's burden in prosecuting such cases could prove significant in future enforcement of any gun controls.

The court entered an order giving the federal government some $1 billion in impounded proceeds from oil-drilling leases in the Guld of Mexico. Another $700 million remains to be disposed of in the continuing dispute over where Louisiana domain ends and federal jurisdiction begins on submerged lands in the Gulf.

In the school case, the Negro plaintiffs alleged that tax-exempt status on the mushrooming private schools aided white efforts to skirt integration orders. They claimed also that private schools benefiting from the exemptions were draining away teachers as well as white students from the public schools.

The government already had reversed its earlier policy and announced that exemptions would be cut off to schools that discriminate. But a district court ruling, upheld Monday, ordered the government to tighten the standards by which it determines whether a school discriminates.

In the gun case the court decided by 5 to 2, with Chief Justice Warren E. Burger and Justice Harry A. Blackman dissenting, to take a narrow interpretation of a key provision in the 1968 gun-control law, which the court said is not clear.

Money from the offshore oil leases has been impounded in escrow fund since 1956 pending a final settlement of the dispute.

The government had asked that $1 billion from the fund be released to the United States because Louisiana had acknowledged that it had no claim to the land which generated the money, under terms of previous court decisions.

World Realigns Currency In Line With U.S.

LONDON (AP)-World governments realigned their currencies with the devalued American dollar Monday in readiness for a test of monetary stability when foreign exchanges reopen Tuesday.

Widespread confusion was evident among money dealers, however, on how the system of new rates will work.

One London dealer said it would take a week or more to bring order out of confusion. In other financial centers where bank-to-bank dealings continued although foreign exchanges were closed, business was minor and hesitant.

Most exchanges are due to reopen Tuesday for the acid test of the weekend decision to cut the value of the U.S. dollar by raising the price of gold 8.57 per cent, from $35 to $38 an ounce.

The decision was generally welcomed because it ended four months of uncertainty that followed President Nixon's Aug. 15 announcement of drastic measures to protect the American economy.

A realignment of currency values was decided Saturday by finance ministers of the Group of Ten richest non-Communist nations, meeting in Washington.

Nixon, upon arriving in Bermuda Monday for talks with British Prime Minister Edward Heath, announced that he had just signed a proclamation lifting the unpopular 10 per cent surcharge clamped on imports last August. The move was widely hailed in foreign capitals.

Governments around the world announced these new values for their currencies:

London-The pound's new parity was set for at $2.6057. This made the dollar worth 38.3 British pence, compared to the old parity of 41.6 pence.

Frankfurt-The value of the dollar was set at 3.223 marks, an increase in the mark's dollar value from the old parity of 3.66 marks.

Tokyo-The yen's value was set at 308 to the dollar, up from the old 360-yen parity.

Paris-The new parity was 5.1157 francs to the dollar, up from the old parity of 5.55419 francs.

Bern-The Swiss government set the dollar parity at 3.84 Swiss francs, a hike in the franc's value from the 4.08-franc parity set last May when the Swiss money was revalued upward.

Moscow-The Soviet foreign trade bank began charging an 8 per cent commission on the dollar, putting into effect a de facto devaluation of the dollar. Similar changes in the dollar value of other East European currencies were announced or expected.

New Delhi-The Indian government increased the value of its rupee by 3 per cent, making the dollar worth 7.279 rupees compared with the previous rate of 7.50 rupees. With foreign exchanges closed, tourists generally were getting less money for their dollars from tourist agencies and hotels. Limits on the amounts accepted for exchange were imposed in some countries.

In Brief...

S.Viet Air Force Group

SAIGON (AP)-The South Vietnamese air force has grown tenfold in the past decade, to the world's eighth largest and is expanding operations into Laos and Cambodia.

But despite the phenomenal expansion from fewer than 100 planes to more than 900, it is seriously handicapped by limited tactical and strategic capabilities.

Thus, with the speed, the range, the punch and the concentration of firepower for saturation strikes, the U.S. Air Force for an indefinite period will continue to have the primary mission of strategic bombing strikes on enemy supply routes and air defense of Indochina.

10% Surcharge A Smash

WASHINGTON (AP)-The 10 per cent import surcharge lasted only four months, but it proved to be one of the most powerful and profitable economic weapons in U.S. history, officials said Monday.

Although universally disliked by foreign governments, the surtax was efficient as a moneymaker, pulling in revenue at more than $100 million a month. It netted the U.S. Treasury $430 million between Aug. 16 and Dec. 3, the last time an official reckoning was taken.

But beyond that, U.S. officials said, the surcharge was a crucial bargaining tool needed to convince American allies that it was time to realign their currencies.

Women Spurn Spud Fest

COLD SPRINGS, Idaho (ASA)-The Women's Liberation Caucus of the Penske Valley Potato Harvester's Association stormed out of the Association's annual Christmas fiesta to protest what they termed 'blatant sexism in the potato industry'.

The women, led by Mrs. Myrna Legume left the Sheraton-Hilton in Penske, county seat for Idaho's eighth largest county, and took up a vigil in a potato patch in a down town plaza, dedicated to the memory of 8 potato workers who perished in the Great Gopher Infestation of 1908. They say they will remain until their demands are met.

Troops Under Fire In Belfast

Troops came under fire on the M-1 outside Belfast and captured one of the gunmen, said to be on the British wanted list.

Four thousand troops massed in the Belfast area, but the explosions continued.

So accustomed are residents of Northern Ireland to the snap of bullets, the boom of bombs and the smell of smoke, that Christmas shoppers still thronged the streets, ignoring the violence.

Cops Pinch Swishy Prexy

TOLEDO, Ohio (ASA)-Police arrested the president of the student governing body of the Hardwick School of Engineering, and charged him with female impersonation and fraud.

Lorenzo Buzzoto, who turned 21 last week, was arrested as he stood on a street corner dressed in a white raincoat, silver wedgies, and a red wig.

According to police, "Mr. Buzzoto was actively engaged in a business that we in Toledo like to think has been eliminated from our fair city."

Meteor Hits Woman

Bogalusa, La. (ASA)-"It hurts every time I move my hips. I've got a black and blue mark that reaches from my stomach all the way to my thigh. I suppose I don't have to tell you what that means. Believe me, it hurts."

That's how Mrs. Hattie MacGregor describes how she felt yesterday, five hours after a 15-lb. meteorite plunged through the roof of her one room shanty as she was watching a soap opera on her television.

"I was just lying here minding my own business when all of a sudden Boom! this hunk of rock comes busting through the ceiling and whomps me. I jumped. You'd jump too if you got whomped by a piece of rock like that."

Neighbors heard her screams and rushed her to Parish Hospital in Bogalusa. Mrs. MacGregor's doctor, Dr. Willie Joe Wilson assured relatives and neighbors who had gathered at the hospital that Mrs. MacGregor was resting comfortably and would probably discharge in a few days.

Says Mrs. MacGregor of her ordeal, "This may put me out of commission for a few days, but at least I got on tv."

Mrs. MacGregor is a sprightly 97 and lives alone.

"The Price Of Dope Is Death"

NEW YORK (LNS)--For 17 months after he went underground in April, 1970, very little was heard from H. Rap Brown, former chairman of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) except for his place of honor on the FBI's expanded most-wanted list. There were a few messages printed in the SNCC paper or other black papers, to the effect that he was alive and well. Then on October 15, four black men were busted while they were trying to hold up Manhattan's Red Carpet Lounge, a dark little bar down some steps on 85th Street, in a predominantly black and Puerto Rican neighborhood. Shiny Cadillacs often line the bar's front curb and there is a rumo floating around that it is a drug drop for the kids at Brandeis High School across the street. A few hours after they were in custody, the cops claimed they had H. Rap Brown in their hands.

For quite a while the man in the Bellevue hospital prison bed, who was shot twice in the stomach, claimed he was "Roy Williams." It wasn't until over a month later that supporters of the man who was awaiting another operation to repair his gunshot wounds publicly announded that he was H. Rap Brown.

At the same press conference where these supporters identified Rap Brown, the formation of the H. Rap Brown Anti-Dope Movement was announced, Nov. 24. The Movement is sponsored by a coalition of groups represented by former Georgia representative Julian Bond; Fred Meely of the Youth Congress; Mrs. Rosa Hamilton of the New York City-wide Welfare Rights organization; Rev. Alfred Sharpton of the National Youth Movement, Mamu Amiri Baraka (Leroi Jones) of the Committee for a United Newark; and Popi Sharp of the Black Peoples' Unity Movement of Camden, N.J.

The movement plans to be a nationwide coordinating group whose "primary goal is the elimination of dope from the black community by waging an aggressive campaign against dope, dope pushers and dope suppliers.

Black communities have made many attempts to stop the flow of dope from reaching our stoops, our hallways and our schools. We have also tried to rid ourselves of those whose sole function is the destruction of our families by selling dope...

"There have been numerous incidents of mothers, fathers, friends and relatives who have taken it upon themselves to drive pushers and their so-called 'Legitimate' fronts such as bars, restaurants, candy and 'variety' stores, florist shops, laundries and cleaning establishments out of the black area. Because they have been alone in this struggle, the impact of their work has had a limited effect.

"We ask the aid and assistance of all sectors of the black community--students, street blocks, servicemen, garment workers, religious institutions, artists, anti-poverty organizations, housewives and radio and TV personnel to contact the H. Rap Brown Anti-Dope Movement, 346 W. 20th Street, New York, New York 10011."

When questioned by reporters, Bond (as acting spokesman for the group) said that the anti-dope movement "would not only have its own surveillance, but its own tribunal and its own punishment."

He said that the purpose of the Anti-Dope Movement was to "eliminate people dealing in dope." When questioned further, Bond said they would first use "moral persuasion" and if that didn't work, "more forceful deliberate means."

And the Red Carpet Lounge? "I'm not willing to say anything about the Red Carpet Lounge," said Bond dryly. "Or any candy store, lounge, bar, laundry or cleaning establishment. The black community knows which places are well-known drop-off places for dope."

Appalachian Health Care: To Die At The Doorstep

FLOYD COUNTY, Ky. (LNS) ——Floyd county is located in the heart of the once beautiful but now stripped and augered hills of Eastern Kentucky. Except for the county seat of Prestonburg with its population of 5,000 the majority of Floyd's 38,000 people live in settlements along the creeks that run between the hills. The emigration of young workers and able bodied middle aged workers to the cities has left behind an excessive proportion of the poor, sick, disabled and aged.

Coal, government and small businesses can't provide nearly enough jobs. More than 52% of Floyd's people are members of families that earn less than $3,000 a year. Two thirds of the county's housing is substandard. Many homes have neither hot running water nor inside toilets. Streams are polluted from sulfuric acid from the strip mines and schools and roads are inadequate where they exist at all.

With the poverty and isolation go the so-called "diseases of oppression." Children suffer from diarrhea, worms, malnutrition and even ulcers. Black lung and silicosis are common among the miners as is the "eastern Kentucky Syndrome"--a mental condition with psychosomatic symptoms developed by working men who are unable to find jobs to support their families.

Yet compared to most Appalachian counties, Floyd is relatively well off medically. There are three hospitals with 126 beds and from 15-20 doctors, mostly general practitioners.

In 1967 the OEO (Office of Economic Opportunity) established what was to be a model health program. Officially labelled "Research and Demonstration Project" it was commonly known as the Comprehensive Health Program (CHP). Its purpose was to provide good low-cost health care for the inhabitants of Floyd County.

From its beginning the program was controlled by the county's medical-political complex with no meaningful grassroots participation. For the first three years the program was run by the County Board of Health, made up of the county elite--a county judge, the mayor of Prestonburg, a surgeon, a dentist, a nurse (wife of a state representative), two physicians and the County Attorney. Dr. Russell Hall, the county Health Officer was made the Program Officer.

In 1970 the program was evaluated by the federal OEO and received a rating of "poor." As a result its budget was increased from $400,000 to $1,300,000. In addition the OEO agreed to help set up a new, more representative board, but the local medical establishment rigged the elections and was able to maintain control over the program.

The CHP picked up the tab for health care in Floyd County (read--it ensured that the doctors got paid for services rendered) and it provided free transportation when needed to doctors and hospitals. These free services were available only for county medical facilities. If a Floyd County resident lived on the county line and therefore found it easier to go to a doctor in another county, CHP did not cover the cost of treatment or transportation.

The program increased business for Floyd's doctors, hospitals and pharmacies. In four years OEO alone put over $4 million into Floyd's medical establishment. In 1969 $38,000 was paid by OEO to pharmacies, $171,000 to hospitals, $33,000 to clinics and $58,000 to doctors. Since several physicians are part owners of one hospital, at least one drug store, clinics and a nursing home, large sums of money were being concentrated in the hands of a few doctors.

Although the program was funded to hire poor people for all non-professional positions, 80 of the 100 positions went to the middle and upper income friends of Floyd's medical elite.

As for the recipients of the program: some doctors were seeing up to 100 patients a day. Waiting lines were long. Examinations were often extremely short, made sometimes without removing the patient's coat. And the diseases remained.

The people of Floyd County, had high hopes for the program when it began. But they soon saw that it was not serving their needs. People began to band together to demand good medical care at a reasonable cost. The most active group was the Eastern Kentucky Welfare Rights Organization (EKWRO). Eula Hall, chairwoman of the Health Committee of EKWRO voiced the sentiments of the area people--"when Comprehensive Health first came to Floyd County we thought we had something great. But it didn't take long to find out that we just had a taxi-cab service to shuffle people back and forth to local doctors."

EKWRO protested at first by writing to congressmen and to the federal OEO but got no results. They tried to elect a representative to the CHP board meetings but were cheated out of a seat--(county officials and local politicians called the election one day before it was held, giving no time to organize, make posters, etc.)

Later EKWRO tried to attend CHP board meetings. They were frequently shouted down or even denied entrance to the meetings. "When we go to a board meeting, they'll adjourn the meeting if they see too many consumers there," declared one EKWRO member.

EKWRO pickets marched through the county and demonstrated at the county court house to emphasize the control the politicians and doctors had over the program.

As a result the OEO told the local CHP board to clean up the program. The board refused to make the changes saying "unless we can run our own program and be satisfied with it, we'd rather have none."

OEO is now in the process of terminating the program. What funds are left are being used to keep the employees on the payroll rather than to pay for visits and treatment.

EKWRO submitted its own health proposal to OEO outlining a decentralized community controlled health system with a pharmacy with drugs at government prices, ambulance service, doctors at outposts, someone on call twenty- four hours a day, and health education and training in preventive medicine for the poor people of the county.

OEO told EKWRO that their proposal had to be considered on a local level.

The people of Floyd County realize the need for massive federal help if the health conditions of those living in poverty and isolation in ravaged Appalachia are to improve. The million dollar CHP failed miserably and so the fight continues.

Once And Future UMass

By LARRY LADD

"The old king felt refreshed, clear-headed, almost ready to begin.

There would be a day - ere must be a day - when he would come back to Gramarye with a new Round Table which had no corners, just as the world had none - a table without boundaries between the nations who would sit to feast there. The hope of making it would lie in culture. If people could be persuaded to read and write, not just to eat and make love, there was still a chance they might come to reason."

T.H. White
The Once and Future King

The Future University Report has been published in the Collegian and is beginning to filter down the University channels. As a critic of that document, I find myself in some rather strange company. The greatest source of support for my position has come from conservative members of the faculty, which leads me to clarify at greater length the sources of my own discontent with the report.

If someone were to point out a specific recommendation of the Future Report and ask whether I agreed with the recommendation, I would probably say yes, because most of the specific suggestions are excellent ones worthy of immediate adoption by the campus.

If that is the case, on what grounds can I criticize the report? First, because the committee relegates itself to the cheerleader role, urging us to move faster, but not in any directions different from the ones we are now beginning to move in. Second, because most reports of this kind are worthless wastes of paper and human effort, filed for future reference, they say, but actaully filed to be forgotten. Third, because the report puts too much faith in rationality, in the naive belief that if it can construct a logical argument it can win support for its ideas. Fourth, and most importantly, because the report does not give a clear sense of priorities, which is the one absolutely crucial ingredient if it is to be enacted.

The document rarely goes beyond its cheerleader function, limiting itself to rooting for the already existing forces of change. It seems that the committee looked at what we are already doing, decided we were moving too slowly, which is true, and merely recommended that we accelerate the pace. Certainly we should, and students have been in the forefront of the effort to get the University more committed to the goals of the report. But little that the report recommends can be called startling or brilliant: it merely checked out those programs that are pushing the University toward social reality and issued a hearty, 127 page bravo!

Indeed, the cheerleader function can be more specifically focussed. Is it coincidence, or more than coincidence, that the Future University Report endorses what Pres. Wood has been saying since his inaugural?

Reports have a very poor track record. Do you realize how many future reports there have been this decade alone, and how few have actually fulfilled their purpose? The University has cried wolf once too often.

This decade's paper planning began with the Long Range Academic Planning Committee, which issued its report, subsequently filed and largely ignored, in 1962. The Office of Institutional Studies kept trying to hold together a long-range scenarios, which came to be known as the "often revised long-range plan" because it was changed sc continually. Several years ago, the Faculty Senate appointed an Ad Hoc Long Range Planning Committee, not to be confused with the former, similarly named, committee. That committee recommended that another committee, appropriately labelled the NEW Long Range Planning, be established with an Advisory LRP Committee to help it out. The meetings were endless, the reports were flawless, and the action was highly limited. Meanwhile, the Faculty Senate has its own permanent Committee on Master Planning, which in reality doesn't deal with planning overtime. Students, wanting to get into the committee mania themselves, established a Student LRP Committee, but gave up when they realized how pointless the whole exercise was. In the midst of this madness, the State Board of Higher Education jumped in and issued its own Master Plan for higher education. With this proliferation of reports, it is easy to see how I can lose faith in the process. The Future Report is but another candidate for the "Future Fantasies File."

A report such as this depends on shaky ground, for it appeals to the rationality of the people to whom it is directed. A carefully reasoned, logical argument is simply not enough, for in University affairs logic takes a back seat to self-interest. In that sense, the report will be most helpful to the whole University as ammunition for those forces pushing to new social realism. It will strike some measure of fear into the reactionary elements, since those elements often fear paper more than people. But primarily the report will be used as a ideological weapon for one faction. The politics, because it is based on interest and power, will not be fundamentally altered by adding a new reference source.

When you are running any institution as an administrator, the most difficult problem is the question of priorities. An administrator has limited resourced but unlimited good ideas. That means that difficult choices have to be made between conflicting good ideas: priorities must be established. This is another real failure of the report: no rank order is established for its many recommendations. The resources are not available to do everything, so where do we begin? The report offers little help.

The Future University Report simply ain't all it's cracked up to be. Because the President is behind its thrust, and because it can be used to provide scriptural justification for progress, it will on balance aid the forces of tomorrow in their contest with the forces of yesterday. But it will not lead the charge.

WASHINGTON--The devaluation of the American dollar as agreed to by President Nixon in his meeting with French President Georges Pompidou in the Azores came as a surprise to many people. The Nixon strategy up until the meeting was to make the Europeans devalue the dollar rather than the United States.

People in Washington are still wondering what happened. The clue to it was a short news item from the Azores which reported that President Nixon had stayed up to 4:30 a.m. in the Azores on Tuesday morning listening to the Washington Redskin/Los Angeles Rams game on the radio.

This clue, plus a version of what happened given to me in absolute confidence by a French newspaperman, is what took place.

On Tuesday morning at 8 o'clock, President Pompidou was eating his breakfast of croissants with cafe au lait when his chief intelligence officer burst into the room and said, "Monsieur le President, I can report to you that the President of the United States had no sleep last night."

"Alors," President Pompidou said, "how do you know this?"

"He listened to the Washington Redskins/Los Angeles Rams game until 4:30 in the morning."

"What is this Washington Redskins, Los Angeles Rams game?"

"It is a football game, Monsieur le President, between the teams of two cities. The President never misses a football game. He is a devoted Redskin supporter."

"He likes Indians?"

"No, the team is not made up of Indians. They call themselves Redskins just so people won't confuse them with the Rams or the Colts or the Lions or the Falcons."

"I do not understand how this information can be of use to me," President Pompidou said.

"Monsieur le President, all during the game President Nixo kept waking up his staff to tell them what the score was. Secretary Rogers and Secretary Connally received no sleep either. They are all groggy."

"Zut! This is formidable. Tell me something about these Washington Indians."

"Redskins, not Indians, Monsieur le President."

An hour later the French president and the American President met with each other, along with their staffs.

The Americans were yawning and rubbing their eyes.

President Pompidou said, "President Nixon, my congratulations on the football game last night."

"Do you follow American football?" President Nixon asked in surprise.

"My wife and I are both avid George Allen fans."

"Well, Mr. President. It was really a fantastic game."

"Then," said President Pompidou, "that means we will be in the National League Playoffs."

"We?" Mr. Nixon said.

"Of course we. The French support the team the President of the United States supports."

"De Gaulle was never like that," Mr. Nixon said. "Mr. President, Billy Kilmer had his greatest day, and I can't say enough about Jefferson and Speedy Duncan."

"Did you contain Roman Gabriel?" Monsieur Pompidou asked.

"The entire game."

"Bon. Now about the dollar. I imagine it makes no difference if you devalue it now."

"I hadn't really been giving it much thought."

"Please just sign here, and then we can talk more about the football game."

President Nixon looked around to see if he could get some advice from Secretary Rogers or Connally. They were both fast asleep with their heads on the conference table. Rather than disturb them he signed the agreement.

And that's how Washington won a chance at the Super Bowl, and the United States lost 10% of the American dollar.

Vermont Yankee In People's Court

To the Editor:

The New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution is deeply concerned over the change in the conduct and atmosphere of the Vermont Yankee hearings since the political pressure by Governor Deane C. Davis and others has been applied for the one-percent (1%) thermal operation of the plant before the hearings have concluded.

The acceleration of the hearing procedure is disturbing because of certain irreversible results of such hasty plant operation.

1. As soon as the core has become radioactive it is more difficult and costly to inspect, test and modigy its internal components.

2. Radioactive wastes would be produced, even though they might be kept on site at present. Yet the hearing board has not fully investigated planned waste disposal procedures for full operation and refuses to consider disposal of rad-waste at one percent (1%) thermal operation.

3. Vermont Yankee has yet to submit the complete environmental report required by the National Environmental Policy Act. Therefore environmental impact cannot be adequately discussed for any level of operation. Until Vermont Yankee submits this report the AEC cannot prepare its detailed environmental statement, as required, nor request comments from appropriate federal and state agencies, also required.

The recent statement by the Federal Power Commission confirms that there will be no power shortage in Vermont, certainly not during the winter and summer of 1972. Vermont Yankee and its political allies have created an alleged "power crisis" atmosphere. Yet intervenors have not been given an adequate chance in the hearings to challenge and discuss the assertion.

Vermont Yankee has claimed that it can be producing power at twenty percent (20%) capacity by the January-February winter load peak. But the latest session of the hearings has been recessed without discussion of Vermont Yankee's excessively optimistic testing schedule.

Sudden and contradictory changes in the beginning date for the recently completed round of hearings have been most inconvenient and unfair to intervenors. The general public, for whom by AEC regulation, hearings are set up can hardly be expected to participate in the hearings unless notice is clearly given well in advance.

The public is entitled to a careful and complete consideration of all the facts before any sort of plant operation is authorized.

No Parking

To the Editor:

Recently a decision concerning the collection of parking fees was made by Mr. Moriarty and the General Court. Since I heard of the decision, I have been patiently waiting for some mention of the outcome in the Collegian, but to no avail. In the December 15 issue there was an article by persons unknown concerning the disciplinary actions taken by the court, but still no mention about parking fees.

Because of the amount of money and the large number of students and faculty involved, I feel that Mr. Moriarty and the court should have released their decision to authorize collection of the fees by Mr. Bouffard to the student body immediately. Not only is Mr. Bouffard authorized to collect these fees, but money from the student activity tax has been appropriated to aid him in their collection. Instead of just paying an exhorbitant $5 or $10 fee, the student is also paying to have the money collected from him. This seems to me a flagrant violation of our rights. I feel that this situation should be investigated by the student body immediately. From now on Mr. Moriarty and his court should exercise more respect for the student's rights, and show more haste in the release of such pertinent decisions to the student body.

Get Motivated

To the Editor:

Howard Brogan likes the grading system because just like everyone in society students need extra motivation. Most people in our society admittedly don't enjoy their jobs. (This may not be so for most university professors.) By assuming that students need the grading system for extra motivation (since they don't get paid) Howard is saying that education and the learning experience can't be fulfilling by itself. There is something wrong with a society in which people spend the greater part of their lives doing things that they dislike to do. Education should be treated as a sharing of experiences, knowledge and viewpoints. The grading system just gets in the way of this search.

Reid Fishman's logic, in attacking Tom Moriarty's letter in yesterday's Collegian falls short. If George McGovern has in fact voted for "research and development" in order to maintain American military power and prop up dictatorships around the world, (as Reid seems to admit) isn't that bad enough? Also, I see absolutely nothing wrong with exposing to the public that both McGovern, McClosky, and a whole lot of other so-called doves have voted for war appropriations and that these are CAPITALIST politicians whose primary interest is in maintaining the status-quo of capitalism.

20,000 Christmas Cards

To the Editor:

Last year President Wood and I sent Christmas cards to members of the faculty at all three campuses of the University. We did this out of eagerness to greet all our new colleagues and their families and to express our pleasure at becoming part of this exceptional community of people.

Many of these cards brought responses; some asking who in the world we were and why we had sent them a Christmas card; others simply thanking us for the card and sending us one of their own. All of these responses were welcome, but they also made us aware of an impending dilemma; supposing 2,000 people (the typical Gallup Poll response) were to send us Christmas cards this year?

The Postmaster in Lincoln (total household, 1400) has blanched at the thought. My children and I, much as we love Christmas cards, began to feel nervous at the prospect. Furthermore, as we considered the expense of so many Christmas cards and the other more serious needs for funds in the world, it seemed a sin to go on with this year after year.

So, we propose to make a contribution to the CCEBS program in the name of the faculty of the University. And from Bob, Peggy, Franny, Maggie, Frank, Frisbie the dog, Gypsy the pony, and, certainly, our local Postmaster, Merry Christmas and Season's Greetings to faculty, staff, and students alike!

But this year, no Christmas cards, OK?

Peggy Wood

It's Christmas

By BILL GORCZYCA

Christmas Day has a habit of sneaking up on some people. For those of you who are wrapped up in your studies and have failed to realize that Christmas Day will soon be upon us, nere are some telltale signs that will awaken you to the holiday season. You know it's Christmas when:

—The dining commons has fresh fruit for breakfast and you find a stocking in your orange.

—A department store Santa is downing scotch on the rocks at 12-noon so his nose will be red enough for the hordes of kids who will climb up and down on his lap that afternoon.

—The junkies in Springfield wish you a Merry Christmas, but still steal your money and leave you lying in some dark alley.

—Your professors start cancelling classes so that you can get home early.

—A shaky looking character tries to hit you for some money for the "poor children in Holyoke," then runs down the street when you ask him for some credentials.

—The friendly stranger in the black sedan almost runs you down, but refrains from giving you the finger like he usually does.

—MacDonalds comes with the perfect gift for your boyfriend: a creamy shake and a hot tart.

—You go out to your car to drive home for the holidays and discover that your battery is missing.

—Local department stores are decorated with reindeers, candy canes, and jolly Saint Nicks, but the only reference to Christ is a cartoon image on the face of a cheap kid's watch.

—Your roommate buys a packet of silver tinsel to drape on his marijuana plants.

—Your boyfriend starts asking subtle questions like: "What's that perfume you're wearing?" or "What size panty hose do you wear?"

—The TV networks run Christmas "specials" which are worse than the usual drivel.

—You run out of after shave lotion and discover that your usual brand is selling for 10-cents more, just like all the other products on the "gift bar".

—A group of children sing carols in front of your apartment and then throw rocks through your windows when you don't give them money.

—The "Play-Mate of the Month" has polyethelene snowballs dangling from her most prominent protuberances.

—Your girlfriend asks you what you "really" want for Christmas then blushes when you tell her.

Unique Dichotomy

By JAN VILLANOVA

No two things are physically alike in structure or composition. Each thing is a perfect example of itself and exists separately in time and space. To disprove this concept, you would need the perfect measuring device to measure one thing against the other; however, it is impossible to correctly measure two things using the same device. While measuring the first thing, you will have caused a certain amount of wear upon the mechanisms of that device. Measuring the second thing will inevitably produce an incorrect result unfit for a valid comparson. Consequently, no single device is capable of producing the required measurements. Needless to say, the idea of two equally perfect devices to measure each thing separately is also inconceivable. You would first somehow have to measure devices one and two to be sure they were mechanically perfect, which of course would constitute devices three and four and so on.

Each thing is unique. And because each thing is in itself an entity, it remains incomparable to anything else. Therefore, all things are inherently perfect. From this basic proposition emanates all of human suffering. To seek perfection is to regress.

Unfortunately, if all things are perfect, then man is also perfect. And it must follow then, that his every act is also perfect, because all acts are manifest through the creation of physical things. Acts are nothing more than executed thoughts. If the whole is perfect, then so must be its parts. Consequently, the though giving impetus to the act must also be perfect. And finally, it must be true that each and every concept is indeed a perfect concept. Therefore, my concept that all things are perfect things is obviously relative. From this basic proposition derives all of human gratification. To concede that all things are relative is to understand why man does suffer.

In conclusion, the dichotomy of our existence is ironically the conflict between its parts, namely, perfection and relativity. Both are absolutes. From this basic proposition flows all of futility. Mankind struggles in vain to comprehend the meaning of his existence and at the same time refuses to realize the ultimate questions will never be answered. Above all, man forgets his place. He falsely imagines that he will somehow influence the duration of the Sun's energy, so that it will not burn itself out before he has a chance to be answered. Then of course, when the Sun dies, so does man. Perfection and relativity were doing their thing long before mankind arrived. It's ridiculous to even think the two were meant for earth alone. Men fall to the ground because gravity is not only a mystery, but it's pretty darn heavy.

How To Succeed In Business Without Really Trying

By ELLEN GOODMAN

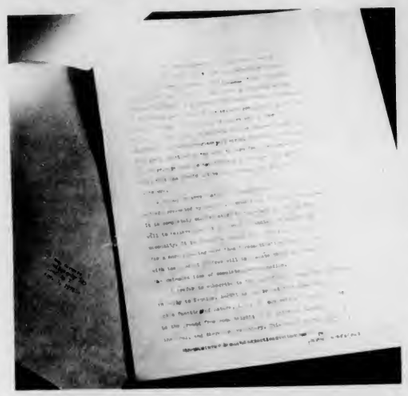
The corporate Ward Warren is a slimmer, richer man than he was a year ago when term papers were just a hurdle to his degree at Babson. Now, 60 pounds lighter and claiming to be a million dollars heavier, he is, at 22, chairman of the board of Termpapers Unlimited.

As his service celebrates its first anniversary next week, Warren claims it has branches in every major university town ("except Houston") — supplying students with professionally written term papers on any subject for an average price of $2.50 a page.

Term paper services have become a business success story — they are competitive, not defensive:

An individual has become a corporation, and Dave Kamen is now Champion Termpapers in Kenmore square.

International Termpapers in Waltham claims to be at least national, with branches from Great Neck, L.I., N.Y., to Santa Ana, Calif.



QBS, an outfit with offices in Brookline, once considered itself "subversive." It planned to undermine the other termpaper writing services and stop them from exploiting students and writers. Today it is a full-fledged business with an eye to cost-accounting.

Other one-man operations have opened up, catching the crumbs of the big dealers.

All have flourished despite the combined wrath of Harvard, Boston University, Northeastern, other colleges and lawyers.

They have survived the scandal of having two customers pass in the same paper at Harvard and the University of Michigan, and two students caught and disciplined at Tufts. And they have profited.

"Last year I thought the business would end soon," says Kamen, who was "Mr. Papers" in the original stories on term papers.

That was the time to stop us. We were the outlaws against the entrenched interests. This year we are entrenched interests. I think I'll be in this for three or four years."

Warren sees the same positive future. With the ink barely dry on his diploma, he drives a 12-cylinder Jaguar and claims 1000 employees in the United States and Canada, a battery of lawyers, troubleshooters, wholesalers, retailers and corporate officers.

The operation he describes is based on the second floor at 295 Huntington Ave. in a suite of rooms currently being renovated.

In this office is a new Xerox telicopier that can send any of the 60,000 term papers in his "secret files" to a telecopier in any of the 20 "major" branch offices across the country in a matter of minutes.

Warren, the son of a college professor, has also been interviewed by virtually every national publication and television network since the Globe broke the story last spring.

"We have over 90 percent of the term paper market covered by myself and my associates. In this folder I have 1000 applicants for more agencies. Everyone of my agencies has access to a library which is worth over $1 million. We're the biggest."

Warren denies that Unlimited could have given out the same paper to two students in Harvard's History 142 B course.

"There is absolutely no proof of that. There's a possibility. Harvard engineered it. Besides, we are a reference service."

International Termpapers with 12 branches, disputes Warren's claim "We're the biggest," says a spokesman at the office in Waltham. "We have 23 file cabinets with 83,000 term papers in them. They don't make in a week what we make in a day."

Like Unlimited, International swears that the papers are sold and used for reference only. Both say there is no evidence of plagiarism among their customers. International stamps the papers with its name and gives them out on Xerox paper. This way, they say, the students can't simply pass the papers in.

QBS went broke this summer. Bob Roth, the president, says that the company made $20,000 in May but was without a cent when June ended.

"We gave too many papers away," he says.

Now they only give away advice. But they still claim to charge the students less for original work and pay the writers more, a high of $3 a page. Roth personally has drawn only $284 from the business, he says. QBS is finally on the black side of the ledger.

QBS says it also has new franchises in San Francisco, Los Angeles, New York and Connecticut.

Kamen, who was a one-man writing machine six months ago, now deals primarily in used papers also. Champion had a payroll of 14 writers last week and Kamen himself is pulling more than $200 a week. Though he won't give out any sales figures, Kamen is thinking of branching into other cities.

What still amazes him is that the services have not been bothered by the universities.

"The funny thing about universities is that they only study things 1500 miles away. They'll go to Bolivia to see how the Indians weave baskets but they won't go a quarter of a mile down the street to see what their students are doing," Kamen says.

At Harvard, Dean Archie Epps says: "I'm as mad as ever. But I see no movement on it at all. People wish it would go away. I'm told I'm a romantic for talking about the responsibilities of a university to society."

Harvard's lawyers, he says, are still working on it. Northeastern's lawyers have visited the term papers services but there's been no action there either. At BU, President John Silber asked Prof. Henry Monahan of the law school to look into it. He is.

"Just say we intend to take action. I have to decline to give you any other information now," Monahan says.

Meanwhile, Ward Warren says he has a bid on a $250,000 estate in Wellesley. He wants to move in this spring.

Central To Begin An Academic Program

Central Residential Area has achieved the beginnings of an Academic program. The area's Academic Affairs Committee which meets on Monday evenings made a late start for next semester. However, plans are underway for various courses and projects.

The committee has succeeded, with fine cooperation from academic departments, in placing some sections of large courses within the residence halls. Those departments that will offer courses on discussion sections are: Sociology, Rhetoric, Economics, History and Psychology.

Residents of the area are hoping for colloquia credits for the coming semester in order to establish some additional projects.

Also, a course is being established next semester under Anthropology 386, Special Problems, which will deal with the culture/history of Africa. Ray and RoseAnn Enjong, who are Graduate students from West Africa, will be teaching the course in Brett or Wheeler House. They stated their interest was primarily aimed at showing an African perspective on West African culture.

The committee plans a great deal more work between now and mid-February, in order to complete a much more extensive program for the Fall Semester, 1972, not to mention supplementary work for next semester.

Anyone interested in participating in the courses mentioned for next semester, please call the Central Student Affairs Office in Baker House - 5-2041.

Recruiters Pimp On Campus

By TONY GRANITE

EVERYONE'S AN "A" STUDENT at UCal-Riverside, where their Highlander newspaper has announced a special course in German that records no grade lower than "A".

The way it works is that the student studies his lessons until he (she) is ready to retake the examination and get an "A". One academic credit for the course is earned on the basis of proficiency rather than time.

A substitute for pass/fail?

KEEPING AN EYE ON ECOLOGY has gone to extremes at Portland (Ore.) State, where their Vanguard announces in a page one piece that a receptacle for assorted recycables yielded a glass eye.

An invitation is out for the owner to claim it.

SPEAKING OF WHICH, the Mankata (Minn.) State Daily Reporter is spreading the word of a people-type ecology that is going on at neighboring Macalester College. Seems that students on that campus have begun a "Save the Profs" movement by collecting money to make up the $300,000 cut in faculty salaries recently decided by the Board of Trustees.

The students are literally begging money to finance a leiter-writing campaign in January. The literary assault will be directed at the alumni of Macalester, seeking both money and pressure on the trustees to reconsider their action.

Leftover money will be used to pay part of the faculty salaries next year, if the instructors are allowed to stay, or to be given as going-away presents.

Greater love hath no student than this...

INCENTIVE AWARDS to staff of Louisiana State got a big play in the pages of a recent Daily Reveille.

Seems that the University presents $100 checks to selected employees who have made "outstanding contributions" to the campus. The three-year-old program is administered by a panel of judges who select winners for "superior performance", "professionalism", "efficient, helpful, patient and very human manner", and "contributions to employe morale and to the promotion of harmonious public relations."

We could use some of that right here, eh?

Index Close, But No Rubber Cigar

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (NSYA)-The UMass student annual came within two percentage points of a perfect score in the judging of 1971 college yearbooks by the National School Yearbook Association (NSYA) of Memphis, Tenn.

According to the "Honor Award" rating received this week from the widely-known national rating service, the 1971 Index of UMass accummulated 108 of a possible 110 points in the judging. The yearbook was edited by Thomas D. Leavitt of South Deerfield, Mass.

The 1971 edition was the 102nd produced at the Amherst campus. The book is among the top three produced in the United States, with a press run of 13,500.

NYSA grades more than 1,000 publications a year. The service group was founded 21 years ago in Houston, Texas, by N.S. Patterson who still guides a staff of 25 judges who are professionals in the yearbook field.

Community Rally For Soviet Jewry

By JEFFREY GREEN

Last Saturday night representatives of the Five College Area Student Struggle for Soviet Jewry traveled to Springfield to participate in a Community Rally for Soviet Jewry sponsored by the Springfield Jewish Federation. An estimated 1500 people turned out for the event which was held at Temple Beth El. The rally was recorded on tape to be sent to Kol Yisrael (the Voice of Israel) and broadcasted into the Soviet Union.

The speakers for the rally included representatives of various religious communities, Mayor Frank Freedman, Representative Raymond Fontana who brought a message from Governor Sargent and Theodore Bikel whose name and presence in the program remained almost obscure until he stepped to the podium and spoke of the plight of the Soviet Jew.

The massive, bearded Bikel whose character in the entertainment world has traditionally been that of the robust, Jewish soul then picked up his guitar and sang songs in Russian, Yiddish and Hebrew composed by Jews of Soviet Russia and smuggled out by a visiting scientist. Bikel deplored those who were involved in the struggle to save Soviet Jewry for reasons of self-gratification.

Speaking also at the rally was Victor Yoran, a once prized Soviet Cellist and winner of many awards. Yoran defected to the Israeli Mission in Vienna in a calculated escape plan for which he had to leave his wife and young child behind. Yoran has since been working vigorously to bring his family to Israel. On every attempt, his family has been denied permission to emigrate.

The rally was concluded with the lighting of the Chanukah Menorah. Each of the eight candles on the menorah, which in Jewish history is the symbol of freedom, was dedicated to a particular Jewish Prisoner of Conscience now in a Soviet Prison Camp. There are estimated to be 42 such prisoners in the Soviet Union.

The latest figures of Jewish emigration from Russia for this year is 14,000. It was remarked that this was due to the pressure brought to bear on the USSR by such rallies and protests, and perhaps even more by the work that does not receive such publicity. It was said that these figures are still not high enough and that those Jews who wished to remain Soviet citizens are still being denied the right to live as a Jewish entity.

"If one man is enslaved on this earth," said Bishop Alexander D. Stewart, a speaker at the rally, "then none of us can be confident of his own freedom."

The rally ended with the singing of Hatikvah, the Israeli National Anthem.

Have To Stay And Can't Pay?

Recognizing that many students who must stay in Amherst during Christmas vacation and intersession can not afford the $2.50 per day rent at Hamlin House, the Dean of Students Office has announced that certain students in financial need may stay at Hamlin House rent free. Interested students must apply through the Financial Aid Office in Room 232 Whitmore by speaking to Mr. Lynn Santner, the Associate Director of the Office.
The criteria for exemption for the rent fee, according to Mr. Santner, is necessarily different from regular financial aid cases. The exemptions will be decided on the merits of each individual case; thus, a Parent's Confidential Statement is not necessary for a student to be considered for a Hamlin House vacation rent exemption.
Normally, vacation rent in Hamlin House would cost $30.00 for Christmas vacation and $25.00 for Intersession for a total of $55.00 plus optional charges for linen.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

A survey conducted at four Oklahoma City hospitals, revealed that more babies were born between three and four in the morning -that more babies were born in August -and that fewer births occurred in April.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A friendship is dissolved if you ask too many questions. Have faith. Your desires will be fulfilled. Key is to overcome skepticism that is not justified. This will become increasingly clear.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Accept additional assignment. Responsibility now coincides with greater reward. Standing in community is on upswing. Professional superior pays meaningful compliment. Heed voice of experience.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Spread ideas and influence. Enlarge horizons mental and spiritual. Aries individual could play key role. Be receptive. But also make sure your own style gets across. No need to take back seat.
CANCER (June 21-July 22): New approach to partnership deal is required. You need added room, independence. Financial arrangement can be improved. Key is to assert needs in reasonable manner. Others then will respond.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Obtain valid hint from Cancer message. Take nothing for granted. Give intuitive intellect a chance to work. Aquarius person may play important role. Unorthodox ideas now are ones most likely to succeed.
VIRGO (Aug. Sept. 22): Stress versatility. Have alternative methods at hand. Be willing to laugh at own foibles. Humor now proves great ally. Emphasis is on health, work, ability to accept constructive suggestions.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Stress creative approach. Don't follow or imitate. Set your own pace. Be considerate toward children, but know when to draw line. Be fair, but firm. Details now assume additional importance. Be thorough.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Obtain hint from Libra message. Know that what might seem superficial could be important. Means read between lines -check fine print. Emphasis is on home, security, improvement of property.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may be hurrying here, there and everywhere. Key is to concentrate efforts. Finish one thing before starting in another area. You expand interests and are consulted by neighbors, relatives.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Money interests are highlighted. Review values. May not be necessary to rearrange personal priorities. One you took for granted may act in unusual manner. Be perceptive. Check resources.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Lunar cycle is such that you can successfully initiate projects. Trust judgment, intuition. You are on target. Personal magnetism soars. Many are drawn to you. You can put across special program.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Look behind scenes. Obtain hint from Capricorn message. Find out what it is you really desire. Key is to be truthful with yourself. Better now for finishing rather than beginning projects. Act accordingly.
IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have delightful sense of humor. You often exhibit tendency to scatter forces. You need outlet for self-expression. Writing, music, drama: these could fill bill. Your credo is apt to be open road and open mind. You abhor proverbial stuffed shirt. Recent change in home will prove beneficial.

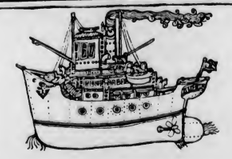
Ivy League Double Teams Grapplers At Harvard

Ask any wrestler what he thinks of his teams 2-5-1 record and he'll say he doesn't like it. Ask the samer what he thinks of the schedule and he'll say it's tops.
There is a saying in athletic competition that one migrates to one's competition and by virtue of this aphorism that is just what the Redman wrestlers are out to do. Looking at the weekend losses to Ivy League powers Columbia, 29-11, and Harvard, 20-11, in this perspective they don't seem as bad.
Coach Homer Barr reflected on his team's performance by saying, "We did not wrestle well against Columbia but wrestled better against Harvard. This is undoubtedly our toughest schedule but the experience that we are gaining by wrestling tough competition like the Ivy's and Lock Haven is worth the struggle we are undergoing."
As was the case at Yale the strength of the Ivy recruiting offices was in evidence. Stepping onto the mat at 118 for Harvard was Dan Blakinger a former Pennsylvania State Champion who distinguished himself by defeating a boy that had never been beaten in high school. At 126 Harvard had Carl Biello a two time National Prep School Champ. Columbia had Andy Puchany a highly touted Pennsylvania boy and the son of one of the Keystone States best coaches.
The Redmen had their hands full at the outset as they met a tough Columbia that was up not only for UMass but Harvard and they whipped through the first three matches and then tied at 142. Capable freshman Russ Chateauneuf coming into the match after an injury at Lock Haven tied Puchany and came very close to putting him away in the third period.
Clay Jester used his Columbia match to get him ready for the Harvard match. The match was in Clay's favor going into the last minutes and he was reversed and pinned on a very lucky move by the Columbia boy. In the evening, Clay destroyed his man 10-5.
The next match that UMass won was Bruce Buckbee's and he had little trouble on his way to a 5-1 decision.
Carl Dambman proved that revenge was sweet as he came from a 9-2 deficit to score his fourth pin of the season. Carl started the match by scoring a point without doing a thing. It seems that his Columbia opponent was a nationally ranked judo champ and he slammed Carl and almost knocked him out.
An illegal slam is worth one point to the boy slammed and as Carl was collecting his senses he was a point ahead. Then the kid did it again and again. As Carl went down for the third time he said he became determined to pin the man. And he did in 2:37 of the second period.
Harvard also swept the first three matches and tied the fourth to Chateauneuf. In this match it was another freshman Chris Cadwallader that was responsible for three points as he eked out a win over his Harvard opponent on riding time.
Bruce Buckbee lost a heartbreaker to the only Harvard man to do anything in the nationals Richie Starr, and he took a fifth. Bruce was ahead going into the last six seconds and the referree awarded Starr a two point reversal and Buckbee was still in control.
At heavyweight, Chris Hodson turned in a stellar performance by decisioning his man 12-5. Behind 2-0 Chris showed what working with the coach will do for a man as he took his man down and put him on his back for the beginning.
Tonight the grapplers face Worcester Poly Tech at home in the auxiliary gym at Boyden at 8:00. A win against this team would be a fine Christmas present and a good thing to come back to when the first matches after the holiday are Oswego State and the Army JV's. The lineup shifts once more as freshmen McGlaughlin, Chateauneuf, Rome and Cadwallader are called back into service.
Scheduling is the key to success and if this year's schedule is worth anything at all, then the Redmen are on their way to opening the lock.

Whalers Cream Mushrooms For Women's IM Basketball Title



Sunday afternoon in Boyden Gym the Residence Hall Champion Melville Whalers smashed the Mushrooms, the (formerly undefeated) Independent Champions by a close score of 19-16 to capture the Women's Intramural All-Campus Basketball Championship.
The Whaler squad of Meredith Schmidt, June Manning, Debbie Oakley, Janet Manning, Mary Arnott, Jane Andrews and Nancy Fink all realized that they were facing their toughest competition of the season, but their exquisite teamwork and overwhelming desire to win spurred them on to victory.
The Whalers gained an early lead when June scored the first basket in the opening seconds of the game. They maintained a marginal lead throughout the game, only allowing the Mushrooms to tie the score once.
The Whaler defense kept the Mushrooms from sprouting ahead by cutting off the inside shots. On the other hand, the Whalers managed to penetrate the Mushroom defense often enough to maintain their lead. They also dominated offensive and defensive boards.
The scoring was indeed a team effort with Janet Manning as high scorer with eight points, followed by Debbie Oakley and June Manning with four points each. Mary Arnott scored two points and Mere Schmidt tallied one.
Instrumental in the Whaler's successful season was the enthusiastic and sincere support of Melville 3 Long, the effective scorekeeping of Marcia Lappin and the superb coaching of Ed Fitz.

Bobby Jones' Services Held

ATLANTA (AP) — Bobby Jones, who began playing golf at the age of six with a sawed-off, hickory-shafted club and became the game's only Grand Slam winner, was buried Monday.
Private graveside services at Atlanta's tree-shaded Oakland Cemetery on the edge of the business district took less than ten minutes.
Only members of Jones' immediate family were at graveside, but a handful of the golfers' old friends stood a few yards away, talking among themselves.
"That's the way Dad wanted it," said Robert T. Jones, III. "He just didn't want any great fuss."
The day was warm but grey and drizzly.
Services consisted of several short prayers read from a Catholic prayer book by the Rev. Msgr. John D. Stapleton. Jones was baptized a Catholic three days before his death.
No eulogies were read at graveside, but the family has been deluged with tributes to the golf great since his death Saturday at the age of 69.
Jones, who personified the Golden Era of sports when he achieved golf's only Grand Slam in 1930, died at his home.
His doctor said he died as the result of an aneurism he suffered last week, but Jones had been suffering for years from a painful and crippling back diseased called syringomyelia.
The disease ended his golfing career in 1948-18 years after he won the Grand Slam by taking the U.S. Open, the U.S. Amateur, the British Open and British Amateur championships.
Jones was buried in a grey metal casket beside members of his wife's family. The grave is against a mossy brick wall on the edge of the old cemetery.
Jones, who as a teenaged golfer was the game's enfant terrible, was a man of steely determination and drive. "The man was sick so long and he fought it so successfully that I think we have finally discovered the secret to Jones' success-it was the strength of his mind," reflected Ben Hogan upon learning of his friend's death.
Jones cut a glamorous figure as he moved through the decade of the '20s, making headlines with the likes of boxer Jack Dempsey and football star Red Grange.

Swimmers Bow To Cent. Conn.

By JANIS AHMADJIAN

Overpowered and outclassed the UMass varsity swim team bowed to a strong, highly aggressive team from Central Connecticut Saturday afternoon, 91-22. Central stacked the meet constantly with their best swimmers making competition very difficult for UMass.
The opposition really showed their power and depth capturing first places in all the events except the 50-yard Freestyle which Dick Blaisdell won with a time of 23.9 while Pete Ouelette placed third.
Bruce Taylor scored the first point for UMass with a third in the 1,000 yard Freestyle. Capturing second place positions were: Herb Schuster - 200 yard Individual Medley, Dick Blaisdell - 100 yard Freestyle, Jack Tyler - 500 yard Freestyle, and Paul Joy - first Diving competion.
Third placed points were gained by: Joe Hebert - 200 yard Freestyle, Tom Smith - 200 yard Butterfly, George Kwiecien - 200 yard Backstroke, Dave Guiney - 200 yard Breaststroke, and Mike Queen - 3 meter Individual Diving.
The next meet of the season will be away at the University of Vermont on January 29th. On February 5th, UMass hosts MIT.

Another Tough Stretch Begins At Hofstra

By EARLE BARROLL

Your team has just come off an emotional basketball game with a highly rated Harvard team. Your next opponent is Hofstra, a team that showed up at the Cage last year in fragments because they travelled in a car caravan which was derailed by a snowstorm. And waiting just beyond Hofstra is Villanova in the first round of the Quaker City Invitational Tournament.

So what to do? Jack Leaman had this to say on the eve before the Hofstra game. "This will be the toughest game to prepare for this season attitude-wise. We've had three games this week which were decided by two points, everyone is thinking of Christmas and then you're asked about Villanova all the time and we still have Hofstra to play.

"So we have to be ready to play. We got to play every game like Holy Cross and Harvard. We are not in a position to lose any games we're supposed to win. Any mistake can be fatal. And Hofstra is a team we're not supposed to lose to."

Hofstra is certainly not a team to lose to, but on the road anything can happen and Leaman is the first one to admit it. He's had many road scares in his coaching career here to be cognizant of this situation...Like UNH, Maine, URI.

To date, Hofstra is 3-4, having beaten such notables as LaSalle and Manhattan and lost to Army, Temple and Oral Roberts. You say Oral Roberts? Ask the teams that have played this school and they'll tell you how good they are.

And so begins another big and important stage in the Redman schedule. After Hofstra, yes, it's to Philadelphia and the Quaker City Tournament. Villanova and the Redmen tap-off at 9 p.m. in the opening round on the 27th. Other pairings have Fairfield playing South Carolina (number three in the country) at 3 p.m., Boston College against LaSalle at 7 p.m., and Manhattan against Tennessee at 1 p.m.

On the following day, the winners and losers square off. The 29th is an off day and then the championship, and two consolation brackets on the 30th. Two losses and you're out. A win and a loss and you make it to the consolations on the 30ths. Two wins and you play for it all.

During intercession, the Redmen are on the road at Vermont on January 18 and at Iona on the 22.

To start the second semester off, nationally rated Providence comes to the Cage. Last time UMass and Providence met here it was the opening game of the 1969-70 season and a young sophomore by the name of Julius Erving gave indications of what was to come when he scored 28 points and hauled in 28 rebounds in leading the Redmen to a 90-85 upset over the Friars.

This year Providence has such standouts as Ernie DiGregorio and Marvelous Marvin Barnes (6'9").

If you have a chance to make to the Palestra during vacation, you might want to see the Tennessee pre-game show that features a 6'8 giant on a unicycle. The Volunteer fans all come dressed in Orange and then as one writer put it, "they hold the ball."

Mascot Keeps Fans Psyched

MINNEAPOLIS-ST. PAUL (AP) — Tom Landry's scouting report on the Minnesota Vikings most likely does not include the tendencies of Hub Meeds, a 38-year-old truck driver from White Bear Lake, Minn.

But the Dallas Cowboys might want to know about the man who appointed himself the Viking mascot, and goes about stirring up the noisy Metropolitan Stadium crowds.

The Cowboys and Vikings meet at 1 p.m. EST Saturday in a National Football Conference playoff game here and Meeds will try to make his presence felt.

With Meeds trudging around the sidelines in a Viking costume and waving his sword in menacing ares, the Vikings know they're playing at home.

"This may sound like a college stuff," said Viking quarterback, Bob Lee, who has written a thesis on football crowds, "but the crowd really picked us up. They started it for the defense and kept it up for us."

Meeds, of course, was at work.

"All of a sudden the fans have started coming to life," said Meeds. "It seems one section wants to outdo the other. And the fans seem to sense when they're needed."

Meeds first made the Viking scene when he and his brother-in-law, Jan Deans of North St. Paul, rented Viking costumes and went to the Super Bowl at New Orleans two years ago.

When the 1970 regular season rolled around, Meeds telephoned the Vikings and received permission to be the team mascot. Meeds owns two season tickets, but prefers the sideline action.

Meeds figured he has invested more than $100 in his costume. It includes a sword which he purchased at an antique auction for $24, furs, wristbands, leggings and a Viking battle helmet.

Eagles Coach Eludes Axe

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Owner Leonard Tose of the Philadelphia Eagles admitted Tuesday he had his axe sharpened for Coach Ed Khayat and General Manager Pete Retzlaff if the team hadn't won four of its last six games.

"Neither Khayat nor Retzlaff would be here now," said Tose, "if we had lost a majority of those last games."

After Sunday's 41-28 victory over the New York Giants, Tose announced that he was giving Khayat and Retzlaff each new two-year contracts.

Tose admitted that a story six weeks ago which reported Retzlaff would be fired at the end of the season was basically true.

The Eagles' owner said he was upset when Retzlaff refused to support his dismissal of head coach Jerry Williams after the third game of the season.

Tose relieved Williams and hand-picked Khayat, an assistant coach, to take over the job.

Tose felt that Retzlaff had been disloyal in letting the owner fire Williams and take the blast of criticism which followed, including a charge from the departing coach that Tose lacked character and courage.

The Eagles lost their first five games of the season and then went 6-2-1 in the next nine.

WMUA On The Air

WMUA will be at Civic Center tonight on the Campus of Hofstra University to cover all the action between UMass and Hofstra. Air time will be 7:50 and calling all the action will be Ken Best and the color Marty Kelley.

Tracksters Surge By Brown In Uncontroversial Opener

By MDC STAFF

Rick Barry made sure that the Brown officials were not involved in a controversial decision reminiscent of last year as he flashed through the final leg of the two-mile relay, wiped out a 25-yard deficit and brought the UMass track team a 57-52 opening meeting win over Brown on Saturday.

It was only a year ago when a seemingly false start by a Brown sprinter, that would have forced him out of the race went unnoticed by everyone but the "Brown officials" (probably alumni) resulting in a point spread that cost the Redmen the meet, 58-51.

RICK BARRY (right) readies to charge into the lead in his come from behind anchor leg of the two-mile relay which brought the UMass track team an opening win over Brown University on Saturday. (MDC photo by Ed Mangiaratti)

But Barry left no margin of controversy to be mulled over as he came from behind in the last two laps of his half mile leg and won going away by ten yards in the time of 1:58.

Earlier in the meet, Barry got the Redmen off to a winging start winning the mile in 4:18, a good early season performance.

But he was not the entire ingredient to the UMass victory. His two-mile heroics were set up by the mile relay team that brought the Redmen back to a 52 tie after falling behind early.

Other sparkling performances were turned in by freshman Randy Thomas who placed second in the mile in 4:19.7 (freshman record), Jim Graves who tied the varsity record of 5.8 seconds in winning the high hurdles, and John Meunger who finished right behind Graves in 5.9 seconds which tied the freshman record.

Coach Ken O'Brien was noticeable happy at the performance of his team. "These impressive performances to start the year off should give the young guys on the team a lot of motivation when they realize where they stand," he said.

As was expected in the meet, the distance men, Doug O'Connell, Roger Nasatka and Mike McCusker ran way from their adversaries and swept the two-mile. Add this to the one-two in the mile and the cross-country runners from the fall had a field day in their first competitive race on the boards.

Last year one of the big problems on the team was in the middle distances, but this proved to be a strong portion of the total effort for this meet. Steve Crimmins and Steve Levine placed one-two in the 600-yard run and Arnie Morse ran his career best of 2:17.4 in the 1000-yard run.

Ed Shaughnessey performed in his usual consistent style with a second in the high jump and a winning 22 feet leap in the broad jump.

Gymnasts Stomp The Army; Coach Looks For Improvement

By MICHAEL CUSACK

The UMass varsity gymnasts opened their 1971-72 E.I.G.L. competition with a 149-139 victory over Army in New York over the weekend. This marks the third straight win for this year's team, which has yet to be defeated. However, the overall Redman performance was not cause to celebrate, as their hitting average for routines without major breaks was only 72%. Consequently, the squad fell below the 150 mark that they had achieved against So. Conn. Fortunately, the Army gymnasts were not up to par either, and UMass was able to come away with a victory.

Leading the Redmen in the meet was senior co-captain Tony Vacca, whose 48.25 total in the all-around event won top honors. Vacca also won the horizontal bar event with a 9.15 routine. Other first place winners for UMass were John Calabria on floor exercise, Steve Scuderi on pommel horse, Jay Thomsen in vaulting, Dave Genest on parallel bars, and John Oliver on rings.

In addition to sweeping all six first places, UMass won four of the six event totals. The Redmen were bested in both pommel horse and vaulting, but bettered Army in floor, rings, parallel bars, and horizontal bar. Highest event total for the Redmen proved to be vaulting, while the lowest, as expected, was pommel horse.

Also contributing to the low team score was an unusually low still rings event total of 23.80. If the Redmen can prevent this in the future, and pick up their event total for pommel horse, they will be able to get back over the 150 mark, which is something they will have to do if they are to continue winning. Coach Kjeldsen believes the squad is capable of scoring in the 155 range if their hitting percentage is pulled up to where it should be.

Reflecting on the win over Army, Coach Kjeldsen felt that the team wasn't as good as they should have been, but was glad that the Army team was also down below their potential.

During the next month, many of the gymnasts will be staying at school as they prepare for the powerful Penn State team. This will be the most difficult meet of the year. It will be held in the Cage on Jan. 22 at 7:00 p.m.

Also over the weekend, the junior varsity gymnasts kept up their winning ways with a 121-89 trouncing of the Army junior varsity team. The squad was led by newly elected co-captains Chuck Schwartz and Bill Brouillet, both of whom turned in fine performances.

The Little Redmen will resume action on Feb. 2 when they play host to Dartmouth in a meet that will get underway at 4 p.m.

Irish Slug Boston College

NEW YORK (AP) — Paul Regan's hat trick led Notre Dame to a 7-4 victory over Boston College in the opening game of the Eastern College Athletic Conference's 11th annual Holiday Hockey Festival at Madison Square Garden Monday night.

The Irish, who had crushed BC 14-3 Saturday night in Chicago, jumped out to a 2-0 lead within the first 10 minutes on goals by Ray Delorenzi and Regan before BC cut the deficit in half on a power play goal by John Monaham.

In the second period, Notre Dame, which is playing in its first ECAC festival, upped its margin to 5-1 on goals by Ian Williams, John Campbell and Regan before BC counted with goals by Ed Kenty and Bob Haley.

Notre Dame sewed up the game when, with 4:14 gone in the final period, D'Arcy Keating sent a screaming shot from just inside the blue line past BC goalie Neil Higgins.

President Wood's Hundred Days

LOOKING BACK—President Wood visits office in a Southwest Tower shortly after he was inaugurated.

By DON GLICKSTEIN

Wood's Hundred Days began some months after he was inaugurated President of the University of Massachusetts.

The exact date isn't clear. It might have begun when about fifty swingshift freshmen showed up at a reception for the President in August. What was said wasn't important that evening. It was the symbolism that counted, the symbolism of the new President meeting his constituents, while the local polls were fortressed up at City Hall. As it turned out, the next month, when the then Chancellor Tippo tried to receive freshmen at his stately home on the hill, he was lucky to get even the paltry and sporadic four or forty new students that he did.

Robert C. Wood had been preparing for his first Hundred Days all year. He picked his staff, he commissioned a study on the Future University, he began to lobby Beacon Hill, he instituted procedural changes in the administration, he worked on his budget, he politicked on the three campuses. By the beginning of the semester, Wood was ready to act, quietly if possible, but tenaciously, if necessary. The events that followed, although not directly related to each other, were unmistakably Robert Wood's.

In September, the faculty in Boston (where not a little protest ensued) and Amherst gave approval to the University Year For Action program that Wood was pushing to involve undergraduates in his "Public University".

Oswald Tippo resigned on October 3, tired of the Chancellorship, and especially tired of fighting a losing battle with Wood over the control of more than 3/4 of a million dollars in trust funds.

That Board of Trustees, with complete confidence in Wood, supported him at every move. Student objections about the procedure Wood used in appointing an Acting-Chancellor, Randolph W. Bromery were brushed aside by the Trustees. A joint student-faculty Committee of Concern, disturbed about overall decision-making and authority in the University, were defused by the Trustees until "a later date." Wood's dreams seemed to be shared by the Trustees.

At the end of October, Wood announced rather informally, that UMass-Amherst growth would stop at 25,000. The debates of the last decade were ended.

In mid-November, Provost Gluckstern warned the faculty that unless they themselves imposed limitations on the number of tenured faculty, the President's Office would impose limits for them.

The first of December began with the unveiling of the Report of the Future University Committee, which not coincidentally, coincided with most of Wood's feelings about the future of UMass. The Report was a clear outline for the President's Public University.

Now, it's mid-December, and the Chancellor of the Board of Higher Education, Edward Moore, has resigned, reportedly because of differences with Wood about the direction in ensuing years for UMass.

That Wood has set the ethos for the University's next decade has caused several reactions. Most important is a militancy among faculty.

Afraid of Wood's innovations, his tenure decrees, and his way of getting what he wants, the faculty is currently exploring the potential of organizing, either with the American Association of University Professors or with the American Federation of Teachers. Pride and power hurt because of student gains that began under the Tippo Chancellorship, but that culminated with the admission of two student Trustees under Wood and Bromery, the faculty is seeking three seats themselves on the Trustees.

The problem that Wood faces from this campus in the next semester is how to implement his Future University recommendations. Obviously, Wood will not be able to go through regular channels especially for academic reforms like the freshman year proposals—that is, the Faculty Senate--although he may well make a symbolic gesture at it. The most likely routes he will follow are to work directly through the Trustees, having them approve programs that he himself cannot legally set up, and to give free reign to the vice-chancellorships, who hopefully, share his goals.

Finally, there remains a question of the University Senate. Even an organized faculty with Trustee representation cannot negate the absence of one unified Amherst voice. But by the time faculty and students get together, by the time the faculty union is strong, by the time people who are used to a slow, stratified, dogmatic educational establishment see what is happening, Wood's Hundred Days will have become the Thousand Days, and no one, assuming they disagree with his plans, will be able to alter the direction of Robert C. Wood's University of the Seventies.

Waldheim New U.N. Secretary-General

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP)-Kurt Waldheim, Austrian ambassador to the United Nations, was chosen by the Security Council Tuesday to succeed U Thant as U.N. secretary-general.

His appointment still must be ratified by the General Assembly, but this is expected to take place Wednesday morning without difficulty.

Thant steps down Dec. 31 after ten years in office. Waldheim, a former foreign minister of his country and a candidate for the presidency of Austria earlier this year, takes over the $62,500-a-year job Jan. 1 for a five-year term.

The council's action came on his 53rd birthday.

He won over a field of a dozen candidates after three days of secret balloting. He showed strength all the way, but was blocked by a big power veto both Friday and Monday.

There is nothing in the rules, however, to prevent a vetoed candidate from being renominated for succeeding ballots and this is what was done.

On Tuesday's ballot Waldheim received 11 affirmative votes, one negative and three abstentions. The negative vote, however, came from a non-permanent member and was not a veto.

Another candidate, Argentine Ambassador Carlos Ortiz de Rozas, received a vote of 12 to 3, but one of the "no" votes was a veto.

Waldheim is a career diplomat who began his foreign service in 1945 as a member of the staff of Austria's Paris embassy. He served as permanent U.N. representative for his country from 1964 to 1968, when he returned home to become foreign minister.

In April 1971 he ran as the candidate for the Conservative Peoples party in Austria's presidential election against Socialist Franz Jonas. He lost by 260,000 votes.

Since then Waldheim has been back at the world organization in his old post as permanent representative.

Diplomats said Waldheim was able to win the secretary-general contest because the Chinese Communists, who had vetoed him on Friday and Monday, finally yielded to persuasion by Waldheim and others.

First word of his selection came from a U.N. official who emerged from the closed session after Tuesday's single round of voting. Later a communique said the council had adopted a resolution recommending to the assembly "that Mr. Kurt Waldheim be appointed secretary-general of the United Nations."

Commenting on the result of the ballot, Argentina's ambassador Ortiz de Rozas said: "I think the council has made the wisest choice."

Asked if he was not disappointed about not winning the ballot, he replied: "Not at all, I think it is a very good choice."

U.S. Ambassador George Bush said: "The United Nations will be fortunate to have at its head a man of such great stature and ability."

Soviet Ambassador Jacob Malik commented: "If every member of the United Nations helps Waldheim, he will be a good secretary-general."

The British ambassador, Sir Colin Crewe, said: "It's a very good choice."

Waldheim said at a news conference that it was a "rather heavy" birthday present the Security Council had given him.

"It will not be easy to carry," he said. "I will do my best to carry it in the right way."

Noting that the Assembly has still to act on the recommendation, he said he would not discuss matters of substance until after the assembly took action.

Waldheim, a ruddy-faced man with blue eyes and light brown hair flaked with gray, thanked council members for putting their confidence in him. He said it is a "great satisfaction" for a career diplomat to be secretary-general.

He laughed at a question about speculation that he would not be an active secretary-general.

"Those who know me better know that I'm a very active man," he said.

"But the secretary-general has to act within the framework of his mandate," he added. "If one uses the framework in the right way there is quite a big chance to do something-in an active way."

It's been getting cold and windy out; and the buildings have been tilting. (MDC photo by Gary Alpaugh)

People's Movement Supporting Agnew

WASHINGTON (AP)-Armed with a mailman's guide to Middle American and actor John Wayne's name, a Washington-based group has launched a national campaign to make sure Vice President Spiro T. Agnew is on the 1972 GOP ticket.

"We're not going to say we can make the difference," said Lee Edwards, who described himself in an interview as a consultant to "Americans for Agnew." But he added that the backers of the movement feel the more visible grass-roots support the organization can muster for Agnew, the better.

The opening salvo in the "Keep Our Veep" effort was a fund-raising letter sent out to 100,000 persons on a "Middle America mailing list" over Wayne's name. It talked tough.

"It'll be awfully hard for the liberal media to twist the facts around when we give them regular, solid proof that a substantial mass of voters wants Agnew as our spokesman, and wants him on the Nixon ticket next fall," it read.

Wayne, said Edwards, was approached along with a number of others to serve on a board of sponsors. "He said he'd be happy to serve on the board and to sign the letter for us."

Wayne could not be reached immediately for comment.

Executive Director Hendry E. Mooberry acknowledged that the response to the mailing, sent out in late November, so far has been slow.

"We're not getting thousand-dollar bills," he said, but added that the Christmas season is not the best time for fund-raising or for a mail campaign.

Mooberry described himself as a public relations man and said he is working for Edwards, who long has been active in the Committee of One Million, the chief organization of Washington's China Lobby.

The two men said the Agnew movement "is not endorsed, approved or authorized by the vice president."

Baker Wins Dough

NEW YORK (AP)-William Brajczewski of Bristol, Conn., and his hospitalized, 76-year-old father, Adam, won $1 million Tuesday in the New York State lottery.

"Oy! Oy! Oy!," exclaimed Adam from a Connecticut hospital ward when he was informed of his luck.

"I feel great. Everybody in this ward here is excited. This is just great. I can hardly believe it," he added.

Adam, a retired baker, bought the winning ticket last month at the Port of New York Authority bus terminal. He is now recuperating from an operation.

"They told me just the number alone would win it," said William, as he groped for change to telephone his father and tell him their ticket on post position 13 had won. The father had already heard it from a reporter.

The younger Brajczewski, 43, a machinist for Superior Electric Co. of Bristol, said he was delighted to have won the grand prize of $50,000 a year for 20 years, which he and his father will split. But he said he would have been happy to settle for the $10,000 all 14 finalists were guaranteed.

The $1 million windfall came as an early Christmas and birthday present for the father who will turn 77 Christmas Day.

William said he didn't expect to bring down the big prize with post position 13 because he and his wife thought that horses running from outside positions were at a disadvantage.

Mrs. Brajczewski, a secretary 14 hours a week with the International Union of Electrical Workers' Local 260 in Bristol, said the only definite plans for their fortune was to send their sons-Mark, 16, and Gary, 15, to good schools.

"I'll make sure we have a good vacation," her husband added.

Second prize money of $100,000 went to holders of Post Position No. 12-Allen and Arlene Novick, of Bellmore, N.Y.

Modest Laghezza, of Long Island City, Queens, holding Position No. 5, won third prize of $50,000 and William and Justine Amadon, of Averill Park, N.Y., won $25,000 the fourth prize award, with position No. 11.

The other 10 holders of $3 final tickets for $10,000.

Sales of the $3 tickets that went into the pool for Tuesday's drawing were too small to warrant the award of consolation-the so-called pool-prizes of $500 each.

The winners were determined by the results of the first race at Belmont Race Track last Sept. 30.

Student Running For Town Meeting

"I think I'd be the first student ever to run for Town Meeting Member in Amherst," said Neil Coleman, a 21-year- old student from 367 Moore House. He took out papers for Town Meeting Member from the second precinct about 3 weeks ago.

Coleman needs the signatures of ten registered voters in Precinct 2 to get his name on the ballot. The papers with the signatures have to be turned in by January 11. He told the MDC that he has had some trouble getting the signatures verified, as they have to be exactly as the names appear on the voter registration lists. "The Town Clerk, Mrs. Ester Dimmock, has been very cooperative" in letting him check signatures on the voter registration lists, he said.

He has had some difficulty, however, even finding voters registered in Amherst living in Southwest. (Southwest is the only part of campus in Precinct 2. The rest of campus is in Precinct 3 or Precinct 7.) "Most seniors registered this summer in their home towns," he said, "and most freshmen haven't registered yet."

Coleman doesn't rate his chances of being elected as very good. "There are only nine seats up for election in Precinct 2," he said. "And incumbents are usually re-elected." He said that student response has not been too good. "If there are any registered voters in Amherst around in Southwest, I could use their signatures, and if there is anyone who would like to help..."

Coleman sees the major issues as the rent situation in Amherst, the proposed new sewage plant, and the environment. But he is running, he says, because "I didn't see any other students running, and we ought to be represented." The election is Feb. 11.

Pollution Controls Imposed On Industrial Power Plants

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government, administering a big dose of "preventive medicine" against air pollution, imposed emission standards Tuesday on new and modified plants in five industrial categories.

Standards were applied to new or modified steam generating plants that burn fossil fuels; large solid-waste incinerators; Portland cement plants' nitric acid plants; and sulfuric acid plants.

Existing plants in these and other categories are not covered by the standards but will be subject to antipollution controls under implementation plans now in preparation by the states to meet national air-quality standards.

Federal controls over new plants and plant modifications are required under the Clean Air Act of 1970.

Announcing the first set of standards Tuesday, Environmental Protection Administrator William D. Ruckelshaus said such standards will be set for some 35 to 40 major industries over the next few years.

He called the new-plant standards "the kind of preventive medicine that we have not been applying in the past and that is so necessary if we are to have clean air in this country."

Under the new standards and depending on circumstances, new steam boilers, both for electric generation or industrial steam, could emit particulates dust and smoke at about 2.5 percent of today's usual plant emissions; sulfur compounds about 11 percent of present levels; and nitrogen oxides about 35 percent of present emissions.

EPA officials estimated that customers of such plants would find their product costs increased as much as 9 percent at the most, and usually less than that.

Dr. John T. Middleton, head of EPA's Air Pollution Control Office, estimated the typical household electric bill--around $132 a year--would increase about one dollar a year in affected areas.

Large new incinerators--that is, those burning more than 50 tons of solid waste per day--can emit, under the standards, only 8 percent as much smoke and dust as they would emit without controls.

Middleton said this limit would add less than one dollar a year to the cost, per person served, for a typical city- sized incinerator.

Middleton said EPA has not figured out the total cost to the national economy of applying the new-plant standards.

He said EPA plans to issue new-plant standards for some 18 to 20 additional industrial sectors during the next year.

The next standard-setting is expected in June, he said, and a tentative list now being studied for this purpose includes: petroleum refineries; iron and steel mills; nonferrous smelters including secondary lead, brass and bronze; asphalt batch plants; pulp and paper mills; aluminum reduction plants; and sludge incinerators, not included in Tuesday's standards.

One Million Bengalis Dead

DACCA (AP) — "The whole country is a mass grave. Who knows how many millions have been killed?"

Anywhere between 500,000 and 1-1/2 million Bengalis may have died in all. The exact number probably never will be known; all casualty figures must be speculative.

The police chief of the new People's Republic of Bangla Desh, describing the slaughter in East Pakistan, said Tuesday that mass graves could be uncovered "in every village."

Others killed before the Pakistani surrender lie without burial on the streets and village paths where they died, he added.

"Jackals, vultures and dogs are at them," said the chief, Inspector General Abdul Khalique.

The nine months of bloodshed began last March when Pakistan dispatched troops from the West to crush East Pakistan's independence movement. Thousands of Bengalis were killed in the crackdown. Resistance by rebel guerrillas also cost the lives of Pakistani soldiers-and led to still more killing in retribution for the guerrilla attacks. Bengalis assert some of the bloodiest antirebel retribution came from local volunteer militiamen called razakars.

Those elements were blamed for killing and mutilating about 20 Bengali intellectuals whose abused bodies were found four days ago in pits on the outskirts of Dacca. The dead included Nizammuddin Ahmed, who had served as a part-time correspondent for the AP in more peaceful days.

But now, Chief Khalique believes, the bloodshed is finally over and peace can return to this tortured region under a Bangla Desh administration.

There has been no evidence of widespread revenge killing by Bengalis since the cease-fire.

To prevent revenge attacks, the Bengali administrators, with the assistance in some instances of the Indian army, have begun to disarm the Mukti Bahini irregulars.

One of the big fears is that the guns may be used later in struggles or political control. Already there is propaganda evidence of a power struggle between Maoists and pro-Moscow elements, although no violence has been reported.

Five days after the capitulation of the Pakistan army insured self-government for East Bengal, shops are opening again and some food is beginning to trickle into the markets.

The few Bengali administrators who have arrived so far face staggering difficulties administering the 75 million people of the world's newest andeighth most populous nation.

Nine months of insurrection and 13 days of all-out war ruined the economy. Also collapsed are civil administration, food distribution, transport, fuel supplies, and law and order.

So far Bangla Desh is still without a government.

U.S.-British Alliance Changing

HAMILTON, Bermuda (AP) — President Nixon and Prime Minister Edward Heath have ended man-to-man talks that saw the end of the old style U.S.-British partnership.

The two leaders, however, pledged Tuesday to go on working together in defense of shared interests around the world.

They agreed to cautious approach toward negotiations with the Soviet Union on European security. They examined the possibility of a conference on European security that the Russians have been plugging for, and the issue of East-West force reductions.

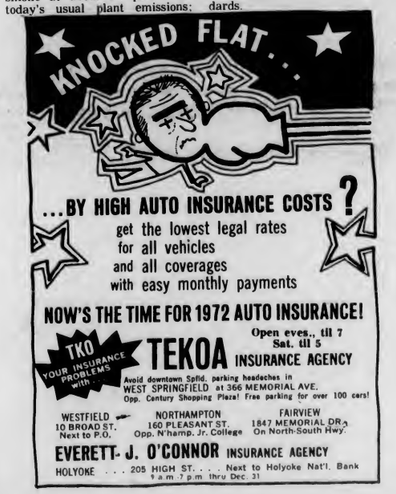
The two nations also will continue to cooperate in such fields as nuclear weaponry.

Nixon was to return to Washington Tuesday evening.

New firm decisions emerged from the two-day meeting, the third in a series of six arranged by the President in advance of his journeys to Peking and Moscow next year.

It was an occasion for straight talking in top secret by heads of government who think that for their two countries the time has come for some parting of the ways.

"It is even more vital," the President told Heath in an after-dinner toast aboard the British missile destroyer Glamorgan Monday night "that we work together...whatever our journeys may be, together or separately."



In keynoting the mood of the occasion, Heath said: "A healthy relationship can withstand change."

Behind these words lay several realities that were at the heart of the eight hours of exchanges between the President and prime minister Monday and Tuesday.

This was how officials of both countries saw the background:

—A fundamental change in the world outlook of the United States is taking place. Abroad it is moving toward its own new and direct arrangements with China and the Soviet Union. Shaping up at home is a massive shift of resources from foreign commitments to the problems of race, poverty, the cities. It means America's old partners now must accept the fact that they can no longer count on the United States the way they have been doing since World War II.

—Coinciding with this change, Britain is moving into full partnership with the Continental members of an expanding European Common Market. This in time will involve a near total alignment of British political, military and economic endeavors.

By DAVID NYHAN

John V.Lindsay is the George Plimpton of politics, a tall and elegant rich kid who takes a political fling with the diffidence and elan made marketable by the original Paper Lion.

Given the crumbling of New York City's clay foundations these days, you have to credit Lindsay with good instincts in seeking the fastest way out of the mayor's job. There is, after all, nothing else to run for next year by the presidency.

From being a silk-stockinged congressman to becoming the top urban banana, Lindsay's come a long way, but the scar tissue accumulated along the way is beginning to emerge though the media-enhanced patina of charm and elegance.

The Knapp Commission hearings in New York on corruption in the city's Police Department, and the Lindsay administration's handling of same, give pause to those who envision Lindsay as President trying to ride herd, say, on the Defense Department.

Lindsay's enemies in his newly-adopted Democratic Party are screaming "old politics," meanwhile, at the Lindsay associations in New York, that are conduits for campaign contributions and patronage. The sharpies assert that Lindsay was treated generously by those who received $27 million in the municipal loan program, and that judgeships are being dangled in return for delegate support.

There can be no gain-saying the fact that Lindsay is the preeminent urban spokesman, a role ignored to date by the Federal government's fiscal spigot-turners.

But of Lindsay's presidential ambitions, one has to ask if he is speaking for megalopolis, or from megalomania.

Sure, there's no law against running for President. But has he got a chance, or is he just in there to: A. Raise the urban issue; B. Give himself some national exposure; C. Place himself in line for a cabinet post if another Democrat wins; D.Win the No. 2 spot; D. Build a base to run for governor in 1974; F. Run for President because it's the fun thing to do?

Lindsay is one step ahead of disaster as he flees New York, in the eyes of those whom Lindsay apologists dismiss as purveyors of "anti-Lindsay chic."

As a man who admits his conduct of public affairs owes a debt to the theater, and proprietor of professional-level skills in the New York media game, Lindsay's presidential pretensions leave one with the feeling that it's all sort of tongue-in-cheek, this presidential business. Then you have the nagging doubt, maybe this fellow doesn't know the difference between reality and illusion.

John Vliet Lindsay recognizes a goodly amount of kindred spirit in our own Kevin Hagan White. Before Sen. Edmund S. Muskie came to call on White last week, Lindsay telephoned with the same request: Endorse me. His Honor in Boston is presently weighing the merits of His Honor in New York as opposed to the senator from Maine. White is reported "scrupulously neutral" pending deciding which way to jump.

Lindsay operativespredict the formal

Lindsay operatives predict the formal announcement in time for the Florida Primary, which comes one week after New Hampshire's March 7 kickoff. The present battle plan: Florida, Wisconsin, Massachusetts, Indiana, Oregon, California, and New York.

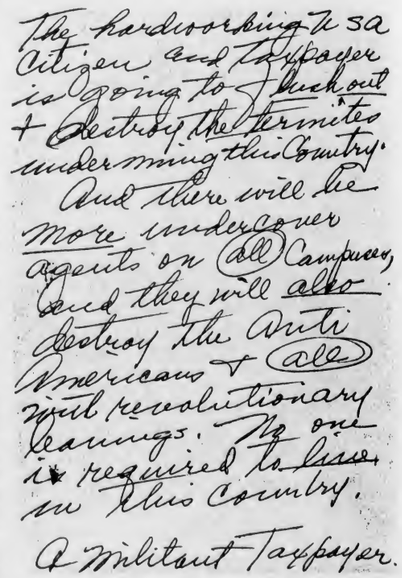
Lindsay is unique in being the only Democrat to spring full-blown from a manger, or almost, at any rate. Remember, if you will, the way he announced he was deserting Republican ranks.

He was out in Utah, or someplace like that, at a stable, buying a horse for his daughter, when he phoned Richard Aurelio, his deputy, and told him to set up the news conference.

You might say that if Lindsay didn't pop out of a manger, he did start from a stable.

Anyway, it was the Teddy Roosevelt ethic come full circle-a silk-stocking Republican deciding to join the Democratic rabble whilst communing with nature on a dude ranch.

However forlorn his prospects in his new party, Lindsay can still make some pretty big waves, possibly here in Massachusetts, maybe out in the big apple, California.



Closer to home, he has more trouble. As neighboring New Jersey state Democratic chairman Salvatore Bontempo says, "we haven't felt anything for Lindsay-we know him too well."

They Really Are Out There

(Ed. note-The post card pictured below was sent to us all the way from Lincoln, Nebraska. Our only reply: Merry Christmas to you, too.

The Joys Of Christmas

It's interesting to observe Bob Corry and Ann Gurnett make asses out of themselves on this subject of sexuality. It is only apparent that Corry was asking for it when he went up to Robin Morgan to engage the affluent radical sheik young lady, in a conversation. If he felt like smacking her in the chops he should have. And he should have expected to receive the penalty for striking a lady that the court usually hands down in such cases.

The fact that a person is free is not based on whether he is male or she is female. It is based on the fact that he is a human being, and a sex should not have to feel it necessary to adopt the stereotype of the other sex to emphasize its own rights.

The argument of Bob Corry and Ann Gurnett is asinine. As students and individuals we should be able to stand together for a common cause. Professors can afford the luxury of prejudice, that is intellectual prejudice, and all the evils that this creates. Some have felt the need to pass judgment in any discipline that they fancy at a given moment. They of course feel secure in their Ivory Towers of tenure. The education of the educated becomes more difficult as the sclerotic tissue around the brain calcifies with the years of security in the Ivory Tower.

Some professors have even been know to pass judgment on the professional practices of other individuals in wholly unrelated fields. It is unfortunate, but the student is without recourse. Appeals to reason usually fail, because the professors in question usually feel that reason and rationalism is solely their domain. Caldified and sclerotic as it is in their heavy heads.

To get back to the issue at hand. Few things are as bad in this world as a liberal who is liberal because he can afford to be. Fair weather liberals who discover a cause are sickening.

Which brings us to another point. Which sex has the intellect? To listen to Ms. Morgan, child star of "I Remember Mama" and presently starring in "I Remember Da Da as a MA MA Fhu Fhu," you'd get the impression that it was a male.

Have you ever seen that ad on the tube where a young married goes out to his mail box and the thing barks like a dog? Obviously representing the bills contained in it, the barks force the young responsible family man to the local credit union where he is met by a happy understanding face. After this understanding scene, where the mail box pukes up the bills on the understanding gentleman money lender's face, we see the young married happily going to his mail box and retrieving a newspaper or magazine, regarding the world with a happy face.

Bullshit!

What you don't see is the scene that immediately follows where the happy young married goes to his mail box and finds his house, car and family attached because the understanding gentleman's interest for understanding is 30% annually. Did the happy young married consider this a fair profit ratio when he went to the loan company to borrow money for bills he already had difficulty paying? Probably not.

There's one gimmick used by the finance companies that states, "Don't you feel you should give your family the joys of Christmas this year?" After which we hear a little girl in the background reciting something. We're not sure whether this family head takes out the loan to purchase "joy" or not. The ad doesn't tell us, but I like to think that he doesn't. He and his family finding the joy of Christmas within themselves, and not in something with a ribbon on it.

The joys of Christmas are a subject in themselves. There is something about this season that makes man regard his fellow man with a less critical eye. Something that stops nations from killing the people for a period of time. It would be unusual to stand out in space and through elapsed time see the world in its orbit speeding around the sun, the light of war a dull glow that disappears for an instant at each revolution.

..MERRY CHRISTMAS

Parade Of Ignorance

To the Editor:

I would like to take just a minute of the community's time to reply to the vindictive misinformation submitted for publication by George Vasquez (on Dec. 16) and Melinda Parry (Dec. 21). The General Court orginally announced to the parties involved in McEleney v. Bouffard that it would issue a writ of mandamus to the student attorney general. This action occurred in late October. Before the decision was rendered in written form and before the writ was formally issued, Senate President Lee H. Sandwen filed with me a formal petition for the reopening of the case.

The Student Senate charged basic discrimination against students in the present parking system, which if it were true would form a substantive issue in the case which had not previously been considered; we reopened the case. The information contained in the Senate brief consisted in the main of unsubstantiated charges (subjective arguments). Since the General Court is a student court and protection of our peers and our community is one of our weightiest responsibilities we undertook to investigate the charges of the Senate.

Approximately one week ago the General Court meet, reviewed the data gathered and reached a decision. This decision then had to be put in written form, reviewed and commented upon by each Justice of the Court and finally rewritten. I announced the decision of the General Court on the DAY of the final draft was written. I announced the decision of the General Court from handwritten notes BEFORE there was even time to have it typewritten. So Miss Parry and Mr. Vasquez how did you "know" what the decision of the Court would be? The plain answer is you did not know. You did not know but you paraded your ignorance before this community disguised as valid information. This type of use of your right to free speech is DISGUSTING not to mention unfair to our peers who rely on the Collegian to provide them with facts about what is happening around us.

Let me assure the campus community that not one cent will be expended from student tax money to collect overdue fines. The original decision never formally issued called for use of student monies to inform delinquent persons of 1) the intent to collect and 2) the possibility of paying on campus rather than in Northampton. This I contend would have been using tax money to safeguard student rights, a worthy aim. We have however found an alternative source of funds and for that reason no student funds will be required to implement the decision of the Court.

Blind Liberalism

To the Editor:

Blind liberalism is a term that I use to define blind acceptance of radical or liberal viewpoints. The political and social implications of unquestioning acceptance of radical or liberal viewpoints is, obviously, equally dangerous to the implications of unquestioning acceptance of conservative viewpoints. The effects of blind liberalism reach beyond the political scene into the world of life styles and fads. There are many fads gaining great acceptance among the radical-liberal self proclaimed counterculture element of today's youth.

One fad especially popular on the UMass campus is the wearing of a backpack. Many students can be seen throughout the campus with backpacks that are either empty or contain only one or two books. These plastic members of the counterculture are going to such great lengths to wear a backpack because the wearing of a backpack signifies a manifestation of the Easy Rider, totally free, uninhibited cross-country hitchhiking, radical- liberal vagabond ideal that is so highly respected among the youth culture.

Another popular practice among the radical-liberal element is the adoption of an unnatural accent, either an accent somewhat similar to the Harvard intellectual accent or the spaced out freak accent. Many staunch supporters of radical-liberal doctrine have adopted the Harvard intellectual accent possibly because of their worship of Dr. Timothy Leary but probably because of their ridiculous belief that the radical-liberal viewpoint to a political or social question is the intellectual viewpoint. The spaced out freak accent proves that the speaker is liberal enough to be high on marijuana. The accent consists of a slow speech with many sentences beginning with like and ending with man. I fail to see how being of liberal political persuasion or high on marijuana can affect one's speech.

Though I have respect for any political opinion and any manner of life style, I have no respect for anyone, liberal or conservative, who unquestioningly adopts a particular opinion or life style. With the massive influx of radicals and liberals being sent out into society, particularly the educational system, the dangerous implications of blind liberalism will certainly have to be reckoned with in the future.

Editorial Points

As long as the campus police are going to continue to wear guns, the least they could do is turn on those little green lights that they had put on the roofs of their cars. They were probably put there to show that they have a better idea.

Christmas is the time when a lot of books go home with good intentions only to return to their shelves at UMass unopened in January.

About the only thing that distinguishes these lines from trash is that they are the least editorial points of the year. And even that may not make a difference.

In Paul's Mind And Mine

Those things most outside life are those most worth ones living.
The tree unseen in rationale, unspoken unto or of;
the stream not flowing near the ungrowing tree, and the unhoneyed hive
there hanging...
all most beautiful for not having been spoken.
Only one beast can speak,
and only he knows this.
Inmortality ill-conceived,
if but conceived at all.
Laws no longer, once discovered by him who would they fall.
Unnatural noises, most ugly... or so defined.
Who really knows what is ugly?
To return to the glen that is not there...
only in Paul's mind,
and mine.
The moss that really rumbles
in growth, and grows to incredible heights...
why all that remains relative can not be left so.
Are there really rights?
The ever-greens are still green,
the browns, still brown,
the grays...
and the peaceful days,
and the violent...
The pool to which all flows, and not the sea,
is answer to the riddles
of what must be.
The clover in the field next door,
four-leafed and every stem.
The dandy-lion puffs, but dreams of seasons long to be remembered, and love forever sleeping...
only in Paul's mind,
and mine.
That underwater city,
a true menagerie of life,
in true life.
A mirroring of life outside, with lichen trees and tadpole serpents, and underwater birds that fly.
The hunter, and the hunted, and the passer-by...
no innocence here,
only in Paul's mind,
and mine.

Student Files Bills On Pollution, Liquor

UMass Student Robert A. Hall has filed the following bills in the Massachusetts House through Representative Martin A. Linsky's office for the 1972 session. He is a government major at UMass, class of 1972, and is considering running for the State Senate next year in the 3rd Worcester Senate District.

An act to protect the waters of the Commonwealth.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

SECTION 1. Notwithstanding any special or general law to the contrary, the sale of dyed paper products within the commonwealth, including and limited to tissue, toilet paper, napkins, and towels shall be prohibited.

SECTION 2. Violation of this law shall be punishable by a fine of one hundred dollars.

SECTION 3. This law shall not become effective until September 1, 1972.

An act to permit 18 year olds to buy beer and wine.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Section 34 of chapter 138 of the general laws is hereby amended by inserting after section 34c the following new selection.

Section 34d. Notwithstanding provisions of this chapter to the contrary persons eighteen years of age shall be permitted to purchase beer, malt beverages and wine provided said beverages are 20% alcohol or less by volume.

An act to reduce pollution of the atmosphere.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Notwithstanding any general or special law to the contrary, a distinction shall be made between leaded gasoline and non-leaded gasoline for the purpose of taxation. The tax levied on leaded gasoline shall be increased by one cent per gallon, and the tax levied on non-leaded gasoline shall be reduced two cents per gallon. Any funds raised, hereby, shall be used to reduce, eliminate, or control air pollution.

An act to make legislative pay raises subject to voter approval.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Notwithstanding any special or general law to the contrary, any legislative pay raise of more than three percent per year shall be subject to voter approval at the next general election.

Cambodian Garrison Relieved

SAIGON (AP) — A Cambodian task force broke through Tuesday to relieve a garrison besieged for 10 days on the northeast Cambodian front.

Field reports said the Cambodian troops driving north had reached the garrison at Prakham, 45 miles northeast of Phnom Penh, the Cambodian capital.

The rescue force was part of a 7,000-man operation aimed at clearing the blockades of both Prakham and the neighboring town of Taing Kauk. The latter also has been cut off for 10 days.

The Cambodian campaign follows a disastrous 20,000-man operation on the northeast front which ended early this month after Communist-led forces had chopped up government supply and communications routes.

American aircraft were reported to have made heavy strikes in support of the new operation, which began Monday.

In Phnom Pheh, the roar of heavy bombing could be heard, and officials said an enemy force was building up only 12 miles to the east of the city.

In eastern Cambodia two more U.S. helicopters were shot down and six crewmen wounded while supporting a South Vietnamese drive against enemy staging areas, the U.S. Command reported in Saigon.

The command said an Army light observation helicopter went down Monday afternoon and a UH 1 aircraft was shot down Tuesday.

The latest losses raised to 8,060 the number of U.S. aircraft reported lost to all causes in Indochina since Jan. 1, 1961.

In Laos, defenders of the northern Plain of Jars were reported under attack after fleeing to the south and west. The strategic plain was captured by the North Vietnamese and Pathet Lao Monday night after four American supersonic jets were shot down. A Peking broadcast monitored in Tokyo quoted Laotian Communists as claiming nearly 1,000 defending troops had been wiped out Sunday in one part of the Plain of Jars. An earlier report from Laos indicated that 500 had been killed in three days of heavy fighting.

Antiaircraft fire was said to have prevented evacuation of the dead and wounded as the defenders fled.

The plain, a key area on supply routes from North Vietnam to all parts of Laos, has changed hands four times in 2-1/2 years.

The U.S. Coast Guard ended active participation in Vietnam naval operations by turning over two cutters to the South Vietnamese navy. Seven support-type Coast Guard craft remain to be turned over.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

Aquarius persons are inventive, generally considered unorthodox, capable of having friends with diversified interests. These persons are usually in the forefront, taking a chance on hunches and special abilities. The Aquarius native is especially good, in a financial sense, for those born under Capricorn. Aquarius harmonizes with Libra, Gemini and Sagittarius. Aquarius often is drawn to Leo, but it could be a matter of opposites attracting each other. Aquarius and Aries formerly were considered harmonious. But, of late, such relationships have not shown great lasting power.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Money interests require special attention. Be conservative where finances are concerned. Remember commitments. Avoid extravagance. Prestige may be on line. Advice comes from many directions. Be selective.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Friends may respond in manner which surprises. Be self reliant. Many now come to you with their problems. Be concerned, but don't push aside all of your own interests. You have no need to borrow trouble.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be ready for added responsibility, additional assignment. Nothing comes easy. But you can achieve added recognition. Adhere to your own style. Be original, independent. Mate, partner could be misinformed.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Hold off on journeys, if possible. Long range plans now are subject to change. You have misgivings about what appeared to be sure thing. Pay heed to inner voice. If you don't know do nothing.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Those you depended on in past may now have other interests. This is not meant as personal affront--and don't take it that way. What is required is adjustment. Work methods and relationships will change.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Lie low. Play waiting game. Obtain hint from Cancer message. Those who want you to be your own lawyer may be exploiting you. Know this: respond accordingly. Protect interests--get promises in writing.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Avoid direct approach. Being diplomatic now works to special advantage. Be ready for change, variety of experiences. Necessary to be analytical--Find out why. You could make significant discovery.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Investment procedures require review. Calculated guessing is not good enough. Qualified persons must be consulted. If this you do, loss and embarrassment are avoided. Young person is sincere but misguided.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Partnerships, special relationships may be under cloud. Wait out storm; go with tide. Avoid self-deception. See situations, persons as they actually exist. Put stop to mere wishful thinking.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Forces now tend to be scattered. You may be trying to do too much simultaniously. Aim at primary goal. Side issues should be put aside. Another Capricorn plays prominent role. Adhere to prescribed program.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): End association with project, person which drains money and emotions. Be frank. Direct approach will gain you respect and bring results. Look to future instead of brooding about what might have been.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): There are obstacles, but you now are capable of overcoming them. Leo figures prominently. Conflict could exist between home and professional duties. Obtain benefit of fresh viewpoint. Listen and learn.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are a natural rebel. Many associations, relationships recently changed. If single, you may soon be heading down matrimonial aisle. Married or single, added pressure and responsibility is due.

'The Black Intelligentsia Must Unite'

The first black intellectual retreat in the black liberation movement took place in secrecy and seclusion last weekend near San Francisco.

The three-day event involved twenty leading black intellectuals and activists from throughout the United States. They discussed and analyzed black strategy in such major areas as culture, economics, military, technology, organization, government and politics, law, family and education.

Michael Thelwell, Chairman of the Afro-American Studies Department, and Johnnetta B. Cole, an Associate Professor in Afro-American Studies and Anthropology attended the conference.

Dr. Nathan Hare, former black studies director at San Francisco State College, now president of the Black World Foundation and publisher of THE BLACK SCHOLAR, hailed the retreat as "historic" and "but one first step in a new and emerging role for black intellectuals toward a black cultural renaissance." What follows is Mr. Hare's speech to the body. It has been slightly edited to meet space requirements.

We come now to the culmination of the Black World Foundation's black intellectual retreat, which though clearly historic, is recognized by us as but a first step in a new awakening of the black intelligentsia and the emergence of a black cultural renaissance.

Culture shapes the thinking of a people, the collective mind. Historically, whenever the oppressor came into contact with other races, he had two basic weapons--the technological (to control the body) and the ideological (to control the mind). Thus in all freedom struggles, the mind has been a chief instrument in the seizure of revolutionary power. In the black movement in America, this awakening of the mind has occurred in sometimes faltering but nonetheless relentless stages.

The oppressor retaliated with a concerted effort to create a submissive type of thinking, to shape an abnormal kind of human being, to corral the black psyche. It fell to the North to eliminate slavery, but throughout slavery and the Civil War there were rumblings of black resistance.

There was, for instance, militant nationalism, both revolutionary and reactionary, in the antebellum era, with the resolutions from all-black conferences ringing relevant to the present day. Throughout the recent past, such conferences and their resolutions have been duplicated, as we passed through the long and fruitless efforts to assimilate, followed by the black power movement and the age of black rhetoric. But we now know that rhetoric is not enough to create a revolutionary mood.

To create a revolution, it is first necessary to evolve a strong ideology, to mold a clear picture of where we are going, what we are going to achieve and what kind of society we long for. Otherwise we may merely effect a coup or some other transfer of power with one oppressor substituted for another and ruling in the same old basic way.

We are caught now in the most crucial stage in the struggle for black liberation--the transitional stage between mass awakening and black consciousness and the stage of actual revolutionary confrontation--with all its frustrations, confusions and challenges.

Whenever the oppressed, under such conditions, become discouraged because of the strength and brutality of the enemy, they turn upon themselves, squabbling over this or that theory while leaving the oppressor free to do just about anything he chooses. This is exactly what the enemy desires, and his representatives among our people will encourage it. What we must remember is that the oppressor is the enemy, and he attacks while we argue and continue to play bid whist.

We must have unity of struggle, understanding that unity of struggle does not necessarily require full unity of opinion. Unity does not mean that you relinquish your principles in favor of somebody else's, or your goals, but it is necessary to remember, and never forget, that what we have is a common destiny, a common problem, and a common duty--to combat the oppressor and achieve black liberation.

Thus we must shape a unity of struggle even when there is, or can be, no unity of opinion. For, while it is true that we might grapple with the oppressor more were there not so much contention among ourselves, the problem is rather that we have been too much divided in rhetoric while desiring, but failing to clarify for ourselves, our common quest for black liberation. Rhetoric alone does not unite and rhetoric alone does not accomplish much. We must have unity of struggle with or without rhetoric. For ours is a race struggle (with emphasis on the struggle), though it also is more than that. It is a struggle for a new kind of world, a new society, and therefore a cultural struggle. Our notion of culture transcends class division and involves an entire way of life of which culture in the esthetic sense, the arts, is merely a by-product. It is possible to experience tyranny and oppression as a member of a black nation-state in Africa or wherever, just as it is virtually certain that a people can be submerged in a white socialist country.

In Algiers one is struck by the way in which struggle against oppression has been institutionalized, bubbling forth from the lips and bodies, the total spirit, of the Algerian people--expressed in informal graffiti on public walls as well as formal posters in the lobbies of the finest buildings, the official utterances of newspapers and government officials. Yet, although the struggle for liberation was institutionalized, the culture of the oppressor (including of course his economic system) was largely adopted despite a so-called socialist ideal. Thus it has been easier for the return and continued encroachment by the French and their fellow imperialists.

In the struggle for black liberation, the black intelligentsia must develop new and appropriate norms and values, new institutional structures, and, to be effective in this endeavor, we must be guided by a new and viable black ideology.

The black intelligentsia can no longer remain set apart--with trained black scholars secluded in ivory towers or ebony towers, and the street intellectual stymied by a disdain for the kind of scientific analysis necessary to evolve a clear plan or theory, a viable black ideology. We must unite the academy and the street. We must pull the traditional scholar into the arena of black liberation and permit the street intellectual a new and significant role. We must have a call to arms of all the black intelligentsia.

All men of thought and ideas, regardless of particular ideology, must rally together around what could be the last chance to resist permanent enslavement and an approaching genocide.

We cannot go on forever like cheerful black mummies, wagging a militant tongue in stereophonic rhetoric, as our only weapon, and relying on dark sunshades to hide our timid hearts, imperviously sprinkling water on reformist smoke while the flames of exploitation simmer untouched.

We are not a race of sheep, and we cannot allow ourselves to be pushed around, to be low duck in the shooting gallery, to be demoralized and dehumanized, to war and bicker with one another like a pack of blind dogs.

A few years ago it was the fashion among black militants to speak of a willingness to die for freedom. Today we know that revolution is more about living than it is about dying, that in these times black men are dying for a freedom that does not necessarily follow in their wake. We are coming around now to the notion that we must live, live to fight and fight to live and all that that implies, in whatever direction.

It is not enough to clinch our fists, to wear militant garb, or generally to acquire the most menacing look; not enough to read black history, listen to jazz music, smoke pot, or write down pretty poetry, author weighty books or revolutionary songs. Instead, in the words of Frantz Fanon, we "must fashion the revolution with the people. And if you fashion it with the people, the songs will come by themselves, and of themselves."

And they are coming-along with increased repression. Our crisis grows stronger with each passing day while we continue to vacillate between the norms and models placed before us by our oppressors. They even go so far as to instigate and sustain wars abroad, both hot and cold, in order to decimate the colored peoples of the world, pitting us one against the other.

The oppressor is giving us forewarning. All it takes for evil to triumph--it well has been said--is for good men to do nothing. The hour is growing late, but tardiness (as over against never) is prompt enough. Men bow down through fear and timidity then fall back upon the plea that we are forced to do so. Power implies some form of collaboration on the part of those victimized. There cannot be tyrannical rulers without people who, for whatever reason, are willing to be so ruled. It is said that might makes right, but not for long because eventually it becomes necessary to transform that might into right in the minds of those oppressed) or somebody will begin to question the right of that might.

We must understand that in resisting oppression, we have nothing to lose, as Karl Marx put it, but our chains. By maiming or jailing our bodies in desperation moves, the oppressor cannot contain our ideas for freedom and human good. Maiming and killing they have always done, throughout the long, hard centuries of oppression. But a race is going forward nonetheless, arm in arm together though not always in full step. And we have gone too far to let our struggle slip back.

We must realize, day by day, that we will either help make our own history, or somebody less benevolent will make our history for us. We must help to define our lives, our own reality, our own future.

We need a call to arms of all the black intelligentsia. Now is the time to wage a new black intellectual offensive, with the deadliness of a black blitzkrieg, sweeping the country like a thousand giant Watts.

We must seize again the revolutionary initiative against the world's most atrocious enemy. In so doing, we will not only move forward the black cultural renaissance; we will have an impact on the entire cemetery of Western civilization.

Hofstra Stuns Redmen, 60-56

By EARLE BARROLL

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y.-Label it an upset...and a big one at that. Hofstra found the Redmen in a state of insomnia here last night and put the Redman attack to sleep midway into the first half and then hung on at the end for a 60-56 stunner over UMass.

Daily Collegian

SPORTS

This was without a doubt the poorest performance of the season for the Redmen and an opportunistic one for the Flying Dutchmen who evened their record to 4-4 while the Redmen suffered their second straight setback after opening with six wins in a row.

When a team needs to run and needs to go to the boards to win and doesn't, then it deserves to lose...this was the UMass problem last night.

"We didn't play at all tonight," said a disappointed Jack Leaman after the game. It was a real flat performance. We played ten guys and they stood around.

"We did nothing inside. Skinner was scared and Peters, Austin and McLaughlin were useless. When we did to to the boards, we hurt them, but we didn't do this often."

Hofstra on the other hand didn't stand around and wait for the Redmen to get the tempo going. They took the initiative and in between turnovers, fouls and missed free throws, threw in enough points to come out on top.

"We told Hofstra we were good," Leaman said, "but they didn't buy it and kicked the heck out of us."

The only UMass player who received the applaudits from the coach was Chris Coffin, but he didn't stay around enough to help out as he fouled out with almost nineteen minutes left to play. To that point, he was more than one-third of the entire UMass offense with 12 points and was doing his usual reputable job on the boards.

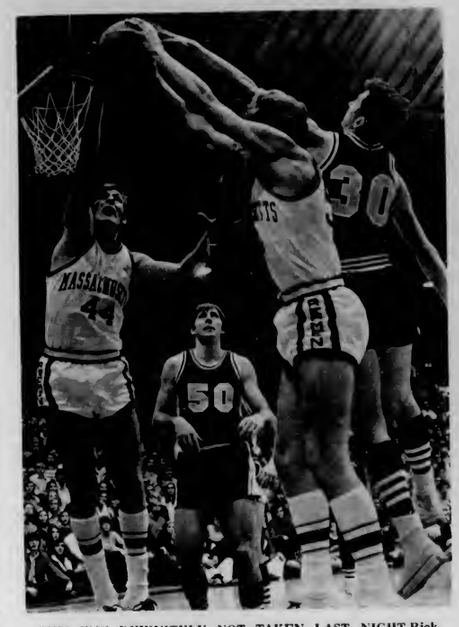
"Chris tried to play all five guys tonight," Leaman noted.

It was evident from the beginning that the Redmen were in for a long night. Their movement was not there, their turnovers were numerous and Hofstra was getting second and third shots on offense, from their big front line of Dale Davis (6'4), Dave Bell (6'8) and Quintas Brower (6'6).

Both teams came out pressing, but the Flying Dutchmen were moving more and the tempo was theirs. Leaman kept shuffling his players in and out of the lineup to try to get things going, but it went for not.

With the score tied at 15, Hofstra sprinted out and opened up a 39-30 lead by halftime. Brower and Davis both had a dozen points.

They opened their widest margin of the game, 13 points, 45-32 right after Coffin fouled out in the second half and it was a struggle for the Redmen to get back in. Their biggest enemy was themselves.



Halfway into the last period the Redmen made their move and came from 12 back to within two, 56-54, with five minutes to play. Rick Pitino tried his best to get the Redmen moving and did a fine job of it.

But then the game reverted back to the previous mayhem and three minutes went by without anything resembling a coherent offensive movement and the Redman enemy changed hands from themselves to the clock.

Brower gave Hofstra its final points on a jumper with a minute to play. The Flying Dutchmen went into a freeze but in keeping with the style of the game turned it over on a travel. But the Redmen were unable to do anything with it and the final score of 60-56 was history.

Next stop for the Redmen is Monday in Philadelphia at the Quaker City Invitational Tournament. First round opponent will be powerful Villanova at 9 p.m. at the Palestra.

"We've got to get better for Villanova," was about as much as could be said...it came from a concerned coach, Jack Leaman.

Skaters At Williams In Winter Tourney

By BILL BALLOU

It is becoming a trend in professional hockey to send a tired player to Florida in the middle of the season to try and bolster his sagging health. The Red Wings did it with Gordie Howe, the Blues with Glenn Hall, and the Providence Reds with Ron Garwasiuk.

Well, the UMass varsity hockey team also has its own mid-season "vacation", as in the space of a month they only play four games, all of them away from home. Three of these games come in the space of three days when the pucksters travel to the exotic vacation spot of Williamstown, Mass., to participate in the Williams Tournament.

The tourney begins on December 28 and includes four teams, UMass, Oswego, Colby, and the host club, Williams. All of these teams are Division II clubs and this fact makes the event doubly important for the Redmen. If Coach Jack Canniff's skaters can come away with three victories, their record in Division II will stand at nine wins and no losses, putting them in a commanding position to take top spot in the Division playoff scramble. Three losses however would drop them to 6-3 and all of a sudden Division II would have a race again.

The chances of the Redmen sweeping the series are considerably better than the odds on their dropping all three. Their first opponent, Oswego, did not have a particularly good season last year but are young and have a year's more experience. This game is December 28 and starts at 4:30 P.M.

The next night at the same time the Colby Mules provide the competition and hopefully they won't pull the same trick as they did last year, when the Redmen went north riding a wave of victories and ended up being walloped 8-2 by the Mules in the Colby rink.

The final game on this important trip is against the host team Williams and they'll be doing all they can to make the UMass stay unpleasant. These two teams have already met once before this season and the result was an easy 8-1 decision for UMass at Orr Rink. But anybody who's looking for a repeat of that score had better turn his eyes elsewhere because this is going to be a tough one. 8-1 or no 8-1, Williams is not going to look bad at its own tournament.

Canniff knows this only too well and says, "Have you ever seen Williams in their own rink? They're an entirely different team. This one is going to be tough."

"This one" starts at 7:30 on December 30 and should be the feature game of the tournament.

That's it as far as hockey goes for about three weeks and the Redmen are in for a rude start to the second half of their season. On January 19, they travel to Boston and beautiful new Walter Brown Rink to take on the best there is, Boston University. To say that UMass rates as underdogs would possibly be the understatement of the decade.

A week later the Redmen finally return to home ice for a game against cross-town rival Amherst. This is again a Division II game and it will mark the start of a stretch drive that many people think could carry the Redmen all the way to a Divisional championship.

But first the Williams Tournament. Three wins would be a nice belated Christmas present for Jack Canniff.

Stanford Duo Tops On Offense

NEW YORK (AP) — John Brodie and Jim Plunkett, two former Stanford quarterbacks at the opposite ends of the pro age and experience spectrum, were named Offensive Players of the Week in the National Football League by The Associated Press Tuesday.

The selection of the two players to share the honors came after Brodie led the San Francisco 49ers to the National Conference West title and Plunkett directed the New England Patriots to an upset victory over the Baltimore Colts.

Brodie, 36-year-old, 15-year veteran, passed for three touchdowns and scored the decisive fourth on a 10-yard run as the 49ers defeated Detroit 31-27 Sunday. The touchdown passes brought his career total to 202--as he became only the seventh quarterback in history to exceed 200.

Plunkett, 23-year-old rookie, completed 10 of 17 passes for 170 yards, including an 88-yarder to Randy Vataha that broke the game open late in the fourth quarter, as the Patriots upended the Colts 21-17. That gave Plunkett 19 TD passes, the second best mark in history by a rookie.

But Plunkett might never had tried the pass resulting in the touchdown to Vataha if it hadn't been for some advice from Brodie, dispensed after the 49ers beat the Patriots 27-10 in the seventh game of the season.

"Plunkett is great but he has to take over the Patriots' offense," Brodie said. "He has to put his own personality into it. He has no weaknesses and he should be unlimited for what he does from here on in."

From there on in, Plunkett took a team that was 2-5 over the first seven games and propelled it to four victories in the final seven games, including the victory over the defending Super Bowl champions last Sunday that came on the Vataha gamble.

The gamble came with 222 left, the Patriots leading just 14-10 and in a third-and-11 situation on their own 12-yard line, Plunkett surprising the Colts' defense by fading back for the long strike to his rookie receiver.

"I took a chance," Plunkett pointed out after the game. And, when he was asked why, replied:

"That's just me. I wanted it. I felt I was ready for it. And we got it."

It had to make Brodie smile.

Also nominated were Dallas running back Duane Thomas and two receivers, Bob Tucker of the New York Giants and Ken Burrow of the Atlanta Falcons.

Pats Wreck Colts' Bonus Clause

NEW YORK (AP) — The Baltimore Colts issued an official statement Tuesday defending their integrity and revealing that their upset defeat by New England cost many players and coaches bonuses promised if the club had won the Eastern Division title in the American Football Conference.

Citing stories suggesting the Colts may have lost to the Patriots because they preferred to meet Cleveland rather than Kansas City in a first-round playoff game, General Manager Don Klosterman issued a statement which said:

"The idea that the world champions would give less than a full effort in order to gain a supposed advantage in playoff competition is repugnant to everyone associated with the Colts, a team widely known as one of character.

"The world champions' loss was a serious one in that it cost them a possible home field advantage in the AFC championship game and the Colts never have lost a playoff or championship in Baltimore. In addition, it prevented numerous Colt players and coaches from receiving bonus payments which had been promised them contractually if Baltimore had won the Eastern Division title."

Klosterman pointed out that much time had been lost preparing for post-season action since the club already had started work on a game plan that would have been used against the Chiefs.

"In general, the Colts suffered many disadvantages as the result of the loss to the Patriots," the statement said. "Coach Don McCafferty summed up the feelings of the Colts when he said: 'I don't want to lose to anybody anytime.' "

Klosterman's statement said stories suggesting otherwise had permitted the "integrity of the Colts and of pro football in general to be questioned through innuendo and distortion," that they did a disservice to the Patriots and belittled the Browns.

The situation involving the Colts arose from the National Football League playoff set-up in which the three divisiontitlists plus the second-place team with the best record in the conference qualifies for post-season play.

Baltimore headed into the final week of the regular season leading AFC East, one-half game ahead of Miami. In the first-round of the playoffs, the Eastern winner is scheduled to meet Western winner Kansas City, 10-3-1, and the runner-up goes against Central winner Cleveland, 9-5.

The Colts fell into the runner-up spot when they lost to the Patriots 21-17 on the last day of the regular season while Miami collected a 27-6 victory over Green Bay.

The winners of the two games--scheduled for Saturday at Kansas City and Sunday at Cleveland--will meet in the AFC championship game Jan. 2. The site of the game will be either Kansas City, Cleveland or Miami. It cannot be Baltimore.

JOE Starts Despite Minor Incidents

By ANNE STADNICKI

The Juvenile Opportunities Extension (JOE) program for institutionalized youth being conducted on the UMass campus for the next four weeks has been marred by two hospital incidents and one runaway since its initiation last week. Governor Francis W. Sargent cast the first of many political overtones to the program when he appeared on campus for a firsthand look and talk with the participants at the public "kick-off" Wednesday.

Two youths aged 15 and 16 were rushed to Cooley Dickinson Hospital last Thursday and Friday respectively after being "mysteriously stricken". A fugitive youth was being sought Saturday; it was believed that he had supplied alcohol to the two hospitalized delinquents.

Larry L. Dye, coordinator of the JOE program at UMass said that the illnesses of the youths were not drug related as originally thought, but "the preliminary indications at this stage of the game suggest that something was placed in the alcohol they had".

JOE is an intensive pre-release program for institutionalized youth in the Department of Youth Services (DYS). Seventy-five "delinquents" were selected from the Lyman and Lancaster Training Schools in Massachusetts to participate with 75 student volunteers who will counsel them on a one to one basis for the month the youths will live at UMass. The purpose of the program is to have the 75 student advocates negotiate for and with their youths with various community agencies for jobs and schooling arrangements as well as exploring family situations and living arrangements.

The Governor has called the program the first step in phasing out institutional care of delinquent teenagers in the state. He termed the project "exciting" at a press conference last week.

State Rep. Robert McGinn (D-Westfield) leveled some criticism at the unique program, however. He charged that the program was much too liberal and that Jerome Miller, DYS Commissioner, was "moving too far, too fast" with the experimental project.

Arnold L. Schuchter, planning director of the DYS in Boston, which oversees the project said after the incidents were reported, "It makes it somewhat awkward and embarrassing to have to have this kind of difficulty, but we'd rather suffer that and make it possible for the youngsters to have a decent and helpful transition back to their own community."

Larry Dye felt that the incident was being given distorted coverage by the media in the light of its political nature. He said, "We can't rely on just rumors."

Program coordinator Ernest P. Reis, the graduate student who established JOE as a Recognized Student Organization (RSO) expressed similar sentiments in an interview last night. He said that publicity was putting pressure on the delinquent youths, whereas they would not have to face it in such a degree if they were located at a training school.

Edward Budelmann of DYS said that a runaway youth at the training school would get nowhere near the publicity the youth in the JOE program has had on and off campus.

Budelmann also said that the UMass community as well as the press has a responsibility to the youths in the JOE program. He noted that the University administration has reacted positively to the program so far. It will be important that the students and others in the community cooperate and not encourage the youths on parole to go wayward, he said.

Budelmann said that it is only because the youths are branded "established delinquents" that the incidents are being "blown up". He referred to last night's vandalism of a vending machine as an example. He said that the same kind of behavior results during freshman week.

Speaking for the RSO staff Budelmann said that "It is significant that a student-sponsored organization is acting as a major force in social change."

Budelmann felt that social change was already taking place, with the evidence being that the fugitive youth being sought Saturday "turned himself in".

On campus Dr. Robert Gage, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs at UMass and supporter of the program, said that he "was not disheartened by this at all".

A Personal View

JOE Program Needed

By JANICE GAMACHE

(Ed. note: Janice Gamache is a Youth Advocate and Administrative Assistant in the JOE program.)

Didi is small for her age–only 4'10". A lot of the other kids call her "Shrimp" in fun. She retorts with a shove or a whack on the arm–this in fun too.

She's really an attractive girl with light brown hair and hazel eyes that dance when she's relating something that turns her on. Someone that doesn't care to look beneath the surface in people would only see the wrestling, only hear the swears that try to convince you of how tough she is.

She's like many of the kids committed to the Department of Youth Services–kids who've been around and seen a lot for their age, who want to make you believe that they're really where it's at and invulnerable to you...who may even take pleasure in seeing that you fear them. But basically, she's like you and every other human being that ever lived. Though she's painted her exterior in defense, she wants you, she wants someone to love, care and understand.

University Volunteers Needed

You may be curious about some of the young faces that you see around campus in the next few weeks. But then, you may have already read about them, or heard, or even seen them on T.V. While most of you were taking exams or away on vacation, a small task force worked many long days setting up what is now the JOE II National Conference on Juvenile Delinquency and Crime, and since then UMass just hasn't been the same.

Starting January 13 and 14 students from Hampshire College and UMass attended pre-conference advocate training--training we would need once the kids got here, and that was not long--Monday, January 17. This day a motorcade of cars left campus at 7 A.M. to drive to the Lyman School in Northboro, and initiate what will hopefully be looked back upon as the beginning of the end.

For on Monday we closed the Lyman School, and in so doing took the first step in abolishing punitive child maintenance and incarceration, and established what we hope to be a successful model of rehabilitation.

The idea is not really new. Westfield Detention Center has been doing basically the same thing for quite some time. What is new is the media's interest in such a program, creating a greater awareness of existing problems and helping to disperse information relevant to possible solutions.

This past Wednesday also saw an influx of new people. Twelve girls from Lancaster School for Girls joined those already at the University from Lyman, Westfield, and the new boys from Roslindale. Here to greet them were Governor Sargent and his wife who spent a few hours talking with them, advocates, staff, and press. Particularly interested in seeing where youth and student heads were at, each discussed present situations and future hopes in great detail. As Governor Sargent expressed his sentiments: "We're making waves here in Mass. I think that the advocates are going to learn and really have a chance to do something for the young people."

This brings us to an aspect of the program that I feel to be a real plus; for once this is not the federal or state government administering to the social needs of the people. People helping people--that's what JOE II is all about. Each visiting youth is paired with a student advocate, one of the main objectives being the development of a personal relationship that affords the student knowledge of the youth's needs and wants. With this awareness of the youth's present position he can then work with him and the staff in designing a program which will hopefully interest, enrich, and satisfy the youth involved.

But in just one week, I think that most or all of our advocates would agree that the rewards involved are not one-sided. Our days are long, our nights much longer. There have been adjustments to make, some of them very difficult, but this is not surprising considering that some of our kids have spent over 6 years removed from society. It will take a long time to soothe the wounds of some, often born without love, and having spent portions of their lives in institutions, surely without love. We're finding that this sense of caring and personal commitment to another human's life is what our conference is all about. After all the politics, headaches, and beaurocratic hassles have been negotiated and resolved, if your real concern is not people, you still have no workable program.

Perhaps one indication of the view that many of the DYS youth themselves hold is expressed by the fact that the conference has absorbed a number of runaway youth and youth who have asked, or whose parents have asked that they be admitted to the program.

One of the problems involved in admitting still more is the fact that it has been very difficult to contact interested University students during the semester break; there are still a limited number of advocate slots available for interested and qualified students. Not all of you will want or be able to help these kids in this way, but you can all help or hurt in the attitude that you choose to adopt in relation to them. You may have an afternoon to give, you may have a smile.

Whatever it is, you may be sure that it is important to someone young, insecure, and maybe just a little anxious about the future.

Search Committee Sets Decision Date

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

The Chancellor Search Committee will be moving into full swing this week and has set March 1 as their goal for making their final recommendations to the Trustees as to who should be the next Chancellor.

Professor Glen Gordon, Chairman of the Committee, said approximately 70 people have been nominated for the post and it is possible that the number will be increased February 7, which is the tentative deadline for making nominations.

Night letters, which are telegrams, have been sent out to people who have been nominated asking them to send their latest resume to the Committee. The Committee will screen the resumes of all candidates interested in the post and will invite qualified nominees on campus for a further screening process.

Gordon said the Committee will recommend to the Trustees a list of candidates who the Committee feels are qualified for the post. Gordon said he is unsure as to what will be the exact number of nominations made to the Trustees, but said the number will be determined at a later date with the Trustees.

A reliable source said that even though the Committee is geared for a national search, the primary candidate is now Acting Chancellor Bromery. He said, "There is one in a million chance that Bromery will not be one of the candidates recommended to the Trustees."

The source said there is strong "anti-Bromery feelings" among the faculty members but said he has not heard a single student member criticize the Acting Chancellor.

Composition of the Search Committee was determined at a special meeting of the Board of Trustees on Friday, October 8 after Chancellor Oswald Tippo resigned. After meeting in executive session, the Board voted that six undergraduates, six faculty members, and two graduate students, all from the Amherst campus, and two trustees, one member of the Deans Council and one alumnus would make up the membership of the Committee.

Venman Named Director

Dr. William C. Venman has been named director of the UMass Division of Continuing Education, it was announced today by UMass Amherst Acting Chancellor R.W. Bromery.

Dr. Venman began the Division in the fall of 1970 and has headed it on an acting basis since then. It started with 256 students; it has increased by about 30 per cent in each of the succeeding semesters.

"We now have 360 part-time students and in our first full year of operation brought over 20,000 people to the Amherst campus to participate in somewhat over 300 institutes, conferences and special courses," Dr. Venman said.

The Division, located in the Campus Center at UMass, is now an educational resource to all people in the state. It has 18 full-time staff members and an equal number of part-time staff, offers its own degree, manages courses for all part-time students at the University and directs workshops, short courses, conferences and institutes.

"The Commonwealth of Massachusetts has invested hundreds of millions of dollars in the establishment of a major state university in Amherst," Dr. Venman said. "The Division of Continuing Education is here to make these facilities and the expertise that exists on this campus available to all the people of the Commonwealth."

Dr. Venman came to UMass in 1962 as assistant to the provost and director of the summer session. He became assistant dean of administration in 1969 and acting director of continuing education a year later.

New Office Created For Transfer Students

Transfer students now have an office of their own.

The Office of Transfer Affairs has been established to deal with the concerns and problems of transfer students "in as humane, realistic and effective a manner as possible," according to the transfer office director, Dr. Ernest W. Beals.

Slightly more than one-fifth of all undergraduates now on campus has come to the University from other institutions of higher learning," Beals said. "The mobility of students from one campus to another is a relatively new phenomenon here in the northeast, and the number doing so is continually rising. The results of a recent survey indicate that there will be approximately 10,100 transfers who will enroll in 58 four-year colleges in Massachusetts in the fall of 1972. This number represents 21.5% of all new student vacancies available in the 58 colleges for the coming academic year. It is anticipated that more than 7,000 students will apply for 1,150 transfer vacancies at UMass-Amherst.

The Office of Transfer Affairs will serve as a general resource center for all matters pertaining to the transfer process, and any student who has any question or problem related to the transfer situation may call or come to the office for assistance. The office is located in Room 208, Whitmore Administration Building. The telephone number is 545-0860.

In addition to serving as a general resource center for transfers, the Office of Transfer Affairs is responsible for the development of a full scale program of articulation for all transfers who enroll at the University. This includes the areas of orientation, credit evaluation, and liaison with the Counseling Center, Financial Aid Office, and Placement Office.

One of the other major functions of the office will be to work with the academic departments on campus and at the community colleges in a cooperative effort to provide smooth transition for the transfer student in academic programs from on institution to the other.

The office will conduct more research on the characteristics and performance of transfers, and also provide more feedback to the sending institutions. There are already workshops and seminars scheduled for personnel from community colleges and the University to discuss and hopefully resolve some of the problems transfers face upon entering the University.

Biharis Move Out

NARAYANGANJ, Bangladesh (AP) - Thirty thousand Biharis, beleaguered for more than a month in the world's largest jute mill, began moving out this weekend under police and Indian army protection.

The Biharis, a hated minority in Bangladesh, previously made up much of the mill's labor force. They have been ordered from their homes in the mill compound to make way for Benglai workers.

The Adamjee jute mill, owned by a West Pakistani family, has been taken over by the Bangladesh government, which hopes to get it running again soon.

Soda Unfreezes; Bubbles Inflate

Inflation continues to take its toll. First it was the penny post card, then it was a pack of gum and now it's the ultimate. It is no longer possible to buy a coke in the Hatch for a dime.

It's the old story of rising food and labor costs. The eight-ounce soft drink which used to cost a dime will be increased to twelve ounces but will now cost 15 cents. The 14-ounce soft drink which once cost 15 cents will now cost 20 cents, but the size of the soft drink will be increased to 16 ounces.

Barry Cohen, chairman of the Food Services Committee of the SUG Board, said the increase in price and size will represent an increase from an average cost of 1.17¢ per ounce to 1.25¢ per ounce. This, said Cohen, will result in an increase of income of over $29,000 per year.

"The price increase was scheduled to be implemented in September of 1971, but due to the economic freeze it is only now going into effect," said Cohen.

The student was given a bit of good news when the SUG Board announced that the Blue Wall would continue to increase its unique and wide variety of entertainment. This evening Clean Living will entertain and tomorrow night the NHL All-Star game will be telecast on a wide screen television. Pizza will be available, and a new 54-foot bar will also be opening.

Bahama Protests Search

MIAMI (AP) — Bahamian officials were reported Sunday to be considering a strong protest to President Nixon because Finance and Education Minister Carlton Francis was bodily searched by U.S. Customs agents in Miami, with approval from Washington.

After the incident Friday at Miami International Airport, Francis returned to Nassau, Saturday and ordered that no Americans be allowed to enter his country. About 200 American tourists had to wait about three hours at Nassau International Airport before his order was lifted. As President Nixon relaxed on a privately-owned Bahama island, Prime Minister Lyndon O. Pindling called a cabinet meeting to discuss the matter.

"We take a very dim view of this and we believe that somebody is behind this," said Preston Albury, a Member of Parliament who was contacted by telephone at Francis' home in Nassau. "We will be making the strongest protest to the President of the United States.

"We will tell the world how one of our ministers was treated in the United States," said Albury, who said he was a "close associate" of Francis.

In Nassau, a spokesman for the U.S. Consulate General confirmed that Francis' baggage was searched when he arrived Friday evening at Miami airport and that later permission was obtained from top customs officials in Washington "to proceed with a body search."

"When Mr. Francis arrived at Miami airport he was stopped by customs officers and his luggage searched," the spokesman said. "At that point they decided they had reasonable cause to search his person.

"Mr. Francis objected and attempted to identify himself and before proceeding further, customs in Miami contacted Washington and were told to proceed," the spokesman added.

He said after several hours Francis was told he was free to go. At the Florida White House at Key Biscayne, Deputy Press Secretary Neal Ball said the White House would have no comment and referred questions to the State Department.

The State Department, however, declined comment, and U.S. Customs officials here and in Washington were unavailable for comment.

Asked why Customs might have taken the unusual precaution of searching a visiting official, the Consulate spokesman in Nassau said he did not know. He said, however, that such officials usually notify the Consulate when they are planning to visit the United States so that they are extended "courtesies of the port."

The spokesman said Francis did not notify U.S. officials about this trip.

"The body search did take place," the Consulate spokesman said. "But when Mr. Francis was told to leave he refused to do so and remained another three hours at the airport in protest."

Francis returned to Nassau late Saturday and according to consulate officials immediately directed the head of customs at the airport to "terminate processing of all arriving American citizens," the spokesman added.

About 200 Americans were waiting in the customs hall when consulate officials arrived to sort out the problem.

"After some discussions with airport customs officials and other Bahamian government authorities processing restarted," the spokesman said. "The delay involved about three hours altogether."

Consul-General Moncrief Spear said he had received assurance from the Bahamian government that there would be no further incidents "of this kind."

Two Pan American, two Eastern and one Air Jamaica flight were tied up at the airport after the directive was issued by Francis.

Major Senate Action Seen In Health Care

WASHINGTON (AP) — Indications are growing that the major action taken by Congress on health care this year will be enactment of a catastrophic-illness plan to aid families struck by severe, long-term sicknesses.

Much more far-reaching plans have been advanced to set up systems of national health care but it may be impossible for any final action to be taken on these.

The House Ways and Means and Senate Finance Committees, both are going to be busy with other matters which have been given priority. These include welfare reform, Social Security and revenue sharing.

Another difficulty is that no consensus has emerged on the wide variety of health-care plans before Congress.

Finally, the 1972 session is going to be curtailed by recesses for the Democratic and Republican national conventions.

The broad health-care plans under study range from a national health-insurance plan of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., which would cover nearly all medical costs to a more modest proposal of President Nixon.

Under the Nixon plan, all workers would be covered by private health insurance with employers and employees sharing the cost. The federal government would pay for insuring poverty-level families.

The catastrophic-illness plan is sponsored by Sen. Russell B. Long, D-La., Finance Committee chairman.

He plans to offer it as an amendment to the welfare reform bill.

The plan would apply to all Americans under 65, those not covered by Medicare. It would pay most expenses of a family beyond $2,000 and of an individual beyond 60 days of hospitalization in a year.

The majority of working people have or can obtain private insurance for their first 60 days of hospitalization and $2,000 of expenses, Long said.

The plan would be administered by the Social Security system as is Medicare and would be financed by payroll taxes which would start at three-tenths of 1 per cent and go up to four-tenths of 1 per cent in 1980.

The first-year cost is estimated at $2.5 billion.

The senator said he is considering another amendment which could relieve the states of about $2.5 billion of annual costs of the Medicaid health program for the poor.

Under this, Washington would take over the full cost of the six services mandatory under Medicaid: hospitalization, outpatient hospital care, nursing home care, physicians' services, laboratory and x-ray services, and home health care.

The states now pay 20 to 50 per cent of these costs.

Wallace Declines Debate

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace said Sunday he does not plan to accept a challenge from New York City Mayor John V. Lindsay to debate in Florida's Democratic presidential primary.

Wallace said his campaign schedule would not allow time for a debate.

He added, "I don't know whether I ought to draw any crowds for Mayor Lindsay or not, but that's probably what he wants to do, and I think he's running very low in Florida."

In Brief...

Paint Varnish Kills 100

NEW DELHI (AP) — The death toll rose to nearly 100 Sunday in India's latest bootlegging tragedy, which once again struck slumdwellers unable to afford the nation's expensive alcoholic beverages.

Police said they were almost certain the deaths were caused by methyl alcohol and paint varnish sold as a substitute for whiskey to laborers celebrating a wedding in one of New Delhi's hut camps on Friday—one of the twice-weekly dry days in the capital.

Egypt Taxes Luxuries

CAIRO (AP) — Egypt's new prime minister, Aziz Sidky, barred the sale of some imports and imposed tough new luxury taxes Sunday in an economic program to get the country ready for war with Israel.

"It is not the time for our people to indulge in the purchase of such luxury items," he told the parliament. "The money is better spent on consolidating preparations for war."

Pope Warns Against Superficial Ecumenism

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope Paul VI declared Sunday that efforts to force Christian unity have not been halted. But he warned against a "superficial ecumenism" that attempts to bypass important doctrinal disputes.

The pontiff sounded a call for prayers for "the recomposition of the family of Christians, still so much divided," in a talk from his window overlooking St. Peter's Square.

Arson Suspected in Manila

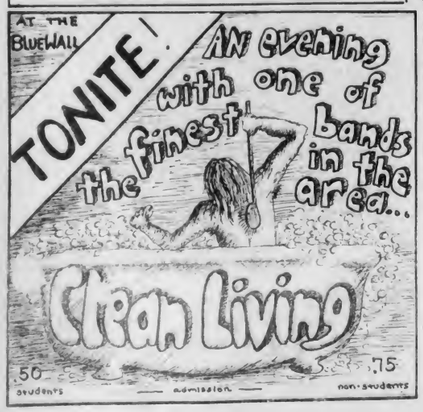
MANILA (AP) — Suspicions mounted in Manila on Sunday that the flash fire that gutted the Manila International Airport terminal might have been deliberately set.

Most international flights remained canceled because of heavy damage to ground control equipment. The Saturday fire killed seven persons and injured about 25.

Curfew Empties Istanbul

ISTANBUL, Turkey (AP) — Istanbul became a ghost town Sunday as the city's three million inhabitants were immobilized by an all-day curfew. Squads of soldiers in camouflage dress with guns at the ready, carried out a house-to-house search for urban guerrillas.

More than 80,000 troops and police took part in the massive operation, code named "Tornado One" by Istanbul's martial law command.



The command announced some arrests had been made and some weapons seized, but gave no details.

In Ankara, the National Security Council met under President Cevdet Sunday and decided to recommend to the government the further extension of martial law by two months. Martial law was proclaimed last April 26 and must be extended by Parliament every two months.

The army had been searching for 203 alleged leftist terrorists it believed were hiding in the overcrowded city. In particular, it wanted to flush out four persons who skipped from a military prison during a trial of alleged Maoist guerrillas last November.

Helicopters made low passes over the silent city, and the normally teeming streets were given over to pigeons and stray dogs.

Viet Cong Tries For A New Image

SAIGON (AP)-After years of suffering severe casualties and being shunted aside by North Vietnamese regulars, the Viet Cong fighter is trying to make a comeback as a new kind of "super guerrillas."

Further, says an American expert, the Viet Cong battler is no longer the black pajama-clad peasant soldier with a homemade wooden shotgun in one hand and a Communist propaganda tract in the other. The new Viet Cong requires modern weapons, skilled knowledge in their use and sophisticated communications gear.

He also is no longer so much of "fish in the seas," living among the rural populace and depending solely on it for supply, information and political support. Now he must maintain his own supply and communication lines, and often dares not trust the villager. These views of the Viet Cong soldier are offered by Douglas Pike, author of two books and several other publications on the Communist insurgency and regarded widely as the leading American authority on Viet Cong strategy and methods.

Pike, an analyst employed by the United States Information Agency and now based in Taiwan, said his findings stem from continuing study of captured documents, interviews with former Viet Cong and a just-completed fact-finding tour of South Vietnam.

"Military technology has revolutionized warfare in the last few years and has created a whole new set of tactics," Pike said in an interview.

The Viet Cong, he went on, have found themselves at a clear disadvantage-able to field only one soldier for every six of the enemy, faced with superior firepower and air strikes that inflict heavy losses and such tactics as the "vertical envelopment" of helicopter warfare.

Thus, Pike believes, although the strategy of the men running Hanoi apparently has not varied, there have been other changes and one of the most important is the new-type guerrilla.

Documents and other evidence show that in the past year the enemy has embarked on an intensive program of rearming, retraining and regrouping for a different kind of war.

"They definitely have in mind the creation of a new kind of guerrilla, one who can apply modern technology to carrying out his mission," Pike said. MORE MORE MORE

LSD Related To Schizophrenia

DETROIT (AP) - A research team at Lafayette Clinic says schizephrenia is caused by the body's overproduction of a chemical cousin of LSD and the knowledge could lead to an eventual cure for the mental illness.

According to biochemist Charles Frohman and Dr. Edward Domino, a visiting professor from the University of Michigan, a Protien dubbed the "S protein"-produces a minute quantity of a substance called DMT. This substance aids in the production of serotonin, which regulates the level of a person's awareness.

In the normal brain, says the scientist, an enzyme-the "Anti S enzyme"-acts on the protein to prevent excess DMT from being produced. In schizophrenics, the enzyme or control factor is missing, they say. Dr. Jacques S. Gottlieb, director of the clinic, said "the schizophrenic is like his own drug abuse factory." He added, "Chronic LSD gives you a syndrome that is similar to a schizoid illness."

Gottlieb said that about 20 to 25 per cent of all admissions to mental hospitals are because of schizophrenia and about half the patients in mental hospitals are suffering from the disease. Frohman said schizophrenia affects about three million Americans.

Gottlieb said the discovery of the cause of schizophrenia may lead to eventual treatment and cure of the major form of the disease-process schizophrenia but stressed it would take years of testing before it could be tried on patients.

Frohman and Domino have been working with the aid of an eight-year $500,000 grant from the National Institute of Health. The grant expired last year and the scientists said they would ask the state legislature, which supports the clinic, to supply additional money for research and testing. They estimated they would need $5 million.

Frohman said he thought the illness could be corrected by giving schizophrenics the control factor. Gottlieb said such a method would be "similar to the use of insulin for control of glucose in a diabetic."

Domino said he believes the body could be induced not to produce the DMT. Gottlieb said this would be done by shifting the metabolism in the brain. He said a minute amount of DMT would remain, but the excess production would be eliminated.

Frohman noted that some scientists maintain schizophrenia is a personality disorder arising from environmental factors. He said, however, that environmental factors may trigger the chemical reaction leading to schizophrenia.

Political Hay

With amazing speed, JOE II, (the program which has brought more than 80 young people from the state's decrepit youth detention centers to UMass for a month) was brought into existence. Just as quickly the political interests of those who have maintained the detention centers, and the poor reporting by some newspapers has threatened to sabotage the whole program.

Support for JOE II has come from Governor Sargent, who visited the UMass program last week from the Director of the State Youth Services Commission Jerome Miller, (who has tried for the past three years to eliminate the present system of detention centers for youth offenders and from the students and coordinators here at UMass, who have worked hard to get the program off the ground.

The program is new and experimental and as such has been criticized by local politicians, and has become the butt of some sensational stories by the Springfield papers which have reported, inaccurately at times, every minor indicent involving the people in the program, on their front pages. Yesterday's headlines in the Springfield Republican for example (POLICE SEEK FUGITIVE YOUTH FROM PROGRAM AT UMASS) tends to distort the image from that of a young kid who has gotten into trouble in to some hazy idea of a criminal on the loose. Friday, the Springfield Union blew-up a story of two of the youths in the program who got sick from something mixed in their drinks and had to have their stomachs pumped.

In spite of an editorial endorsement of eliminating the present state system of youth detention centers, the Springfield papers have done little to present the program in a fair way in their news pages. Fortunately for this area, the Hampshire Gazette has reported accurately about the program, which has been plagued by minor problems.

There have been reports of how the people who run the detention centers around the state have been allegedly "uncooperative". As one girl working in JOE II put it, "They get their power from having kids locked up, and they don't like to lose them to programs like ours."

The state should move as quickly as possible to eliminate the youth detention centers, and should afford programs like JOE ample support to enable more trained people to make them successful.

Clearly, the only real solution to the problems of young people getting in trouble in our society is to bring understanding and assistance to them, not locking them up and making political hay from their dilemma.

Meanwhile, At The Farm...

Well folks, we're back. We have, so the rumormongers say, four thousand new students here this semester, transfers, swing-shifters and some bright shiny new faces soon to be dimmed and shaken by life here at the factory.

District Attorney Callahan will be coming to speak to the senate sometime in February about their infamous narc bill and his general policy. The Senate officers are reported to be busy trying to persuade him otherwise, but so far to no avail. They are afraid that if Callahan started up about drug busts their reaction might not be, shall we say, dignified.

You Probably can expect a bust soon. Last fall Callahan got $2,500 from the State Legislature for investigation work regarding violations of the drug laws. Though nobody says so the money will most likely be used by narcotics officers to buy drugs from pushers whose testimony will be used to swear out warrants for those pushers arrest.

Other drug news is that some scientists figured out that a chemical produced by the body is the cause of schizophrenia. The kicker is that this drug is chemically closely related to LSD. See page five for more.

Getting back to University news we can probably expect a change in the Administration at the UMass-Boston campus. It is rumored that President Wood for sometime has had trouble "getting anything out of the Boston campus." Wood, who has a history for not getting along well with Chancellors in general, told a Collegian reporter last year that it would take at least three years for him to straighten things out. Possibly UMass-Boston Chancellor Broderick is about to fall out of favor. And we all know what happens then.

One problem with existing out here is that you often get the feeling that you don't quite exist. Ever feel like throwing a chair through one of those plate glass windows in the dining commons? Just to make a mark or vent your anger. Good thing we have our pacifiers. The idea of a campus with out walls, that is getting people out into the real world for their education is a good one. UMass is far from reality. We just don't have to cope with the problems the outide world has. We have a place to sleep and eat, don't have to worry about getting fired or laid-off (it is pretty hard to flunk out of here) and in general have a high degree of security.

Most of all we deal almost exclusively with people our own age or academicians who have a high degree of sensitivity empathy with students and the community as a whole. You don't really have to worry about someone bashing your teeth in.

At any rate we're back for another semester. Today we struggle down to Boyden for schedules and marks, course change and then classes. It might not be the best place around, but when you come right down to it, it's far from the worst. Which says something about the human condition.

Misery And The Economy

WASHINGTON–You're going to hear a lot about "economic indicators this year. An economic indicator is a clue to what is really happening to the economy. From these hints economists can make fantastic predictions of which way the country will tilt in the next 12 months.

A man who works with nothing but economic indicators is Dr. Friedrich Strasser, who is in charge of the Input-Output Institute of Sensuous Economics.

A visit to Dr. Strasser's institute produced some very interested but frightening information.

Dr. Strasser said that at the moment all his economic indicators were pointing up.

"More people are starting to travel on the airlines, which is a very good thing," he told me. "At the moment though, it's still possible to book a flight without difficulty and have a comfortable ride without people sitting on your lap. But if things keep getting better, the airports won't be able to handle the traffic, the planes will be overbooked, luggage will be lost and the airlines will have a very good economic year."

"Wait a minute," I said. "Are you trying to say that if the economy gets better in this country, things will get worse?"

"Of course I am. Everyone knows the price of a good economy is a breakdown in services that the economy provides. The more refrigerators people buy, the less chance they have of getting them repaired. The more cars that are sold, the bigger pollution and traffic problems you have. The more the country consumes, the less opportunity there is of getting rid of the garbage."

Dr. Strasser said one of his best economic indicators is the behavior of shop clerks, hotel reservation people and headwaiters.

"The nicer they are," he said, "the more trouble the country is in. During the recent recession we found shop clerks, hotel people and headwaiters the most courteous they had been since the economic doldrums of the early Sixties.

"This indicated to us that things were very bad. Lately we've been spot-checking, and we've discovered that the hotel people are getting snippety again, the clerks in stores are starting not to give a damn and in some good restaurants the headwaiters, for the first time in two years, are becoming their old obnoxious, patronizing selves. This shows that things are picking up, and the country could be in for a good year."

"It's fantastic how you people arrive at your conclusions," I said.

"It's foolproof," Dr. Strasser said. "Let's take the building industry as an example. When the country is doing badly, no one is digging up the streets or drilling steel pilings into the ground or making cement at 6 o'clock in the morning. People can get around easier, sleep better and work in a quieter atmosphere.

"But as soon as the economy improves, the wreckers come out to smash down buildings, streets are barricaded by cranes, water and gas are turned off and the noise drives everyone to the point of suicide. By just checking the nervous breakdown figures in a city for the week we can gauge how well the building industry is doing."

"So the more anxious the country becomes the better it is for all of us?"

"Exactly. The best economic indicators are the sales charts of the anti-acid stomach medicine companies. When sales of Alka-Seltzer, Bromo-Seltzer, Pepto Bismol and Rolaids are down, this means people are content and the dollar is in trouble. But when anti-acid sales are up, this means people are sick and getting their faith back in the country. You can't have economic growth without ulcer growth at the same time."

"Then you're predicting a good economic year and a miserable existence for all of us?" I asked.

"Life won't be as bad as it was in the late Sixties when things were booming, but I predict it will be a good enough year that people will be able to feel how miserable a healthy economy can be."

Plunder Of The Taxpayer

To the Editor:

Why end water pollution? Our economy needs the boost. With our space program limited and full scale wars practical suicide, where else can we spend countless $millions every year, from now until doomsday, without solving the problem?

If we wanted to, we could end water pollution for a small fraction of the costs we are now paying, with low cost technology cunningly concealed in the public domain for many years. Treatment processes would be completed in the treatment plant–not in the receiving waters as we are now doing–and without the usual lethal sludge dumpings in fresh as well as salt waters.

Where treatment plants are already in operation at full capacity, including secondary phases, these same treatment plants can be doubled or better in capacity for less than 5% of the plant costs without any extra land area. Secondary phases can be added to existing primary treatment plants at similar savings. New and far more efficient treatment plants can be built for less than 35% of the usual costs and in less than one-third of the usual space. Phosphates can be reduced over 95%, nitrogen over 85% and final sludge upwards from 65%–with little or no increase over conventional operating costs.

Our so-called "modern" treatment plants are less than one-half-of-one-percent effective to that which they can practically be. But why kill the goose which lays the golden egg? The clever hoax of storm water overflow has enabled the foisting of huge public works projects on an unsuspecting and all too often apathetic populace.

Efficient use of the mentioned technology would end the overflow problem with immediate treatment. No monstrous plant enlargements, no smelly and expensive holding areas, no costly sewer separation, no deep tunnels with their inevitable explosion hazards nor other misuse of public funds to benefit the few at the expense of the masses are needed, including proprietary oxygen and physical-chemical processes.

America has far too many actual needs begging for only nominal funds which are not available to permit this wholesale plunder of the taxpayer to continue–with little or nothing of value worthwhile in return.

August F. Vorndran, Jr.

Editorial Points

Well, this is the start of a new semester. For those of you who are new, Editorial Points is the place you will find many witty and clever comments about the day's events and life at UMass. For those of you who are coming back, you can expect more of the same old trash.

It seems evident that there will soon be a shake-up in administrative personnel, with the Boston campus the center of the change.

If last night's lines at the local hamburger spots are any indication, it might be a good idea to get to your classes a bit early this semster if you want a seat.

Food Science 101 may be interesting, but we wonder if 2800 people signed up for the course simply for that reason.

Perhaps the people who run the Hatch don't know it, but most people returned to campus yesterday and somehow walking downstairs in the Union and finding the Hatch doors closed kind of makes you think that you're still working on last year's calendar.

The Right Spirit

To the Editor:

Allan Fisher's conviction in the 21 Dec. issue of The Collegian that "there must be something wrong with a society in which people spend the greater part of their lives doing things that they dislike to do" makes two false assumptions. These are (1) that we always ought to be able to do what we want to do, and (2) that most people have to spend most of their lives doing what nobody could enjoy doing.

The contrary of these two assumptions is much closer to the truth. We often do not want to do what we ought to do and what we will enjoy doing if we will only get at the job. I am usually not eager to grade a set of papers, but I find the job interesting enough if I get at it; and I often have a feeling of satisfaction when I finish from a conviction that my students have written well and have really had something interesting to say.

And while all jobs are tedious sometimes, most of them can give satisfaction if approached in the right spirit. When Prince Charles was attending Cambridge, he humorously referred to the garbage collector who waked him at 7 A.M. singing hymns. The gargageman didn't take this as a criticism but as a compliment, for, he cogently asked, "How many people enjoy singing hymns early in the morning?"

So even a disagreeable study can be enjoyed if approached in the right spirit, and it will often occur that a sense of mastery resulting from successful study makes what was originally disagreeable become genuinely enjoyable.

Food Science 101 On The Air (Almost)

By NICK APOSTOLA
Chairman Academic Affairs Committee

In an interesting turn of events, the Scheduling Office found out late in December that 2,800 students had signed up for Food Science 101. Well, this presented more than the usual problem. Dropping 1800 kids from an "E" requirement isn't quite the same as dropping 18 from Elementary Mongolian. Bob Woodbury, the new Associate Provost for Special Programs, got excited at the possibility of offering the course to all 2,800, and that is where this story begins.

He and Rus Kraus, also from the Provost's Office started exploring the possibilities and alternatives. There is no place on this campus that can house 2,800 students for one lecture, except the Cage. The thought of a course with Fergus Clydesdale was interesting and worth pursing. It was discovered that the Cage could only be used up until March, when the seats would be taken down to make room for baseball. While the possibility of using the Cage was being researched, other alternatives were being investigated.

Woodbury and Kraus, because of prompting from some students from the Academic Affairs Committee, and simply because the potential of this experiment intrigued the, began looking into the closed circuit capabilities of the campus. The course would have been transmitted to all the dorms and some large lecture halls, but it was found out that the cable had to be pulled through the conduits and that would take months.

That didn't stop the dynamic duo though, (or at least the students' wouldn't let them stop). The next step was to look into setting up a continuous run showing of the lecture in a large hall. This would take equipment that the University didn't have, believe it or not. The TV studio at the School of Education didn't have the supplies, and the studio that the Speech Department has didn't have enough of whatever it takes. But hope never waned. If worse came to worse, the course could be held in the Cage until the first day of March. By that time something could be devised. It was important to all of those into solving the problem that the 1,800 students shouldn't get dropped from a course that would not only satisfy their "E" requirement, but was also interesting.

Not quite believing that it couldn't be done somehow, Rob Sprague (a member of the Academic Affairs Committee) and myself sat down with Russ Kraus and Bob Woodbury for a couple of hours brainstorming. We came up with almost every option from broadcasting it over a local television station at one in the morning, to using WMUA for broadcasting the audio without the visual. There wasn't a local television station willing, and using the radio just didn't seem to meet the criterion of quality. It was felt that if it was going to be done, and because this would be the first time something like this had been tried on this campus, that it had better be of good quality or the whole experiment might fail, and the chances for it happening again would be killed.

It was at this point that it was decided that planning for this semester would be fruitless, and that shooting for next September might be more realistic. So it sits. There are obvious logistics problems in trying to get 2,800 students in a course where there is room for only 1,000 as 1,800 of you are well aware of. There is a course, an "E" requirement, which a huge number of students would like to take. The administration has said that they would try to get it in for next Fall. But as had been shown in the past, they use one excuse this time and they find a brand new excuse for the next. The first question is the commitment of the University to allow as many students who want to take Food Science 101 with Fergus Clydesdale, to do so and the second is how to do that.

The idea of courses taped, so students can watch them on television instead of sitting in a lecture hall of 500 or more, is interesting. Reports from schools that have tried the video method have been fascinating. Some studies have shown that performance varies little between the group that sat in the lecture and the group that used the video tapes, once the initial boredom of watching the TV wore off. And in other experiments, it was shown that when there are sections that get the live professor and ones that are forced to use the video tape during the same semester, the ones using the video have a lower performance. So taking into account the experience at other institutions we can go forward. Using tapes in this manner has enormous possibilities. Continuing Education could use this type of media to teach over the air.

But back on the home front, introductory courses could be taken in the student's spare time. He could go at his own speed, take one-half a semester, or a semester and a half to take Psych 101; go over a lecture two or three times if he finds it difficult to understand. There could be an office that would be staffed so that questions could be answered and you could get real help with a problem. And in the case of a course like Food Science 101, where Professor Clydesdale uses information and speaks to what is being said about the subject in the newspaper that very morning, then the course could be shown across campus on the closed circuit television.

The obvious criticism of using tapes instead of people to teach is that this University is impersonal enough, without replacing professors with a little man on the screen. True the place can get impersonal, if all your classes are 500 student lectures, and if every course was on television. But if some introductory courses were taught by tape, it would free faculty time to teach more upper level courses with fewer students. A freshman who would normally get stuck in a large lecture hall, could now be stuck with a television course and an interesting Freshman Seminar, where the numbers are at the level where he can relate.

It has to be remembered that when discussing this kind of option that it is only an option. It will have to be watched to make certain that only the best professors get onto tape. And the majority of courses will be taught in the traditional manner. But if the University lives up to its promise, we will have the chance to try an exciting experiment: to see if knowledge can be transmitted in other methods than the classroom.

Using a tape, the professor can work on his style and his course; re-tape portions that didn't quite come off the way they should have; making sure that every lecture is interesting. Introductory courses by video tape could replace many lecture halls, and even make small introductory courses possible.

It's an interesting experiment. Let's hope the University will remember what they promised next September when 2,800 students sign up for Food Science 101.

UMass Prof Appointed To Environment Agency

Dr. Hugh C. Davis, associate professor of resource planning in the department of landscape architecture at UMass has been appointed Assistant Secretary in the Massachusetts Executive Office of Environmental Affairs and Associate Director for Public Service of the UMass Institute for Man and His Environment, it was announced last week by Secretary of Environmental Affairs Charles H. W. Foster, Secretary of Educational Affairs Joseph M. Cronin, and Dr. Robert Wood, President of UMass.

Dr. Davis will be responsible for research and planning in the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs, a new cabinet level agency which includes the Department of Agriculture, Department of Natural Resources, the Metropolitan District Commission, and their forty environmental agencies.

He will also serve as the environmental research liaison officer for the University and other research institutions in the state. In the latter capacity, he will seek ways of making on-campus research more responsive to the needs of all those in the state.

College Intern Bill Introduced

U.S. Rep. Michael J. Harrington (D-Mass.), believing it is important to increase youth participation in government, has introduced a bill to allow two additional paid summer interns in each office. Harrington was joined by 91 other representatives.

The current intern program allows $750 per Congressman to pay one intern. Harrington's bill raises that number to three, each with a $750 allowance.

Harrington commented that the interns he worked with had shown outstanding dedication to their work. Last summer Harrington had 26 college interns in his office. Most of them worked as volunteers but Harrington was able to allot some additional money on his own to pay four of the interns.

Part of the need for additional money to pay interns is to cover the cost of living expenses in Washington for out- of-town students. Without these funds, internship is restricted to those young people who have other means of support.

Interns have found their jobs to be educational and diverse. Last summer, Harrington, an anti-war Congressman, had interns researching armed services bills to help him on his committee assignment. In addition, they worked on district problems and the problems of the elderly, and helped draft legislation in several different areas.

Interns also assist in drafting letters and general office work and have the opportunity to meet Washington officials.

Many interns are given a special research project dealing with an area in which they have a special interest.

"I have taken advantage of the opportunity to have interns for the past two summers and found it a welcome addition to my office," Harrington said.

SDS Is Watching

If a freeze threatens, thousands of plants ranging from microscopic varieties to fig trees will be rescued at the 64-year-old botany greenhouse at UMass.

A couple of telephones, a series of lights about the size of pencil erasers, and some push buttons keep a watch over the plants and other scientific experiments, as well as over dormitories and classroom buildings on the campus. The "watch" is a Supervisory Data System hooked up to the greenhouse and 11 buildings, and it is an added safety measure for thousands of students and others on the UMass campus.

The Supervisory Data System (SDS) protects against fire, intrusion, and accident in newer buildings and some older buildings on the sprawling campus, and will do the same for many more of the older buildings once the network of color-coded cables is installed in more underground locations.

This is the second winter SDS has watched the thousands of greenhouse plants. Before last winter a freeze ruined plants three times, once killing enough of them to ruin two years of botanical work. Keeping the plants well means saving federal and state research and teaching funds invested in them. It also means plants won't have to be purchased for students to study.

A small, glassed-in room about the size of three telephone booths houses the main SDS controls at the UMass Physical Plant. An operator is on duty around the clock so that when SDS reports a malfunction, he may notify the appropriate people.

When the greenhouse temperature goes down to 55 degrees, the SDS operator notifies a botany staff member who goes to the greenhouse in case plants have to be removed or otherwise cared for. SDS meanwhile notifies preventive maintenance men to repair any damage at the greenhouse. Sensors attached to the greenhouse steam line warn SDS a half hour before the freeze would be critical. Another sensor checks the air temperature.

About a year ago, water leakage ruined many books in Goodell Library. SDS sensors have since been installed on the library floors, so that if such leakage ever occurs again, officials will have time to divert the water and move the books before they are damaged.

How To Vote In Absentia

Voters who wish to cast a ballot in the town election on February 22, 1972 and will be out of town at that time should apply for absentee ballots early. The latest time to apply is 4:30 P.M. on the day before the election. However, since February 21st is a holiday, Friday February 18th will be the last day to apply before the '72 town election.

The Town of Amherst suggests that students who are Amherst residents but attend school elsewhere apply for an absentee ballot while they are home in Amherst for the holidays. Ballots are mailed to voters and should be returned to the Town Clerk's office in the Town Hall to be received at least by 8:00 P.M. (or by the last mail delivery) on February 22nd.

Voters who are unable to get to the polls for physical reasons may apply for absentee ballots until 4:30 P.M. on February 18. Such applications must be signed by a doctor, clergyman, nurse or hospital superintendent and then filed with the Town Clerk. The procedure for returning the ballots is the same as above.

A voter who will be out of town on election day, but who has no address outside the town from which the ballot may be seasonably returned, may obtain a ballot from the Town Clerk's office and vote there before he leaves. Here again, the latest time to apply is 4:30 P.M. on Friday, February 18th.

By SYDNEY OMARR

From now and through February, many persons born under Capricorn are due for a financial boost. Recent social contacts will materialize into meaningful relationships. Where money and possessions are concerned, many natives of Capricorn should be "sitting pretty."

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Protect valuables. Not wise to take situations--or individual--for granted. Leo figures prominently. Enjoy good company, but avoid extravagance. You simply cannot buy affection. You will comprehend.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): New approach spells gain. Cycle is such that circumstances turn in your favor. You now can afford to be independent in thought, action. Dance to your own tune--adhere to individual style.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Consider needs of one who may be confined to home, hospital. Feel meaning of Golden Rule. If this you do, you actually will be doing much for yourself. Co-operate in efforts designed to promote goodwill.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Accent on getting what you want--and you do so by socializing, utilizing and expanding. Shake off status quo. Be alive, alert and optimistic. Sagittarian could play important role. Look to future.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Spotlight is on career, ultimate aspiration. You gain it thorough. What appears minor could actually be important. Means check. Don't heed rumors. Do some personal investigating. Ask many questions.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be ready for possible change of scenery. Opposite sex is involved. Obtain hint from Leo message. You may find yourself on the move. Long range plans, travel procedures--these need attention.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You are intrigued by mystery. You get to bottom of puzzle. Queries are answered. Money, legacy, metaphysical interpretations all are involved. Harmonize family relationships. Agree on budget. You can be happy.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Lie low. Let others take initiative. Get expert legal advice. Don't attempt to be your own attorney. Improve image. Become more aware of public relations--and reactions. Marriage question is in picture.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Highlight health requirements. Get together with co-worker, associate. Get rid of unnecessary tensions. Relax and you will gain. Do otherwise and steps will be backward. You will understand.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Finish, expand, spotlight universal appeal. You will be consulted. Many now are drawn to you with their questions, complaints and problems. Be sympathetic. But don't become human crying towel.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Domestic surroundings are brighter. Means, among other things, that some grievances come out in open. Honesty truly is best policy--and truth will set you free. Older family member is wiser than you might imagine.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You move about. Ideas abound. Select best--don't settle for quick substitutes. Relative may try to complicate situation. Heed your own counsel. Trust intuitive intellect. Don't confide all. Be discreet.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you desire harmony, but will fight when you feel cause is right. You have sense of drama, appreciate art and could have a most unusual voice. If single, you marry or have opportunity to do so by September.

Learn With SELF

Registration has begun for three February workshops by Project SELF, sponsored by the UMass Division of Continuing Education and the Valley Women's Center. Each will last six weeks.

"Assumptions about Women" will have Helen Smith discussing images of women in literature, politics and socialization. She will meet Thursday mornings beginning Feb. 3. On Wednesday evenings starting Feb. 2, Evelyn Duston will share information and attitudinal experiences on "Women and Their Bodies." Lois Phillips will help others "Communicate with Confidence" by using tapes and directing practice sessions in different settings. This will be Thursdays beginning Feb. 3.

Marianne Simon will conduct a largely experiential workshop called "An Introduction to Values Clarification." The workshop will attempt to identify, examine and clarify values and will meet Tuesday and Thursday mornings starting Feb. 1.

Further information is available from Lois Phillips or Joan Engel at 920 Campus Center, 545-2596.

Color Course Offered

John W. Doscher, a Fellow of the Photographic Society of America and the Royal Photographic Society of Great Britain will teach a "Creative Color" one-day comprehensive photography course this Saturday.

The program will be held at the Amherst Junior High School from 9:30 a.m. to 10 p.m. This Amherst meeting, being sponsored by the Amherst Camera Club, will be Doscher's only 1972 "short-course" appearance in New England. Doscher is founder and director of the well-known Country School of Photography in South Woodstock, Vt.

The one-day course is for all photographers - the beginner, the advanced, the amateur, the professional. The program will be stimulating and beneficial to photographers who would like to improve their artistic and photographic skills.

Recognized as one of the most successful and respected contemporary teachers of photography, Doscher's copiously illustrated programs are designed to give new concepts, new goals, and a working method to instill new confidence in the photographer's approach to varied problems of exposure and composition.

Doscher's specialty, composition, will be covered extensively during the course. According to Doscher, "I am concerned about keeping photographers out of the 'cliche trap' and in helping them to make stronger statements in their pictures so that they reflect individuality."

Exposure system and the elements of design (how to be aware of the world around you) will be discussed in depth.

Registration forms and brochures describing the course may be obtained at area photographic supply shops or by writing to Russell Colvin, Amherst Camera Club, 159 Farview Way, Amherst, Mass. 01002.

Ecology Warning Group Formed

Seven UMass Amherst environmental specialists have been appointed to an Environmental Impact Advisory Committee for the Lower Pioneer Valley Regional Planning Commission.

They are Robert Livingston, botanist and specialist in plant ecology; Warren Litsky, environmental microbiologist; Joseph Larson, wildlife and wetlands specialist; Charles Cole, fisheries biologist; William Nutting, zoologist; Oliver Zajicek, environmental chemist; and Donald Adrian, environmental engineer and water resources researcher.

"Essentially, the committee will be requested to review the environmental impact statements which have to be prepared by the applicants for federal assistance for projects that range from housing developments to highways, water impoundments and industrial parks," according to K.M. Munnich, commission director.

The committee will act as a preliminary warning system, pointing out the potential dangers to the environment which may be created by such projects, he added.

The Regional Planning Commission, which covers 43 municipalities in Hampden and Hampshire counties, is designated by the federal Office of Management and Budget as a metropolitan clearinghouse and has the task of reviewing applications for federal grants provided under some 106 programs administered by the various federal agencies.

The advisory committee was formed with the help of the Technical Guidance Center for Environmental Quality at UMass.

Student Senate By-Elections

On Jan. 24, 1972 the Student Senate will make available in its offices nomination papers for a By-election to fill vacancies in the Senate. All nomination papers must be returned to Wm. Spinn (in the Senate office) no later than 5 p.m. Feb. 11, 1972.

At this time there are the following vacancies:

Commuters (7)

We're Tired (Said With A Smile)

By EARLE BARROLL

Muhammad Ali and Joe Frazier put Juergen Blin and Terry Daniels deeper into the "who is he" list. Don Johnson's bowling streak and the Lakers' win skein finally came to an end. Dallas lulled the nation to sleep in stomping Miami in the Super Bowl. Jim Ryun is talking gold medal after out running Kip Keino in the mile on Saturday. Julius Erving made the ABA east all-star team. Dave Cowens was robbed of the MVP award in the NBA all-star game. And Villanova won the Quaker City invitational tournament.

So what else is new?

Perhaps the most startling of the above would have to be the Villanova tournament win. It came in the form of an upset over then third-ranked South Carolina in the finals, 77-76, at a completely ape Palestra.

But, it was the inevitable. The Philadelphia papers called the Wildcats the sleepers. South Carolina was the odds-on favorite. And Tennessee which was rated second in the tournament lucked out over Boston College in the consolation round.

Why the inevitable? Villanova defeated UMass in the first round. It's as easy as that. The Wildcats opened quickly and blew the Redmen out onto the University of Pennsylvania campus with a full court press that gave them a 57-36 halftime lead.

From then on it was a matter of pride for the Redmen. And pride it was as they came within eight points at one point in the second half only to run out of gas and whatever it was that got them going, allowing Villanova to run up the final 100-83 margin of victory.

The psychology behind Villanova's win is this. In its two previous major tournaments-two N.I.T.'s-UMass has played and lost to the champion in the first round. Two years ago it was Marquette. Last year it was North Carolina. And then again this year, the same.

The Wildcats were a deserving champion. It didn't hit UMass coach Jack Leaman until he saw them defeat South Carolina as to how really good they were.

And playing in the awesome Palestra was part of the story in itself. Just multiply an overflow Cage crowd (like for Providence this coming Saturday) by a little over two. Now multiply the decible count of the noise by about five and that's how wild the Palestra was.

UMass was involved in two other games in the consolation bracket. The Redmen ran away from Manhattan (in a rematch) and then turned completely sour against LaSalle in losing on the third day.

Following finals week, Vermont and Iona gave UMass a good work out for their preparation for the staff schedule that awaits them in the second half of the season. The Cats fell, 71-49 and Iona succumbed Saturday night 80-56.

The Redmen are thus 9-4 halfway through the season. In the words of Leaman the team is "tired" (said with a smile).

"I'm happy with the 9-4 record," he said. "If you had told me earlier in the season that we'd be 9-4 at this time I'd have been happy. But now that we're here, I think we could be 11-2, but maybe I'm expecting too much.

"We learned that we could play against the good teams at the Quaker City Tournament. We were down, though, after playing so poorly against Villanova and LaSalle. There was some doubt and apprehension in our minds, but we came on strong against Vermont after a sluggish start and put on a good performance against Iona."

There has been a major shakeup in the past week in personnel on the team and this has caused Leaman to say, "we have to find out now, what we have to do to win games."

Rick Pitino has been suspended from the team for the rest of the year by Leaman for "an unwillingness to play with the rest of the team."

"He thought too much about himself and not about the 11 other guys on the team," said Leaman.

Mike Pagliara will not see action for another two weeks due to a broken finger he sustained in a scuffle at practice last week. He'll be ready for Syracuse (Feb. 5).

And so a new look has taken over the starting UMass five. Al Skinner has been moved to the backcourt in place of Pag. Peter Trow is now playing at forward. Tom Austin, who performed so well at the Quaker City Tournament is now the regular center. (He held Hank Simientowski of Villanova, a preseason all-American, to practically nothing statistically).

John Betancourt and Chris Coffin are the other two starters.

Leaman is extremely pleased with Skinner. "He's been outstanding," he said. "He ran the show for us the other night at Vermont in the last five minutes when I took John (Betancourt) out. His work with Trow and McLaughlin has been super. Vogeley and Peters have also played well."

As of yet he is undecided as to the starting five for the Providence game. Just a little note of interest. The Friars have knocked off Villanova and Niagara in convincing performances during the UMass winter break. They also crushed Boston College and are now shouting for national ranking which is deservedly theirs. Wednesday night on national television Ernie DeGregorio and company play at Southern California.

There is no need to stress the following point any further than "you had better get to the Cage very, very early Saturday night."

The Goat Boots AFC Over NFC

LOS ANGELES (AP)-Jan Stenerud, Kansas City's Norwegian place kicker and the goat of pro football's longest game last month, kicked four field goals Sunday as his American Conference All-Stars upset the National Conference 26-13 in the 22nd annual National Football League Pro Bowl.

The soccer-style kicker succeeded on field goals from 25, 23, 48 and 42 yards as the AFC erased a 6-0 NFC lead in the second quarter and avenged the 27-6 loss to the NFC in last year's Pro Bowl, the first since the merger.

Stenerud missed two relatively easy field attempts in December's 27-24 AFC playoff loss to Miami, a game which lasted more than five quarters.

Stenerud also missed his first two attempts in the Pro Bowl before 53,647 fans and a national television audience before connecting on his next four attempts, including a 48-yarder-four yards short of the Pro Bowl record-that broke a 6-6 tie in the third quarter.

The National Conference, a slight favorite off its performance last year in this game and the Super Bowl victory by Dallas, cut the AFC lead to 19-13 in the fourth quarter on a two-yard run by San Francisco's Vic Washington. But Floyd Little of Denver put the game out of reach with 1:22 to play when he scored on a six-yard run.

Kansas City's Len Dawson passed five yards to Milt Morin of Cleveland for the AFC's first touchdown in the third period, and Stenerud's 42-yard field goal with nine seconds gone in the fourth quarter gave the AFC a 19-6 lead. Stenerud tied the Pro Bowl record for field goals set by Bert Techichar of Baltimore in 1957.

The NFC scored first on Detroit's Greg Landry's 50-yard pass to Minnesota's Bob Grim in the second quarter. But Curt Knight's extra point kick was deflected by Baltimore's Bubba Smith.

The AFC, behind quarterback Bob Griese of Miami dominated the first quarter but couldn't score. Twice Griese moved his team to within field goal distance, but Stenerud's first chance from 38 yards out was deflected by Detroit's Mike Lucci and his second effort, from 28 yards out, was wide to the right.

The NFC's starting quarterback, Roger Staubach of Dallas, couldn't penetrate the AFC defense. Landry was at the controls when the Nationals scored both their touchdowns.

The winners receive $2,000 each and the losers got $1,500.

NHL Seeks Realignment

ST. PAUL-MINNEAPOLIS (AP)-It will take only one dissenting vote from National Hockey League owners to prevent the teams from dividing into four divisions for the 1972-73 season, says Walter Bush.

Bush is president of the Minnesota North Stars and host for the 25th NHL All-Star game Tuesday night and two days of league meetings starting Monday.

In those meetings, the NHL Board of Governors is to discuss realignment of the league, now that new franchises have been awarded to Atlanta and Long Island, N.Y.

"It has to be unanimous or one team will be added to each division," Bush said in an interview. "Of course, it doesn't have to be decided at these meetings. It can be worked out during the June draft meetings."

Bush said one of the most popular realignment proposals being kicked around provides theses divisions:

—Chicago, Los Angeles, Minnesota, California.

—Boston, Long Island, New York, Philadelphia.

—Pittsburgh, Atlanta, St. Louis, Detroit.

—Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver, Buffalo.

"I don't think anybody wants Chicago in their division because they're so strong," said Bush, "but we'd like to have them with us. We're building a rivalry with them. We also would like one of the established teams in our division."

The North Stars were admitted into the NHL for the 1967-68 season with Los Angeles, California, Pittsburgh, St. Louis and Philadelphia. Vancouver and Buffalo began play in the 1970-71 season.

The governors also are to receive a report from a committee which has been studying further expansion for the 1974-75 season with the possible addition of two new clubs.

Tuesday's 8:35 p.m. EST All-Star game matches East scoring power led by Boston's Phil Esposito and New York's Jean Ratelle against a West team dominated by nine Chicago Black Hawks.

There will be one conspicuous absence. Gordie Howe, the Detroit Red Wing great who retired before the 1971-72 season, will not play in the All-Star game for the first time in 15 years.

Since the NHL established the East vs. West All-Stars rather than a league all-star team meeting the previous spring's Stanley Cup champion, the teams have each won once and tied once.

Ryun Finally Tops Keino; He's Now Talking Gold

LOS ANGELES (AP)-The 1972 track season has barely begun and already top Olympic hopefuls are saying they've reached a turning point.

Veterans Jim Ryun and George Young and coming star Al Feuerbach gained impressive victories in Saturday's Sunkist Invitational indoor track and field meet and each smiled so much afterwards, one would have thought they'd just won an Olympic Gold medal.

"I'm very, very happy," said Ryun, the 24-year-old distance star who has run little since four years ago, when he lost to Kip Keino in the Olympic 1,500-meter final.

"It's all turning out great," said Feuerbach, the former Emporia State shot putter who had a poor season in 1971.

"This certainly will be a turning point in my mind for the next few months," said an exuberant Young, who was disappointed with his 1971 season.

None of the three triumphs was earth-shaking: Ryun won the mile in 4:06.8, Feuerbach tossed the shot 67-4 and Young captured the two-mile in 8:47.1. But the circumstances made the differences.

Ryun was greeted warmly by an overflow crowd of 13,127 at the Los Angeles Sports Arena and he was the obvious sentimental pick because his foe was Keino. Ryun grabbed the lead on the fifth of 11 laps in the mile and held off two challenges by Keino to win as an enthusiastic mob tore the roof off.

Feuerbach stunned world record holder and Olympic champ Randy Matson for the fourth time in a row by capturing the shot. The 6-foot, 240-pound farm boy with the flowing mustache later said he "needed this victory to get a psychological edge over Randy."

Golf Playoff

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP)-Balding Miller Barber fashioned a sparkling 65, tied George Archer Sunday and forced an 18-hole playoff for the $30,000 first prize in the Dean Martin-Tucson Open Golf Tournament.

Archer, a winner two weeks ago, had a final round 68 to match Barber's 273 total and go into a Monday playoff for the second time in three weeks.

Bobby Nichols, the leader most of the warm, sunny day, faltered on the final three holes and dropped back to third when he hit a shot into the water on the 72nd hole.

Nichols finished with a 71 and a 275 total.

Last Man From An Old War

AGANA, Guam (AP) — Two fishermen have captured a man who told authorities he was a Japanese Army sergeant and had fled to the jungles and hid when Americans invaded the island almost 28 years ago.

Officials said the man, Shoichi Yokoi, 58, was dressed in ragged burlap but apparently was in good health. He was taken under protective custody Monday to Guam Memorial Hospital at Agana.

The fishermen said they subdued Yokoi as he tended a fish trap in the Talofofo River, about four miles from the tiny village of Talofofo, 10 miles across the island from Agana, the principal city.

Officials said Yokoi told them he arrived on Guam with the Japanese Army from Manchuria in 1943 and that he and nine other soldiers fled to the jungle during the American invasion of 1944.

Officials said Yokoi told them he had lived alone for the past eight years. It was not clear what happened to the others. Two Japanese soldiers were captured in the jungle in 1960. An island-wide unsuccessful search for others was conducted in 1964 after fresh footprints were found in the dense jungle.

Officials said Yokoi told them he learned about 20 years ago that the war was over but he was afraid to come out of hiding. He said he lived on shrimp, fish and nuts.

Fishermen Jesus M. Duenas, 48, and Manuel D. Garcia, 36, said they saw Yokoi when they went to check their traps.

In Agana, James Shintaku, the honorary Japanese consul, interviewed Yokoi.

Shintaku said he offered Yoloi food but Yokoi turned it down, saying his stomach would not tolerate it.

The consul said Yokoi told him he has mixed emotions about returning home.

"After all, this has been his way of life for some time," Shintaku said. "Also, there's a Japanese military tradition that it is a disgrace to return home defeated."

Robert Wood On Tenure and The New University

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

UMass President Robert W. Wood said in an MDC interview tenure discriminates against women and minorities and felt that it should be re-examined. Tenure was one of several topics discussed during the interview.

Wood, in explaining his position on tenure said, "I think we have to look at alternatives and options." In fact, he hopes to initiate committees to study alternative plans for faculty security and the standards by which faculty members are now evaluated.

Commenting on the Report of the Future University which has given him national recognition, Wood said, "When I set up the committee I deliberately appointed people of distinction and individuality. I was sure it would be an independent study."

Asked if the report is a reflection of his own ideas, he replied, "I bent over backwards not to influence the report; in fact I only talked to the committee twice." He explained his limited influence on the committee this way: "I strongly urged the committee in the beginning to circulate the drafts of the report and to work within the University community.

"I regard the report as being independent."

The report was considered unique in that it was essentially an outside study, two-thirds of the members are not University people. Wood said self-studies do not work because people are usually reluctant to criticize the structure which they themselves are part of. He said he was looking for a new approach in evaluating the future of the University.

On his commitment to the report, Wood said, "My obligation is to make sure it doesn't gather dust and to make sure the recommendations are discussed and aired out."

In a January 3 issue of Newsweek magazine, an unidentified UMass professor charged Wood with attempting to turn the University into a "vocational school". Wood flatly denied the charge. He told MDC: "Neither the report nor the president has ever considered that kind of nonsense. We are building a first rate public university in the context of the state. The whole question is where do we find that role.

"All Universities are related to the world about them. So called liberal education was developed at a time when those skills such as English, history and math were needed by the elites who went to the University," Wood said. "The University in addition to research and teaching has now got to do other things such as reaching out and linking the community, the state and the country."

About faculty members' charges that Wood has too much power, Wood said he has no more than his predecessor, John W. Lederle. "I think a lot of this is perception. The real decision making in the University is in the departmental level in the curriculum and personnel areas," said Wood.

The main problem, as he sees it, is that the faculty does not understand a multi-campus organization. He said the faculty has become used to going individually to the trustees, but now there is a president on the way to the board.

On faculty attempts to unionize, Wood said, "That would radicalize the idea of academic life to a real labor-management situation."

Wood also commented on other aspects of the University:

•Tuition increase: "I am opposed to a tuition increase," said Wood. This will be a major issue this year said Wood since organizations such as

Robert Wood

A Few Main Points

the Mass Federation of Taxpayers feel a tuition increase is warranted.

•Alignment of SMU and Lowell Tech into the University: Wood said the chances are not great in the near future, but the possibilities are being studied.

•Trustees: Wood agreed with the Future Report by saying the Trustees should concentrate more on setting policy and should leave the management of the University to the administration and other decision-making bodies.

•Open admissions: Wood said, "We have a long way to go for quality education for people who want it." He did say the University would continue to work in this direction.

•Budget priorities: Wood said a major effort in next year's budget will be improving counseling and advising.

•Budget increase: Wood called the upcoming year a "tight year" for higher education. He said any rise in welfare costs will definitely hurt budget increases in higher education.

•Opening of UMass-Boston at Columbia Point: Wood said he expects the school to open in September with "beneficial occupancy". He said the project has suffered two major setbacks and that a one semester delay would not be critical.

•Dorms at the UMass-Boston campus: Wood said there are no present plans to build dorms, but since 70% of the student body favored the building of dorms it is obvious the matter will have to be studied and evaluated in the future.

Wood said his major function as president is "developing some clear alternative models about what is a quality public university. While that is appearing, the other necessity is to keep the momentum going and to keep responsive to faculty and students. But my real job is to keep a flexible institution and try to have some realistic ideas to where we're going to move."

Soviet Ship Masters Flown To Anchorage

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — A Soviet fishing fleet commander and two ship masters were flown here from the Aleutians on Monday and a federal attorney said they would be charged with illegal fishing in U.S. waters. The Russians were in charge of two boats seized by the U.S. Coast Guard in the Bering Sea last week.

The fishermen were flown here from Adak Naval Base where they had been held in legal quarantine since last Saturday.

They were taken into custody last Monday near uninhabited St. Matthew Island some 200 miles west of the Alaskan mainland.

The Russian vessels and crews remained under armed guard at Adak.

G. Kent Edwards, U.S. attorney for Alaska, said he would file a complaint "charging them with unlawfully engaging in activities in support of foreign fishing within the 12-mile fishery zone of the United States."

Edwards indicated the charges would be filed late Monday. He said he would have no objection to releasing the Soviets on personal recognizance after arraignment.

"The vessels were involved in a transfer of fish from the Kolyvan a trawler to the processing ship Lamut," Edwards said. It was the first specific description of the alleged Soviety activities near the island.

Edwards said his complaint in U.S. District Court would seek forfeiture of the two Soviet vessels, their cargo of herring and the ship's gear.

The criminal complaints will be filed against Vladimir Artemov, commander of the 80-boat Russian fleet; Igor Bovtun, master of the 362-foot Lamut, and Nikolai Pavluk, skipper of the Kolyvan, Edwards said. Bovtun previously had been identified as Igor Bobtuk.

If convicted, the fishermen face a maximum fine of $100,000 each, plus confiscation of their vessels, gear and cargo.

The ships were apprehended by the Coast Guard icebreaker Storis after it observed their activity in the ice-choked Bering Sea.

Info On University Meal Tickets

The University Food Services will again be distributing meal tickets in Hampden Commons this semester.

Many of the problems which were experienced last September relating to the pick-up of meal tickets have been corrected by revision of procedures and policies within Food Services. The possibilities for problems which are inherent in dealing with large numbers of people still exist, but most of the potential trouble spots can be avoided if each individual will read the following paragraphs and be advised to those instructions which apply to him.

—Meal tickets will be distributed on Monday, January 24, 1972 through Wednesday, January 26, 1972. The hours of distribution will be 9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. They will be distributed in the East Lobby of Hampden (7) Dining Commons.

—After Wednesday, January 26, meal tickets may be picked up on the first floor of Worcester Dining Commons.

—No student will be allowed to pick up his meal ticket without written notice from the Bursar's Office that the Board Fee has been paid. For most students who have paid their bill before the due date Food Services will have a record of Board payment, and the student will not need to bring a receipt. If, however, the bill was paid late, or it is paid during the registration period, students should bring the receipt from the Bursar's Office.

—Students who are receiving scholarships or financial aid should make certain that their scholarship or aid includes payment of board fees and that it has been received.

—All students residing in University Residence Halls must, by University regulations, board at the Dining Commons. The only authorized exceptions to this rule are:

a) Seniors

b) Students 21 years of age as of January 24, 1972.

c) Medical exemption authorized by the University Health Services.

d) Boarding at a Fraternity or Sorority.

—Two board plans are available for the Spring Semester. These are the same as last fall--10 meals per week, or 15 meals per week.

It is the individual student's responsibility to choose one of these two plans. Choices may be changed at the time students pick up their meal tickets. Once the meal ticket has been picked up the student CANNOT change from the 15-meal plan to the 10-meal plan.

If students feel that they are entitled to a special meal plan because of work or class schedule or for any other valid reason, it is their responsibility to secure written authorization from Arthur Warren, who is located in Worcester Dining Commons. This should be done as soon as possible, since no revision in the meal plan or board payment can be made retroactively.

—Meal tickets must be picked up before the evening meal on Thursday, January 27. No one will be permitted to eat in the Dining Commons without a meal ticket (or cash) beginning with this meal.

—If the meal ticket is lost during the three days of meal ticket distribution at Hampden Dining Commons (January 24-27), students should come to the Meal Ticket Office, located in Worcester Dining Commons, on Thursday, January 27.

Law Advisors Lack Advisees

January and February are traditionally the months in which students complete the application process to Law Schools. An integral part of this process for all senior Law School applicants on this campus is a personal conference with the Pre-Law Advisors in Casiac. The fact that there are many seniors on campus who have either applied to Law School or who intend to apply, who have not contacted the Advisors, is a matter of great concern to them. They urge these people to come to E-20 Machmer Hall and speak to either of the Advisors: Harvey Stone or Samuel Goldman as soon as possible.

As most applicants are aware, applications to Law Schools have tremendously increased this year. The ratio of applications per acceptance is growing nationally to approximately 8 or 9 to one. Due to this considerable rise in the number of people seeking a legal education, Law Schools are raising their admissions standards tremendously. This means that schools which were once thought of as being applied strictly for insurance purposes are now becoming extremely selective in deciding whom they will admit.

Due to this extremely tight situation, applicants who do not apply intelligently are faced with the distinct possibility that they will not be admitted to any Law School, let alone the Law School of their choice. This warning is not just aimed at individuals with mediocre academic records, but also at people who have consistantly been on the dean's list. Even these people should not feel secure as there are more and more people with their qualifications applying to law schools.

In order to minimize the risk of not being accepted anywhere, the Pre-Law Advisors have compiled statistics which would enable the prospective Law School applicant to develop a strategy which would give him or her the best chance for success in admissions. In addition to this service, we also handle the process by which recommendations are sent out to the Law Schools. A further problem faced by Law School applicants is that more and more schools are asking for letters of recommendations from the Deans of the University. This task is handled by the Pre-Law Advisors.

They are in E-20 Machmer, and have the willingness and capabilities to serve you.

Robert W. Gage (above) Acting Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs, and Registrar Ralph D. Jones said yesterday there will be more of the same this semester at UMass Amherst.

Gage Expects No Changes In Administration Policy

By DON SAINT-PIERRE

Acting Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert W. Gage and Registrar Ralph D. Jones said yesterday that they expect little change on the Amherst campus during the up-coming semester.

Gage said that this is due essentially to the fact that most administrators are waiting for a permanent chancellor to be appointed.

The Collegian reported yesterday that the Chancellor Search Committee should be forwarding to the Trustees their recommendations for permanent Chancellor by March 1. On this point, Gage said that he "expects the Trustees to act quickly" and that Amherst "should have a new Chancellor by the end of March". He added that if Randolph W. Bromery, the present Acting Chancellor, is nominated, the position will be filled immediately. If, however, another person is selected, a permanent Chancellor will not be realized until next September, due to the problems of moving to the area from outside.

On the student on-campus housing problem, Gage said, he does not expect any more co-ed dorms to be formed until "a more sensible housing policy is established". He said the recent surge of co-ed dorms during the last year has produced a lack of male dorms and a surplus of female dorms. This, in turn, could force males not wishing so, into co-ed dorms, which he said "is just what we're trying to avoid".

Gage added that he is looking forward to more integration of the scholastic and dormitory environments. "There is presently too much wasted space in the dorms that could be used for classes and seminars", he said.

Gage said that aside from these programs he will continue to push the programs that were initiated by Bromery when he was Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs.

Registrar Jones said that as of yesterday enrollment "looks stable and should not deviate from the 16,400 students registered last semester." He added that the new cut-off scale seems to have helped students in that the number of academic terminations is down from previous years.

The new grading system does not include an "F" grade in the quality point average calculations. In the past this was calculated.

Jones said that registration went smoothly but he expects a more hectic time today during course changes. He said this is due primarily to the fact that students were not allowed any overloads during pre-registration, in an attempt to reduce the number of flagged courses. He said this will produce many more students adding courses today.

Jones said that if students go to Boyden Gym at their appointed time "everyone should be satisfied".

He said most of the confusion experienced last semester has been eliminated by using the gym for registration only. "Last semester everyone was passing something out, and all it produced was a fire hazard as most people were throwing it away as soon as they got it".

B.C. President Resigns

BOSTON (AP) — The Rev. W. Seavey Joyce, president of Boston College, has submitted his resignation, the college announced Monday.

The Very Rev. Joseph L. Shea, chairman of the college Board of Trustees, said a committee is being formed to begin screening candidates for a replacement. Father Joyce's resignation is effective June 30.

The selection committee will be made up of two trustees, two nontrustee directors, three faculty members, one administrator, two students and one alumnus.

The committee selection is to be completed by Feb. 23, and the group is to meet within a week after that. It has been charged with presenting the names and records of at least five candidates by May 17.

Father Joyce submitted his letter of resignation to the board Jan. 7. It was considered from then until the announcement Monday.

He joined the Boston College faculty in January 1949 as chairman of the Department of Economics. He became dean of the College of Business Administration in 1953, vice president for Community Affairs in 1966 and president in 1968.

He said in his letter that although the college is not without problems, "I believe we are in substantial control of them and I am convinced that Boston College is destined for a brilliant future.

"At the same time," he said, "Boston College is going through a major transition...It seems the appropriate time to select a new president who will have the vision, energy and wealth of talent to lead the college in a dynamic way during the fateful years ahead."

Father Joyce did not specifically assign a reason for his departure but his suggestion that it was time to select a new president with vision, energy and a talent for leadership echoed the resignations of a number of other college presidents, all of whom felt there comes a time for fresh hands at the wheel.

Father Joyce, a 58-year-old economist, headed the university during some of the most turbulent years in its 108-year history. The college was closed during most of the spring of 1970 by a student strike protesting a tuition increase.

The college incurred $4.6 million deficits in 1968 and 1969 and $3.8 million in 1970 but the deficit was cut to $1 million in 1971 and the current budget calls for the institution to break even this year.

I.R.A. Men Escape Ship

DUBLIN (AP) — Seven Irish Republican Army-(IRA)-guerrillas revealed Monday that shoe polish and butter were their secret weapons in making a dramatic escape from a prison ship last week.

The men, all of whom had been held after raids by security forces in Northern Ireland, slipped over the side of the prison ship Maidstone moored off Belfast and swam a quarter-mile through icy waters to freedom.

The ship is used to detain men held under Northern Ireland's internment-without-trial emergency laws.

After sawing through the iron bars of a porthole they climbed down a rope into the water dressed only in underpants, they told a Dublin news conference.

They covered their bodies with shoe polish as camouflage. They also rubbed themselves with butter to protect them from the freezing waters during the swim across the Musgrave Channel, where the ship is moored.

The men said they came ashore at a pier near the heavily guarded Lough power station. They hid for several hours before seizing a bus to make the final leg of their flight to safety.

Two UMass Students Lose Primary Bid

Two UMass students running for positions in the Amherst town government failed to get past the primary stage when the town caucus was held last week.

John MacGillvray, UMass class of '73, of 368 Puffton Village came in last in the race for selectman with 307 votes. Benjamin A. Surner Jr., not a student, also lost with 361 votes. The four winners in the caucus who will vie for the three selectmen openings are: Stephen A. Keedy, Robert J. Garvey, Leo E. Bouchard and Frank A. Decker Jr. with votes of 921, 717, 692 and 612 respectively. The town election will be held February 22, 1972.

Steven M. Gluckstern, a student at Amherst College, who resides at 100 Dana Street, also lost the election with his 382 votes. Rita B. Kropf and Katharine H. Schoenberger will be on the ballot for the one school committee position open with their 700 and 672 votes respectively. The other loser in the contest for the one year post was Gregory D. Camp, not a student.

The total election turnout in Amherst for the caucus, which eliminates the number of candidates running for office as does a primary, was 2015. Last year's caucus drew 1960 votes.

UMass Student Senate President Lee H. Sandwen said that he might back a write-in drive on election day for MacGillvray. The Town Clerk, Estelle Matusko has said that write-in candidates are acceptable.

Sandwen also announced his endorsement of Leo Bouchard for town selectman. Bouchard was responsible for bringing the voter registration books to campus.

Nixon Proposes $246.3 Bil. Budget For '73

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon rolled out a $246.3 billion fiscal 1973 budget Monday, unveiling two massive deficits, a request to boost the level of defense spending, an emphasis on research, and no new tax proposals.

Nixon concentrated on existing programs in the huge document, urged Congress to refrain from voting any additional money and defended his own deficit spending as good medicine for the economy.

For the fiscal 1972 year that ends June 30, the budget disclosed, the deficit will be $38.8 billion, the highest in 27 years, and fiscal 1973 will end $25.5 billion in the red.

The President said the fiscal 1973 deficit is responsible because it follows the "full-employment budget" concept. Spending, he said, is thus held to the amount of money that would be collected by the government if the economy were operating at maximum efficiency.

"Deficit spending at this time, like temporary wage and price controls, is strong but necessary medicine," he said in a 37-page budget message.

"We take that medicine because we need it, not because we like it; as our economy successfully combats unemployment, we will stop taking the medicine well before we become addicted to it."

The President urged Congress to resist approving expensive new programs if they can't be financed by raising taxes or eliminating other programs.

"This administration will vigorously oppose irresponsible and short-sighted spending proposals that would commit large sums of federal money to schemes that are politically attractive but would endanger an inflation-free prosperity," he said.

The size of the deficit for the current fiscal year came as no surprise; some officials had predicted it to be as high as $40 billion. Not since the war year of 1945 has the nation seen such a large deficit.

As a result, Nixon's own "full-employment budget" concept was breached. There was a full-employment deficit of $8.1 billion, due partly to increased spending programs voted by Congress and partly to the administration's own action.

Nixon officially adopted the concept a year ago. It calls for pegging the level of federal spending at the amount of money the tax system would bring in if there was 4 per cent unemployment, the official definition of full employment. The jobless rate is now 6.1 per cent.

He indicated that another irresponsible deficit as is this year's, could be recorded in fiscal 1973 "if the Congress adds to my recommendations for domestic spending as it did last year." That would increase the chances of a new round of inflation, he said.

Nixon said his program is just right, spending neither too much and kicking off inflation nor too little, which would hold back the rate of economic growth.

Administration officials said the budget is based on the expectation that the economy will grow by about 9 1/2 per cent in 1972. George Shultz, director of the Office of Management and Budget, said the administration expects that unemployment will be in the vicinity of 5 per cent at the end of the year.

Treasury Secretary John B. Connally said a 5 per cent unemployment rate is "the best we can get to this year without throwing the economy out of kilter." He said the administration is not going to peg an official jobless target, however, such as it has done in previous years.

Asked to comment on the political implications of the large deficit, Connally said he wished it could have been otherwise, that nobody is happy with it, but that it is the best course to follow with a slack economy.

"That's the same answer we got from the Democrats," a reporter quipped.

"The Democrats said a lot of things that were true," Connally, the only Democrat in Nixon's cabinet, responded.

The Treasury secretary said the budget contains nothing about a value-added tax, a proposal the administration is considering as a substitute for the property tax.

While the budget focused on existing programs, Nixon made a pitch for approval of his revenue-sharing, welfare reform and government reorganization programs.

He put $5 billion in the fiscal 1973 budget for his plan to share revenue with the states, even though Congress hasn't passed it.

In addition, Nixon proposed making revenue-sharing retroactive to Jan. 1, putting $2.25 billion in the budget for the current fiscal year to pay for six months of such a program.

For welfare reform, however, there was only $350 million, enough just to continue planning for his program which he dubbed "workfare." Nixon has asked that welfare reform start in fiscal 1974.

Of the new initiatives in the budget, the major thrust appeared to be Nixon's request to seek authority for new defense spending, and not all of it would be spent in fiscal 1973.

Actual outlays for defense would go up by $700 million to $78.3 billion, but Nixon asked Congress to authorize him to allocate an additional $6 billion for defense, mainly for strategic weapons systems, a major increase in shipbuilding, boost in research and development; and increased training and manpower for National Guard and Reserve forces.

The $6 billion would be spread over several fiscal years if Congress approves.

The nation's overseas arms-aid program took a major cut of $200 million to a total of $750 million.

The difference, however, was more than made up by a boost in military-related economic assistance, which would go up from fiscal 1972's $584 million to $796 million.

Nixon proposed spending $3.844 billion for all international affairs programs during fiscal 1973, a cut of $116 million. That includes $1.47 billion for foreign aid, due to drop by $70 million.

Nixon said the foreign assistance program has been trimmed to the essentials, but he added that "we must not undercut the efforts to developing nations to stand on their own."

The budget spotlighted research and development, an area that usually gains little attention. Actual R and D spending would go up by about $700 million to $16.4 billion.

But Nixon asked Congress to go beyond that and give the administration authority to spend an additional $1.4 billion.

He said this investment in science and technology in future years could be used for "the quality of American life" and economic growth in such areas as defense, space, health, transportation, energy and environment programs.

Nixon said for the first time the budget of the Health, Education and Welfare Department is bigger than that for the Defense Department.

Dem. Criticize Budget

WASHINGTON (AP)-Democratic Sens. William Proxmire, Edmund S. Muskie and Edward M. Kennedy criticized President Nixon's new budget Monday as being too pro-military.

But more-conservative Democratics criticized the budget on different grounds, including a large deficit or allegedly faulty arithmetic.

And House Republican Leader Gerald Ford of Michigan denounced in advance all budget criticisms by Democrats as coming from men "who brought this nation to the brink of economic collapse."

Proxmire, chairman of the Joint Economic Committee, said the money saved from winding down the Indochina war ought to be budgeted for nonmilitary spending.

"What the President has done is to take the so-called 'peace dividend' and give it to the Pentagon," the Wisconsin Democrat said.

"The President has clearly chosen B1 bombers, crash Navy shipbuilding programs and the ABM over child care, aid to the cities and higher education."

Muskie said defense spending is climbing when it ought to be dropping, and added that the proposed budget deficit is so large it will cause renewed inflation.

The Maine senator, a leading candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, said the budget is typical of what he called Nixon's "disastrous mismanagement of the economy."

Kennedy criticized the budget's "promiscuous increase of billions for defense, when what we really need is billions for schools and homes and health..."

The Massachusetts senator, who denies his high standings in public-opinion polls will tempt him to run for president, said the large budget deficit stems from a "sick economy" which needs stimulation.

Chairman George J. Mahon, (D-Tex.), of the House Appropriations Committee, said Congress must cut spending or increase taxes to trim the deficit Nixon proposes.

His Senate counterpart, Allen J. Ellender, (D-La.), said the actual proposed deficit is $36.2 billion, much higher than the $25.5 billion the administration projects for fiscal 1973.

USSR Greets Bangladesh

(AP)-A Soviet news agency reported that President Nikolai V. Podgorny and Premier Alexei N. Kosygin announced recognition in a telegram to Sheik Mujibur Rahman, prime minister of the new nation formed from East Pakistan after the India-Pakistan war.

The telegram said: "We convey to you and to the people of Bangladesh friendly wishes of peace, well-being and success in consolidating the state sovereignty of your country, in building a peaceful democratic republic."

Senate Reverses Itself

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Senate Monday moved toward giving the government broader authority to curb job discrimination but then reversed itself a few hours later.

The presence or absence of Democratic presidential aspirants made a crucial difference on each roll call.

At issue was how the federal prohibition against job discrimination based on race, religion, sex, or national origin is to be enforced.

White Pledges Muskie

BOSTON (AP)-Boston Mayor Kevin H. White and the legislature's Democratic leadership head the slate of at-large candidates pledged to Sen. Edmund S. Muskie for the state's April 25 primary, it was announced Monday.

Mayor White announced at noon he was supporting Muskie over New York Mayor John V. Lindsay because of the Maine senator's "previous experience as a national candidate and his acceptance within all segments of the Democratic party."

Berrigan Trial Begins

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP)-The Rev. Philip Berrigan and six others went on trial Monday on charges they conspired to kidnap Henry Kissinger as part of an antiwar plot. In an interview, Berrigan acknowledged that there was a discussion of such a possible kidnaping.

He added, "It's not a priority of ours to win acquittal, but to conduct a political trial and get the issue before the American people."

Soup Bowls Contaminated

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Food and Drug Administration said Monday its tests have confirmed that 200,000 soup bowls distributed in a nationwide sales promotion have unsafe levels of lead and cadmium.

The decorated bowls, manufactured by American Art China Co. of Sebring, Ohio, exceed FDA acceptable limits of 7 parts per million lead and .5 ppm cadmium, the agency said.

The last day to register before the February 22nd Town Election is WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1972. On that day there will be a registration session in the office of the Town Clerk, Town Hall from 12 noon until 10:00 P.M.

Court Strikes N.Y. Welfare Rules

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Supreme Court Monday affirmed lower-court rulings that laws requiring a one-year waiting period for welfare assistance in New York and Connecticut are unconstitutional.

Acting without a hearing, the Justices affirmed the judgements of two federal district courts that the residence rule violates the constitutional rights of poor people.

New York and Connecticut officials had appealed, claiming the states faced fiscal crisis. They failed to win a vote.

This indicates that despite the addition of four Nixon administration nominees, the court is not about to change its mind. It held in 1969 that states may not deprive new migrants of welfare.

The state officials claimed a strain on social and other public services was reason enough to require residents to wait a year. Connecticut said it might have to cut welfare across the board if its rule was not approved.

But the court turned the two states down with rulings that said only that the lower court judgments are affirmed.

In another action, the Justices split down the middle and wiped out the conviction of three big drug firms on charges of controlling the production and distribution of $1.7 million worth of antibiotics.

The 3-3 tie developed when Justices Potter Stewart, Byron R. White and Thurgood Marshall stepped out of consideration of a government appeal.

The companies, Chas. Pfizer, Bristol-Myers and American Cyanamid were convicted of antitrust violations in a nine-week trial and fined $150,000 each. However, in 1970, the U.S. Circuit Court in New York set aside the verdicts principally because of errors it found in trial Judge Marvin E. Frankel's instructions to the jury.

The government has the right to try the firms again. Justice Department officials declined to say whether they would do so.

On another front, the court skirted a test of the power of Texas officials to bar the sale of underground newspapers on state university campuses.

Justice White, in a 6-1 decision, said that since the ban did not involve most of the colleges in Texas, the case should not have been considered by a special three-judge federal panel. Such special courts customarily rule on constitutional issues.

Justice William O. Douglas dissented. He said the disputed rules imposed by the regents "touch upon the freedom of expression in colleges and universities in all four corners of the state."

The special court had struck down the regulations as unreasonably restricting the rights of students and student organizations to engage in free speech and free association.

Monday's action does not settle matters. The test case may now be processed by the U.S. Circuit Court in New Orleans and then returned to the Supreme Court.

FTC Hits Industry Cereal Monopoly

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Federal Trade Commission announced Monday that it will file a complaint charging the four largest cereal producers with monopoly of the industry, false advertising and price fixing.

The proposed complaint alleges that for the past 30 years the "Big Four" of the cereal manufacturers have dealt in actions which have resulted in a highly concentrated, noncompetitive market in the production of ready-to-eat cereals.

The cereal manufacturers named in the proposed complaint were Kellogg Co., Battle Creek, Mich.; General Mills, Inc., Minneapolis, Minn.' General Foods Corp., White Plains, N.Y.; and The Quaker Oats Co., Chicago, Ill. The FTC said these four companies control 91 per cent of the domestic sales of ready-to-eat cereal.

Consumer advocate Ralph Nader welcomed the FTC announcement. He said the complaint, "if successful and widely applied, would be one of the most important developments in antitrust enforcement in the last decade...a necessary first step toward removing from our economic system the cancer of monopoly power."

In its complaint the FTC said these firms established and maintained a noncompetitive market structure and shared monopoly power through proliferation of brands and trademark promotion, artificial differentiation of products, unfair methods of product promotion, restrictive retail shelf space control programs, and acquisitions of competitors.

"All four firms' advertisements create the impression that ready-to-eat cereals enable children to perform physical activities depicted, but a child's ability to perform such activities depends on many other factors such as body build, exercise, rest, diet and age," the complaint said.

It also charged that Kellogg, General Mills and General Foods falsely advertised that their products are effective and adequate in controlling or losing weight.

"Kellogg's and General Mills' ads featuring athletes misrepresent the effect of their ready-to-eat cereals on their athletic performance," the complaint charged.

Bicentennial Site Selected

PHILADELPHIA (AP)-After years of indecision and controversies, a 2,000-acre tract of flat, barren land near Philadelphia's airport has been tentatively chosen for the site of the nation's 1976 bicentennial celebration.

Four other sites have been considered and rejected by bicentennial officials. Selection of the airport site was announced Saturday by the Mayor's Bicentennial Committee, named by Mayor Frank L. Rizzo, who is expected to push hard for the committee's choice.

The committee must now narrow down the site to 400 prime acres to hold the core of the exposition and 200 additional acres for parking.

The specific site will then be submitted to the Bicentennial Corp. for the approval of its full board of directors. If that is granted, a full plan with all cost and transit plans must be presented by Feb. 10 to the U.S. Commerce Department and the American Revolution Bicentennial Commission for their approval.

Rizzo, however, has asked for an extension of the federal deadline.

The committee's report said only six homes and one church are located on the tract and that "the exposition need not interfere with these."

To Be Or Not To Be

If there were not already too many Democratic candidates for the Presidential nomination, one could probably understand the never-ending quest by many people to add one more name to the list. As it is, however, every public figure from Washington to Maine who has ever had any ties to the party, and some who have not, have entered themselves into the 1972 battle. Yet the name of Ted Kennedy lurks ever-present in the background for every one of them.

Ted Kennedy, you'll remember, was not a candidate for President in 1968 and he failed to live up to the expectations of many who felt he would raise the fallen symbol of his brother and carry Bobby's martyrdom to the White House. Even then, though, the Democratic leaders were wary of the vote-getting power of the Kennedy name, especially after the assassination of a second brother. But no real draft got off the ground in 1968 and Hubert Humphrey emerged, as expected, with the nomination.

Four years have passed since then, but most political observers have not felt that time nor a Chappaquiddick bridge have seriously damaged the Massachusetts Senator's political image. Although Muskie heads closer day by day to the nomination, the spectre of Kennedy still causes the Maine Senator anxiety and it is Kennedy, not McGovern, Humphrey, Jackson or any of the others, who dominates the headlines.

The reason for this is simple. Everywhere he goes, Kennedy is forced to constantly deny his desire to seek the nomination. Day after day, the story of his most recent statement hits the front pages as if it were a major shock. People read about Kennedy, not about Lindsay, Wallace or Hartke. Yet rather than believe his statements, the candidates prefer to look at them as an effort to avoid the political squabbling of the primaries so that he can emerge unsullied at a Convention deadlock. The question that first arises is why?

The fact that being a politician necessarily implies lack of integrity is a poor excuse, even though the murkiness of Chappaquiddick still remains. Even sworn statements by Kennedy and a refusal to attend the Convention have not done the trick. In fact, Senator Brooke stated recently that he still foresees the possibility of a Kennedy draft.

It is not a popular position to support Kennedy, at least on campus, and that is not the purpose here. In fact, it is contended here that there is nothing to support him for. It is possible, after all, that Kennedy does not seek the presidency or, at least, that he wants to wait until 1972. Whatever happens, though, he will suffer for there will be those who feel he lacked the guts to fight for the nomination or that he was not strong enough to battle the likes of Muskie and Humphrey.

In a way, John Kennedy helped support the theory that you can't trust a politician with his missile gap speeches of 1970 and the Bay of Pigs incident. But he did not invent it nor was he the last to employ the half-truth or lie in political oratory. In fact, his successors have only perfected the technique.

History is not enough to cause us to distrust every individual who enters the public arena. Even in Ted Kennedy's case where Chappaquiddick serves as an example, the details are not well enough known. Even if we must consider it, the denial of intent to seek the presidency differs from Chappaquiddick in its premeditation. While he certainly did not plan the events at the bridge, he cannot deny what he has already said about his intention for 1972. If Chappaquiddick is to be an issue, it should be in a campaign and not about the lack of one.

If Kennedy is lying, then he will be forced to expose himself sooner or later. Even if the American people could forget his past denials, none of his Democratic rivals would and they would certainly amplify the hypocrisy. For the time being, then, let us worry about choosing between those already declared. God knows, that's enough to do for a while.

Unscheduled Summit

The Colleges - A Middle Course

By EVELYN S. HARMER

How in the future can we avoid the problems of either too "open" or too "closed" a system of higher education? The answer would seem to be in taking a middle course which would incorporate the advantageous aspects of both, while seeking to eliminate the disadvantageous.

Students of high intellectual caliber ought to be afforded the best possible education, regardless of their ability to pay. Opportunities to obtain a high quality college education should be available also for students who are not of the first rank but still capable of good academic work.

While ordinarily academic degrees should not be devalued by awarding credits for nonacademic achievements, some form of recognition should be devised for individuals having substantial accomplishments in a field of endeavor, paid or unpaid.

In particular cases advanced standing in degree programs might be given to mature persons who have experience equivalent to course work. More programs similar to the "transitional year" at Brandeis University might be established to help young people of promise, who initially lack sufficient qualifications, to prepare for admission as regular students. There is a need for additional high quality part-time and home-study opportunities.

For those whose talents and interests suit them better to shorter, more specialized programs, there needs to be an expansion of professional and vocational schools, along with business and industrial training courses.

However, higher education has at least two purposes other than career preparation which apply to the technically oriented person as much as to the scholar. One is to provide each citizen with sufficient information to protect his own and others' civil rights and to guide him in selecting wise, humane, competent leaders.

A second is to give men and women access to knowledge which can enable them to explore their individual potential and work together to create the kind of society in which they can live a fully human existence. Therefore, specialized programs should include adequate "liberal" education.

Other steps too should be taken so that narrower educational preparation does not have repressive effects on the students involved. For example, specifications of "routine" jobs should allow for elements of interest and challenge for the individual worker. The design of working places ought to contribute to employees' total well-being.

The environment of the entire community should be healthy, beautiful, and culturally enriching, so that even those whose capacities keep them in relatively low-paying jobs are not denied access to the treasures which nature and man's genius can produce.

Preserving excellence in higher education, while at the same time widening opportunities and increasing the variety of programs, will present a tremendous challenge. We must find ways to assure uniformly good public school systems so that a child from a poor community is not at a disadvantage in competing with a child from an affluent one.

Inevitably, more money, public and private, will have to be allocated to higher education. Increasing opportunities, far from permitting a deterioration in academic standards, will demand more scholars of the first magnitude to become professors, researchers, curriculum planners, administrators. However, if there can be some dispersal of education facilities so that the need for constructing buildings is diminished, if one teacher, through television, can reach thousands of students in courses amenable to such presentation, if people can find programs of the right type and length rather than wasting time in courses which are not to their benefit, then far more value will be received for each dollar spent than at present.

In the past we have expected our universities to be sanctuaries of scholarship, guardians as well as teachers of our adolescents, vehicles for the social and political reforms that the rest of society has failed to achieve, and even employment agencies. Universities share responsibility in these areas, but they cannot and should not bear it alone.

Decisions on the content and standards of programs are primarily educational ones. But decisions on how accessible some form of higher education is to be for all our people, and on whether our educational system will help us to lead more humane and richly beautiful lives, are political ones. In a democracy that means ultimately it is up to you and me.

Mrs. Harmer, a Boston resident, has taught adult education classes while completing PhD studies in the history of ideas at Brandeis University.

Hard-Core Nonviolence

WASHINGTON--There seems to be a dangerous trend in this country toward hard-core nonviolence. Many persons are becoming concerned about it and Dr. Womrath Shurgs has just completed a study on nonviolence which points up how this trend is affecting all of us.

Dr. Shrugs told me, "You can't turn on your television set any more without finding at least one show devoted to nonviolence. It could be a comedy or a musical hour, but my study indicates that the public is willing to accept more nonviolence than it ever has before."

"But surely," I said, "they're now showing hard-core nonviolent shows in prime time?"

"Not many, I'll admit," Dr. Shrugs said, "but there are still enough to affect young person's minds. Just the other day I saw my son watching two nonviolent shows back to back. What do you think was going through his mind while he sat there?"

"I have no idea," I said.

"He was thinking: 'If this is the way life is on the TV screen then that's the way it must be on the outside.' He was getting a distorted picture of America."

"Why don't they ban hard-core nonviolence on television altogether?" I asked.

"Because there is a certain type of public that goes for it. Advertisers are only interested in selling their products and if they think they can do it with nonviolence they will, no matter what it does to children."

Dr. Shrugs said, "This nonviolence syndrome is not just on television. It is permeating every part of our lives. In every town in this country there is at least one motion picture theater featuring a nonviolent film. These theaters blatantly advertise the pictures in the newspapers. Look at this advertisement for 'Fiddler on the Roof.' Here is a musical, a hard-core nonviolent picture, and any child with $2.50 can go see it."

"That's terrible," I said. "Why do the police allow it?"

"They're helpless. Every time they arrest a theater owner for showing a comedy or a musical or a clean love story the judge throws the case out of court. We're living in a permissive society where nonviolence is as American as apple pie."

"But Dr. Shrugs," I said, "isn't there an argument made that it's better for people to let out their nonviolent feelings in the theater than take them out on somebody in the street?"

"It's nonsense," he said. "Nonviolence breeds nonviolence. Kids get ideas from what they see and emulate the nonviolence they've been exposed to. My study shows that the more nonviolence a child watches, the more pacified he becomes. I've known kids who have left a Walt Disney film and gone home and kissed their mothers."

"Oh, dear," I said, "what can we do to stop this trend from getting out of hand?"

"First the public must be made aware that it is going on. Then they must be shown that nonviolence on TV and in the theaters cannot be separated from the nonviolence being committed in our towns and cities. We must make the producers and networks responsible for their products. If they won't police themselves and eliminate hard-core nonviolence from their entertainment, then the government should step in. And if the producers and network people still won't get into line then there is only one thing left to do."

"What's that, Doctor?"

"Kill them."

Letters To The Editor

No Smoking

To the Editor:

Recent statements concerning the hazards to nonsmokers made by Dr. Jesse L. Steinfield, the Surgeon General of the U.S. Public Health Service, prompted me to write this letter. He said, "Smoke-filled air contains visible smoke particles and invisible gasses that may irritate the eyes and nasal passages. These same substances may also trigger allergic reactions. The least obvious and most insidious danger is that a colorless gas, carbon monoxide, may get into the nonsmoker's bloodstream in sufficient quantity to damage his heart and lungs." It is for these reasons that "NO SMOKING" signs must be posted in all academic classrooms and auditoriums on this campus. The faculty as well as the student population must follow strictly this request. Now is the time that nonsmokers make their voices heard. We have suffered through too many lectures and classes beside human smokestacks.

Disappointment

To the Editor:

I read with disappointment Mr. Ladd's "commentary" in the Collegian criticising the report of the committee on the Future of the University for it somehow does not show Mr. Ladd as the intelligent person I think he is. The report may be many things, but shallow it is not! This word could better be applied to Mr. Ladd's criticism, which hardly begins to analyze in any depth or represent any thoughtful alternatives. I would ask him to study the report further and possibly to talk with some of the men and women of good will who gave so generously of their time and effort to help all of us plan for the future. Personally I am not in agreement with many of the suggestions in the report, but I appreciate it for its stimulating and provocative challenge and know we will be grateful for it as discussions progress.

An Open Letter To Those Students Who Registered For Food Science 101

Dear Students:

Dr. Frederick Francis, the Head of the Food Science Department, and I wish to thank you for registering to take Food Science 101. We have worked very hard during the past two years to develop a course which would be interesting to everyone, a course which would emphasize concepts rather than formulas. And you have responded by registering in record numbers.

But, as many of you now know, we have a problem. During finals the Scheduling Office notified us that 2,800 students had pre-registered for our course. As we understand it, the Provost's Office, working closely with the Scheduling Office, worked overtime during the next two weeks trying to find a means to accomodate all who had pre-registered for the course. But on such short notice, it was simply impossible.

We then met with Mr. Robert Woodbury, an Associate Provost, and several members of the Student Senate Committee on Academic Affairs to discuss what should be done. We agreed that we should accomodate freshmen first, since it is primarily a freshman course and next as many seniors as possible, since it will be their last opportunity to take the course. Mr. Woodbury assured us that his office will continue to work toward a solution to this problem perhaps employing video taping or closed circuit television) in order to accomodate more students next semester.

Again, thank you for responding so favorably to Food Science 101. Dr. Francis and I look forward to seeing you, in class, if not this semester, then some time in the near future.

My Island Fair

On this rainy day and darkened night
I think of these things with all my might Lest they should slip away and out of sight
And converge upon my stormy plight.

Over my head I see a stormy cloud
Ready to burst with agonies aloud,
Screaming with terrors, horrible and loud
Wrenching me forth, above the crowd.

Yet I ascend into the darkened mass
Never ending, no opportunity can pass,
Bells toll and I feel the bend
Around a myriad of turns--my end!

Tossing and turning, my pain to bear,
I reach out for help to find none there.
Yet in my salvation I know there's you
You'll come once more before I'm through.

I cannot get out of this squirmy mess;
Reach in after me, to you I confess
My sins, my hopes, my blood,
And even my mind's loosened flood.

You are my Island in a sea of despair:
I swim to you, my Island Fair;
For you are my warmth and desire
You are the water to extinguish my fire!

And in a whirlpool of scenes gone past
You're the only one that seems to last;
Through eternity you stand--a rock
The Island where my mind can dock.

Swirling through nightmareish seas--
A ship without anchor, whatever I please,
A body without motion and a mind without place
With salvation only in God's gentle Grace.

Come upon me now with tearful chills,
I know it hurts, it never kills
And yet my tears are wasted away
God help me--this very day!

Picturesque scenes--as you like--
I only see this fearsome pike,
For what is wrong and what is right
Seems always answered without a light.

Blindness...and...despair...
Tear...at...the...air...
Ripping at the pieces and placing them there
Examined too little, and not with care.

The omnious cloud goes out to play,
How many lives are ruined on this day?
Too much for money and too little for pay,
Oh come and clear the black fog away!

It chokes, it strangles, it buries me blind,
It rips at my heart and tears at my mind,
Enveloping from all sides, alas--no retreat:
Ten thousand times it has me beat!

It turns off the ice and turns on the heat,
Piercing and probing upon my defeat.
Drums roll and the bugle blares
The sound of "Taps" over the air.

Yet I rise again, like the Phoenix renewed,
Vast sweeping powers, the battle reviewed;
Taken into account the losses past,
I'm free of it all, free at last!

And if I could I'd sever these chains,
Light shining through, destroying these rains;
Thank God for this luminous ally:
You are the person on whom I rely!

Editorial Points

Perhaps the Defense Department should take the hint put forth over the weekend by the weather. In an operation designed to acclimate the Marines to cold weather and snow called Snowy Beach in Maine, the resulting conditions were fair with temperatures in the 40's. The main problem for the Marines so far has been cleaning the mud off of the snow shoes.

Among some interesting findings by a group of Harvard undergraduates was included the following tidbit: alcohol was the only drug found to have any relationship with grades. It seems that liquor was consistently associated with lower grades. Another discovery was that sexual activity was a distinguishing characteristic of drug users. The obvious question is, if drug users are busy with sex and studying, what are the drunks doing with all their time?

Continuing Ed, Position Filled

Evan V. Johnston has been named to a new post as associate director for program development in the UMass Division of Continuing Education.

Mr. Johnston, who has been executive vice-president of the Associate Alumni at UMass since 1959, will assume his new post Jan. 31. His main responsibility will be to expand the scope of the continuing education division's conference, workshop and institute effort. He will identify groups and areas not now served by continuing education and design programs for them.

The Continuing Education Division, directed by Dr. William C. Venman, brings over 20,000 people to the Amherst campus to participate in approximately 300 institutes, conferences and special courses each year. The division also offers 70 courses in 33 subject areas for part-time and evening students.

Evan Johnston was born in and now resides in Easthampton. He is a 1942 graduate of Williston Academy who served in World War II and the Korean War as a Navy pilot, retiring with the rank of lieutenant. He is a 1950 graduate of the University. At UMass he was a varsity football player, a mathematics major and a member of the senior mens honorary society Adelphia.

Before coming to UMass, Mr. Johnston was Director of Development for the Clarke School for the Deaf in Northampton. In Easthampton, he has been a School Committee member for 12 years and active in the Junior Chamber of Commerce and the Lions Club.

The last day to register before the February 22nd Town Election is WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1972. On that day there will be a registration session in the office of the Town Clerk, Town Hall from 12 noon until 10:00 P.M.

Draft Counselor's Corner

Lottery Loophole Plugged

By GILBERT J. SALK

Welcome back, brothers and sisters. While you were gone, the world of the draft turned upside down, and it's going to take a while to get everything reordered. So the next few columns will deal with what's happening, or, more accurately, what we think is happening. Much of the advice we give now is pure speculation, and will be limited to such until there is enough data from new SSS practices to make more definite predictions about their behavior. So bear our own uncertainty in mind, at least until we can get a clearer picture.

A special note to all draft counselors: There will be a brief, but important, meeting tonite in the Draft Counseling Services office in 923 CC. It will be at 5:00 p.m. Please attend if at all possible. We have some important decisions to make.

Now, on to the new draft. The first thing to try to deal with is the Extended Priority Selection Group thing that hit the news just before the end of the year. It's complicated, so sit down while you read this.

First, if your number was over 125 and you were 20 or older on Dec. 31, 1971 and your classification was 1-A at year's end, you are absolutely out of the draft. The EPSG does not apply to you, and you can stop reading this column. You're safe. Congratulations!

However, if your number was below 125 and you were 20 or older on Dec. 31, 1971 and you were classified 1-A before the end of the year, then you are now in the EPSG. This means that your liability continues until the end of March (longer if you have an appeal pending) but that if you are not drafted by that time you, too, will be safe. The EPSG was originally created to close a loophole in the lottery which previously allowed someone with a low number to drop a deferment late in the year and escape without being called. As soon as the loophole was discovered, the EPSG was created to fill it. Now, anyone whose number has been reached by his board, but who became eligible to be drafted too late for his board to issue an induction order during the calendar year, is automatically placed in the EPSG. He will be called before anyone else.

A strange thing happened this year, however. A number of factors (election year, 18-year-old vote, replacing troops with bombs in the war against Vietnam, the fact that the Army called many more men than they needed early last year to con-(vince) Congress that a draft was needed so they could still control your life, etc.) all conspired to make it highly unlikely that there would be any draft call for the first three months of the year. This means that anyone in the EPSG would not be drafted.

As a result, a regulation which was intended to close a loophole became a loophole. Unfortunately, word about the opportunity did not get out until after Christmas, and only appeared in a few newspapers, so most people didn't find out about it in time. But if you did hear about it and drop your deferment, this is your situation:

If there is no draft call before April 1, you will be dropped into the Second Priority Group, and be safe from the draft. At some point in the future, when your board gets around to it, you will be reclassified 1-H, and that is the last you will hear from your board.

If there is to be a draft call before the end of March, most of you will have two warnings. The first will be articles in the newspaper announcing that a call has The second, for those of you who have never had a physical, will be a notice to report for a preinduction physical exam. If you are in the EPSG, and either of these things occur, consult a draft counselor at once.

Free draft counseling is available on campus from Draft Counseling Services, with offices in 923 Campus Center. If you have any problems or questions about this or other draft situations, Qualified counselors at DCS will be glad to help you.

PEACE.

Tortured for Christ!

Milan Haimovici

Lutheran pastor Milan Haimovici spent eight years in Romanian jails passing through indescribable tortures. The Communists placed him barefoot on burning coals. He was savagely beaten in the groin and made to empty barrels filled with the human waste of thousands of prisoners with his own hands. However, his faith withstood all these trials. Even Communist officers as they spoke later about it, were filled with such respect that they took off their hats when speaking about this living saint. Thousands of Christian prisoners died in Romanian Communist jails. A complete account of their courageous faith and stand for the Lord is contained in the book TORTURED FOR CHRIST, by Rev. Richard Wurmbrand, a bestseller in 25 languages.

WE HAVE uplifting SOLUTIONS TO EVERYDAY PROBLEMS.

In this instance, we are lifting a complete house to demonstrate a new concept of aerial delivery of assembly line-produced dwellings from factory to homesite.

But . . . this same Sikorsky® helicopter could have been effecting a rescue mission off a wallowing tanker in a North Sea gale. It could have been airlifting food and supplies to starving villagers in flood-ravaged Tunisia . . . or transporting equipment for on-the-spot control of off-shore oil pollution.

Obviously, what we're pointing out is the impressive record and adaptability of our helicopters in solving really important human problems.

There's much more to come in our world of exciting, advanced VTOL aircraft systems. For example, Heavy-Lift Skycranes® and Tilt-Rotor Transports. And just around the corner are our High-Speed Commercial Transports—designed to ease short-haul mass transportation headaches.

Does this kind of engineering attitude stir your sense of responsibility and imagination? Then you should talk careers with us. There's ample opportunity for innovation in: autonavigation systems • avionics • computer technology • electronic test • materials engineering • mechanical analytical design • structures engineering • systems analysis . . . and more.

Female, minority group and veteran applicants especially welcome.

Sign Language Course Now Open

A course in sign language for the deaf will be offered at UMass this Until now, such courses were available only to students enrolled in the UMass program for Media Specialists for the Deaf.

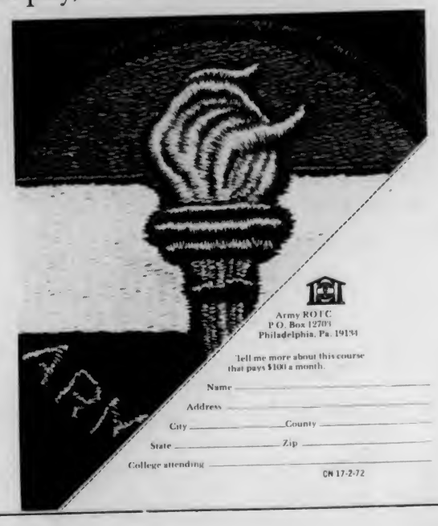
Registration for the course will be until Friday, Feb. 4, and classes will begin later, at a date to be set. To register or obtain more information on the course, call Mrs. Maxine Brown or Mr. Stanley Patrie at the UMass Audiovisual Center, or call (413) 545-2455. Modular credit will be offered for the course.

The objective of the course is to provide an introduction to a system of manual communication frequently used by the deaf.

In the United States, the deaf constitute five to 10 percent of the total population. Through the sign language course, Mrs. Brown and Mr. Patrie hope to increase the percentage of normal-hearing people who will be able to communicate with the many deaf persons who use the language.

Mr. Patrie, who is deaf, has taught deaf children for 32 years. He is an Audiovisual Center staff assistant involved in the preparation of educational transparencies to be used by schools for the deaf. Mrs. Brown, who is also on the staff, is the daughter of deaf parents and is a registered professional interpreter for the deaf. They will teach the course with the help of videotapes, transparencies, and projectors. Classes are tentatively scheduled for Wednesdays and Fridays, with the times to be arranged.



Now there's a course that pays $100 a month. Army ROTC.

In our Advanced Course the monthly subsistence allowance has just been increased. From $50 to $100. One hundred dollars every month for 10 months of the school year. To spend on room and board, dates and ball games. To save for grad school.

But Army ROTC means a lot more than more money. It means management and leadership experience that you just can't get anywhere else. The kind of thing that can land you a better job, and move you along faster once you get it. It means a commission as an officer and everything that goes with it. The prestige, the pay, the chance to travel, the experience.

Now ROTC looks even better. For the money you'll earn today. For the person you'll be tomorrow. See your Professor of Military Science, or send the coupon for information.

Army ROTC.
The more you look at it, the better it looks.

Fraud Suspected In Hughes Case

ZURICH, Switzerland (AP)- Police said Monday they have contacted authorities in the United States and Spain in a search for clues to a petite brunette named Helga who cashed $650,000 worth of checks for a purported autobiography of Howard R. Hughes.

An official of the Swiss Credit Bank, which received and cashed the checks made out to "H.R. Hughes," called it a case of refined fraud.

Thus the woman became a central figure in the affair of the autobiography put together by author Clifford Irving and sold to McGraw-Hill and Life magazine.

Irving claims he compiled the book from interviews with Hughes. Hughes' people deny the book is the billionaire's autobiography.

In New York on Monday an affidavit purportedly sworn to by Hughes was submitted in court denying the authenticity of Irving's book and that of another author.

Swiss police issued a warrant saying the woman was wanted on several counts of fraud in cashing checks that were to pay Hughes for the autobiography.

They said the woman, described as being about 35 years old and with shoulder-length hair, identified herself as Helga R. Hughes and for identification presented a Swiss passport issued in Spain when she opened a personal account with the Swiss Credit Bank here last spring.

Time magazine says the passport was issued in Barcelona. The Swiss Consulate there declined on Monday to comment on that report. The Swiss Embassy in Madrid said it had issued no passport in the name of Helga Hughes.

Swiss police issued a warrant for the arrest of the woman identified as Helga Hughes on a criminal complaint filed by McGraw-Hill in Zurich on Thursday through the firm's attorney in Switzerland. It charged fraud.

Dr. Rudolf Hegetschwiler, legal adviser of Swiss Credit Bank, said the bank was first alerted to possible irregularities about two weeks ago. That was when lawyers for Hughes, the 67-year-old recluse whose personal wealth is estimated at $2 1/2 billion, contacted the bank and requested a confirmation that their client had no personal account with the bank.

"Up to then, there had been no grounds for being suspicious," he said. "Evidently, the bank clerk could not know whether the passport was forged or not. The checks were cleared with the issuing party and only then was the money withdrawn.

School of Ed. Endorses Bromery

In an action taken on December 2, 1971, the School Council of The School of Education voted overwhelmingly to endorse Acting Chancellor Randolph Bromery's candidacy for the Chancellorship of the Amherst Campus of the University of Massachusetts.

The factors influencing the decision of the School Council were Dr. Bromery's impressive professional and academic credentials, his educational vision, and his outstanding record as an administrator, serving the University first as Chairman of the Geology Department and later as Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs at a time of serious social unrest in the country and in the University.

by SYDNEY OMARR

When I meet a lovely lady, I usually hope that she was born under the zodiacal sign of Cancer. That's because, if she is, she probably also is a good cook.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Hold off on travel. Develop ideas. Avoid premature decisions, actions. Neighbor may make some unusual demands; this also applies to relatives. Be patient. Seek new avenues of expression. Stress self-reliance.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Money is very much in picture; debts are paid and collected. Review financial procedures. Check assets; take inventory. Delay decision connected with large outlay of funds. Time is on your side.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): What appears adverse could rebound in your favor. Delay signing of contracts, other agreements. Be certain of facts. Don't heed one who merely whispers sweet nothings. That's what you could get--nothing.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): One who shares your interests may be leaning too heavily. Means do your share, but don't carry extra burden. Message should become increasingly clear. Be aware of fine print; read between lines.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Friends fall out. Means some of your ideas, notions and desires may be subject to revision. Those you rely upon act in strange manner. Accept necessity for changes. Don't hold on to past.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Diplomatic approach aids in achieving goal. This is no time to force issues. What you need will be offered. Give family member benefit of doubt. One in position of authority is not certain.

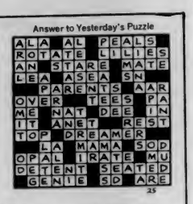
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): People who do lots of talking now could be seeking to cover lack of knowledge. Know this and don't believe everything you hear. Be perceptive. Ask questions which enable you to perfect techniques.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov.21): Stick to conservative course. Consolidate gains. Don't be tempted into giving up something for nothing. Avoid the sensational. Older individual can aid. Heed voice of experience. Money situation improves.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Partnership proposals require special care, consideration. Don't go by surface appearances. Look for potential hidden clauses. One who comes to you for advice is merely probing, testing.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 23-Jan. 19): Look for new avenues of expression. You can break through red tape. Temporary restriction, confinement may be on agenda. Creative resources surge to forefront. What appears a setback may be an asset.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Hunch could bring desired results. Key is to be confident. Emotions tend now to dominate. Give logic equal time. Lovers' quarrel should not be blown out of proportion. Strive for balance.



PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Study details; be thorough. Family situation will change in your favor. What appeared serious might actually be cause for hilarity. Don't take others--or yourself--too seriously. Play waiting game.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are introspective, a spiritual person and a natural humanitarian. Your experiences this year will range far and wide, with August indicated as a most significant month. You tend to be a perfectionist. But you never ask anyone to do what you would not attempt.

Barber Bests Archer In History-Making Tucson Open

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP)-Miller Barber rolled in an 18-foot birdie putt on the history-making 21st extra hole and outlasted George Archer in their marathon playoff for the $30,000 first prize in the Dean Martin-Tucson Open Golf Tournament Monday.

The 21-hole playoff was the longest in pro golf since Lloyd Mangrum won in 36 extra holes over Vic Ghezzi and Byron Nelson for the U.S. Open title in 1946.

But that one was set up differently.

The 1946 playoff was set for 18 holes and when they tied at the end they went to another 18.

In this one, Archer and Barber matched par 72s over the scheduled 18, then went to three more holes before the balding, portly Barber settled it with his dramatic birdie.

Archer, a lanky, 6-foot-6 former ranch hand, picked up $17,100 for his second playoff in three weeks.

Two weeks ago, the former Masters champion beat Dave Hill and Tommy Aaron over 18 holes for the Glen Campbell-Los Angeles Open title. All playoff participants in both tournaments received an additional $5,000 from the national television network.

Archer, now with more than $48,000 in winnings in just three weeks this season, and Barber tied at the end of the regulation holes Sunday over the 7,305-yard, cactus-studded Tucson National Golf Club course with 273 total, 15 under par.

Bobby Nichols failed to make it a three-way tie when he hit his tee shot into the water on the 72nd hole and lost a share of the lead with a double bogey six.

Barber, a 40-year-old who has now won at least once in each of the last six years, at one time held a three-stroke lead in the playoff round as Archer's famous putting touch deserted him.

The big guy, recognized as one of the finest putters on the pro tour, missed four times inside of five

The big guy, recognized as one of the finest putters on the pro tour, missed four times inside of five feet as Barber built his lead.

He pulled back to within one stroke when Barber double-bogeyed the 12th from a sand trap and George, who also bogeyed the 12th, birdied the next hole from 23 Barber again stretched his lead to two strokes with a 24-foot putt on the 15th hole.

Down two with only three to play, big George birdied the 16th from 12 feet and just as he did in Sunday's round-pulled even with a birdie on 17. He lashed a four-iron to within 2-1/2 feet of the cup and sank the putt that sent the 18-hole playoff into sudden death overtime.

Both parred the first two extra holes and Archer just missed from 30 feet before Barber rolled in the clincher.

Olympic Eligibility Meetings To Be Held

TOKYO (AP)-Avery Brundage, president of the International Olympic Committee, arrived in Tokyo Monday night for a series of crucial meetings concerning skiers' eligibility for next week's Winter Olympics.

At an airport news conference, he told some 50 newsmen that despite reports that he had a list of 44 violators of Olympic rules aimed at keeping commercialism out of the games.

"I have no such list. I have some names of individual violators.

"I have not seen the official entry forms so I don't know if they will be participating in the Olympic games," he added.

The question of whether some of the world's top skiers will be allowed to participate in the games opening Feb. 3 in Sapporo, Japan, comes up first before an eligibility commission meeting in Tokyo Wednesday.

The IOC Executive Committee meets in Tokyo Friday and then a general meeting of the IOC opens Jan. 30 in Sapporo.

There has been some talk of holding separate world skiing championships at Sapporo if the dispute over skiers' eligibility cannot be solved, but Japanese organizers insist, "we have been preparing for Olympic Games, and not for world championships."

Brundage said the games would go on as scheduled and wished them success. But he added they could be conducted only according to Olympic rules.

"The duty of the International Olympic Committee," Brundage said, "is to see that the games are conducted according to the Olympic code, which has eligibility rules designed to admit people who are interested in sports and eliminate those interested in sports for commercial reasons.

"The Olympics are sports event, not a business enterprise," he added.

Debbie Meyer Does Retire

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP)- Saying "I don't seem to have the drive anymore," Olympic gold medalist Debbie Meyer announced Monday she is retiring from competitive swimming at the age of 19.

Miss Meyer, a student at American River College, said she would not compete in the 1972 Olympic Games at Munich.

She won three gold medals at the 1968 games in Mexico City-in the 200, 400 and 800-meter freestyle events.

She won the Sullivan Award that year as the nation's outstanding amateur athlete.

"I have been to the Olympics and I don't want to work that hard to get there again," Debbie said. "My mind tells me to get moving but my arms won't go."

She set world swimming records 19 separate times, but has not done well lately.

Kelley Named WHA Coach

BOSTON (AP)-The newly formed World Hockey Association dipped into the collegiate ranks for leadership again Monday as Jack Kelley of Boston University's defending NCAA champions signed a seven-year contract as coach and general manager of the New England Whalers.

Kelley followed Coach Glen Sonmor of the University of Minnesota in joining the WHA which plans to start playing in the 1972-73 season.

A former Boston University star graduated in 1952, Kelley went on to become one of New England's most successful college coaches. In seven years at Colby College, his teams compiled an 89-51-6 record.

Kelley, who has been named Ne. England Coach of the Year three times, will complete the season at BU and assume his new duties with the Whalers April 1.

Skaters Bow To BU

By BILL BALLOU

There were an awful lot of people who went to Walter Brown Rink at Boston University expecting the defending NCAA champion Terriers to slaughter their opponents. After all, the opposition was only a Division II team who didn't have a rink of their own and who hadn't played a hockey game in three weeks. The opposition was only the University of Massachusetts and they didn't stand a chance.

A lot of people almost got their wish. Almost.

Almost because after about 50 minutes of hockey the BU Terriers had a commanding 5-0 lead and appeared to be on their way to the easy win a lot of people expected.

But a funny thing happened on the way to the forum or thereabouts, and that funny thing was UMass goals by Charlie Donovan, Pat Keenan, Eric Scrafield, and Jim Lynch. Sandwich these around a BU goal and you get the final count, 6-4 for Boston University.

In fairness to the Terriers, after the ten minute mark of the first period, the issue was really never in doubt. UMass had come out strong right off the opening faceoff, and for the first half of the opening stanza the play was all Redmen, only because of some good goaltending by BU's Dan Brady and some missed opportunities by UMass forwards were the Redmen kept off the board.

But from that 10 minute mark on the tide turned and the game became little more than goaltending practice for an harassed P.J. Flaherty.

The senior goaltender was immense in the UMass nets, especially late in the first period and throughout the second when the Terriers were able to keep the puck in the Redmen end for seemingly endless stretches of time. In spite of the heavy pressure and thanks to the work of Flaherty the score stood only 3-0 going into the final period.

Then came the third period and the deluge of goals. A total of seven were scored, three by the Terriers and four by UMass.

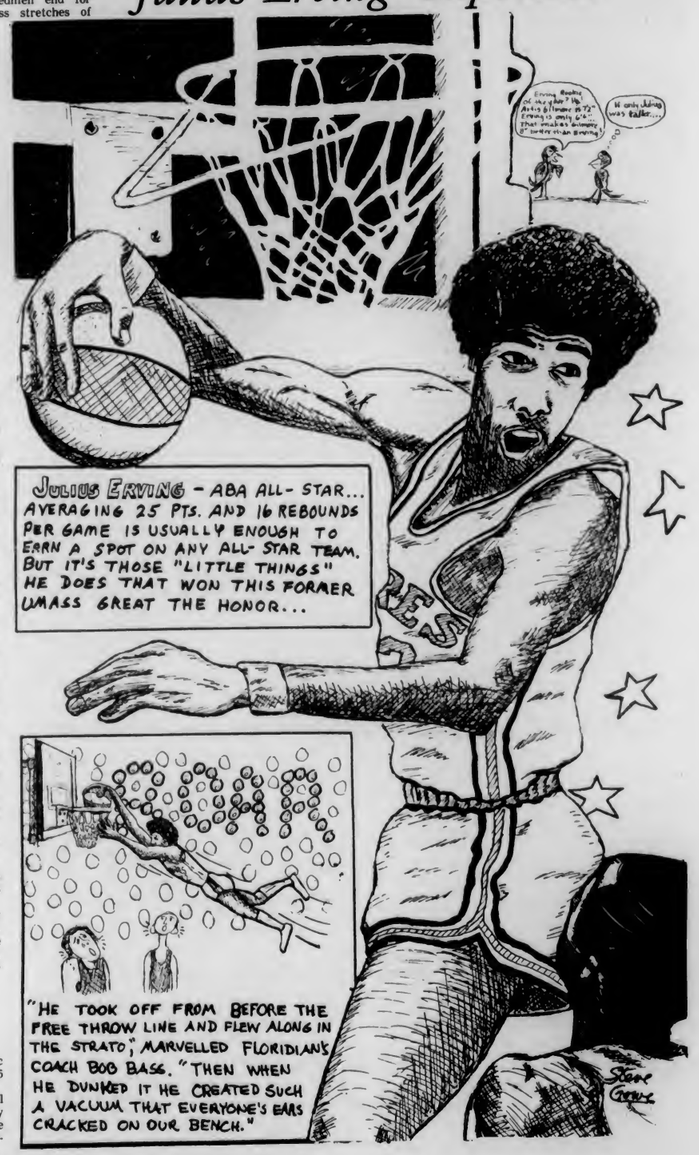
The period saw two separate letdowns, one by the up till now spectacular Flaherty and the other by the up till now invincible BU defense.

The letdowns, although surprising, didn't prove costly, as the issue had been pretty well decided in the first two stanzas. The period was exciting, but all the UMass scoring did little more than give the large number of Redmen fans at the game a chance to cheer about something.

The loss meant nothing except some bruised pride for UMass since BU is a Division I team and the game doesn't count toward Redmen playoff hopes.

Back before New Year's however, the Redmen did play a few games that did count in the race for a playoff berth. The skaters took part in the Williams Tournament played at Williams College and as expected took all the marbles by sweeping the three games that they played.

The first win was a 2-0 verdict over Oswego State with P.J. Flaherty posting his first shutout of the season after several close calls.



The second and third wins were relatively easy routs of the Colby Mules and the host club Williams. The main feature of this action was the second four goal game of the season for junior center Pat Keenan.

Julius Erving-Superstar

Erving Draws ABA Raves

NEW YORK

The writers, the broadcasters, the coaches...they are all trying to think up ways to appropriately describe the brilliance of Julius Erving that takes fans right out of their seats. And they are doing a pretty good job.

"He's got all the moves of Earl Monroe," says an expert, "except Monroe does them on the ground and Julius does them in the air."

"He took the whole building through the net on one stuff shot," marveled Coach Bob Bass of the Floridians "and it created such a vacuum that everyone's ears cracked on our bench."

"Some players have only power, and others have only finesse," says the Floridians' Warren Jabali. "Erving has both."

Then there are the more routine descriptive phrases such as superstar," and "spectacular" and "out of sight."

They are all apropos, they are all correct; they all describe Erving, a rookie who has leaped into the pro ranks and in half a season has turned into the top rebounding forward in pro basketball and one of its greatest scorers.

A springly 6-foot-6, who was the nation's second best rebounder as a sophomore at the University of Massachusetts and third best as a junior, Erving has been hauling in 15.7 caroms a game this season with the Virginia Squires, putting him behind only centers Artis Gilmore and Mel Daniels in the ABA. No forward in the National Basketball Association is within four rebounds a game of him.

And scoring? Erving is averaging 25.9 points a game. In the past seven games, he has averaged 30 points a game and now has scored more than 30 points in a game 14 times this season.

"Playing in the pros wasn't as difficult as I thought it would be," said the muscular forward with the huge hands and uncanny ability to hang in the air. "If you're unknown, as I was, you have an advantage. But I'm not unknown anymore."

Hardly. Not the way the crowds in every ABA city have reacted to his flashy play that features dribbling between the legs and behind the back and unbelievable twisting shots.

"I like the crowd, even if they're against us because when people are there and close to you they are going to react," he explains. "That's my game. I get psyched up and I tend to be flashier."

Actually, Erving is a rather quiet, conservative young man off the court who realizes the position he is in as a blossoming superstar.

"The flashiest thing I bought with my bonus was a new car, A Mark III," he says. "I invested the rest. Both my lawyer and I are conservative."

Erving, who still has one year to go to get a college degree, also has promised his mother he will return to school in the off season.

"Basketball is something I've wanted to do ever since I was13," he recalls, "play ball and go to college. And the only way was on a scholarship. Now the degree comes right after basketball in my priorities.

"I'm majoring in business management. Maybe some day I'll be running my own business."

Nixon Reveals Viet Peace Plan

Withdrawal Contingent On Prisoners Release

Open Elections Planned; Thieu To Resign

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon disclosed Tuesday a secretly offered Vietnam peace plan calling for withdrawal of all American forces within six months after agreement by North Vietnam to free all U.S. prisoners.

The secret plan also would provide for the resignation of South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu and the holding of free elections in that country–again conditioned on Hanoi's release of prisoners and agreement to a cease-fire throughout Southeast Asia.

In a broadcast from Saigon timed to coincide with Nixon's TV-radio speech to Americans, Thieu confirmed that he had agreed to resign if North Vietnam accepts U.S. proposals. And he said that in subsequent elections the National Liberation Front–the Viet Cong–and all other parties would be allowed to offer their candidates.

Nixon said that thus far the North Vietnamese had rejected or ignored the secretly offered proposals developed over a period of 30 months during which his principal foreign affairs adviser, Henry Kissinger, had made a dozen unannounced trips to Paris to present the U.S. proposals.

Until recently, the secret negotiations "showed signs of yielding some progress," Nixon said but now, he added, "it is my judgment that the purposes of peace will best be served by bringing out publicly the proposals we have been making in private."

Kissinger, who made a secret trip to Peking last summer to arrange Nixon's February journey to China, began the secret peace negotiations in Paris on Aug. 4, 1969, Nixon said.

During the ensuing months, he said, the United States offered a variety of proposals–always in private.

Nixon said the "most comprehensive peace plan of this conflict" was offered on Oct. 11 but "lies ignored in a secret channel while the enemy tries again for military victory."

The main elements of that eight-point plan, which he said he has instructed Ambassador William J. Porter to present publicly in Paris this Thursday are:

—Total withdrawal from South Vietnam of all U.S. forces within six months of an agreement.

—An exchange of prisoners which will begin the same day as the troop withdrawals and will be completed when they are completed.

—A general cease-fire throughout Indochina beginning when an agreement is signed and barring any infiltration of outside forces into any of the countries of Indochina.

—New presidential elections in South Vietnam within six months of an agreement, supervised by an independent body, with incumbent President Van Thieu resigning one month prior to the election.

—The other four points in the Nixon plan include an agreement that there will be no foreign intervention in Indochinese countries as set forth in the 1954 Geneva Agreement and the 1962 Laos pact; that there will be international supervision of military aspects of the agreement; that all armed forces must remain within their national frontiers and that there will be an international guarantee for the fundamental rights of the Indochinese and the status of all countries in Indochina.

Nixon's bombshell disclosures have election-year political implications. His Democratic critics, especially presidential aspirant Sen. George McGovern, D-S.D., have contended the North Vietnamese would release the nearly 400 American POWS if Nixon agreed to a withdrawal date.

Administration officials acknowledge that if Hanoi accepts the terms he outlined, Nixon can claim progress towards returning POWS. But if the Communists reject the offer, they say, the Democratic critics will have lost one of their arguements against Nixon's Vietnam policy.

"It is a plan to end the war now," Nixon said of the offer he outlined. "...Its acceptance would mean the speedy return of all the prisoners of war to their homes."

He said progress in the public negotiations had been disappointing.

"The American people deserve an accounting of why it has been disappointing," he added. "Tonight I intend to give you that accounting, and in so doing, to try and break the deadlock in the negotiations."

The chief executive then traced the 30 months of private negotiations, which included secret meetings on last May 31, June 26, July 12, and Aug. 16. At the Aug. 16 session, Nixon said, "we ... offered the complete withdrawal of U.S. and allied troops within nine months after an agreement on an overall settlement."

But less than a month later, he said, the North Vietnamese rejected the proposal and continued "berating us at the public sessions for not responding to their publicly presented seven-point plan."

"The truth is," Nixon said, "that we did respond to the enemy's plan, in the manner they wanted us to respond–secretly."

By publicly denouncing the U.S. stance, Nixon said the North Vietnamese "induced many Americans in the press and the Congress into echoing their propaganda-Americans who could not know they were being falsely used by the enemy to stir up divisiveness in this country."

Nixon said his latest private initiative came Oct. 11 when he set an unspecified communication to the North Vietnamese containing new elements.

He said he urged a meeting on Nov. 1 between Kissinger and one of Hanoi's top political leaders, Le Duc Tho. The North Vietnamese agreed and suggested a Nov. 20 date, he said. But on Nov. 17 the President continued, the North Vietnamese reported Le Duc Tho was ill and called off the meeting.

Since then, he said, "the only reply to our plan has been an increase in troop-infiltration from North Vietnam and Communist military offensives in Laos and Cambodia. Our proposal for peace was answered by a stepup in the war."

Disclosing full details of the plan "will prove beyond doubt which side has made very effort to make these negotiations succeed," Nixon said. "It will show unmistakably that Hanoi–not Washington or Saigon–has made the war go on."

Nixon said the new South Vietnamese elections would be organized and run by an independent body "representing all political forces in South Vietnam, including the National Liberation Front"–the Viet Cong.

After President Thieu and his vice president resign one month before the election, he said, the chairman of the South Vietnam senate would serve as caretaker head of the government.

Nixon touched on another element which he said was offered privately last July 26: "We remain prepared to undertake a major construction program throughout Indochina, including North Vietnam, to help all those people to recover from the ravages of a generation of war."

White House officials elaborated on one point made only briefly in his speech–"we remain willing to settle only the military issues and leave the political issues to the South Vietnamese alone."

The officials told newsmen this means negotiations can come in two stages: military aspects such as troop withdrawal, prisoner exchange and a cease-fire to be negotiated first and the political elements, including new elections, to be taken up later.

The officials, who would not allow the use of their names, indicated they expected a negative initial reaction from the North Vietnamese but that the United States still hopes "for serious negotiations."

There were two basic reasons for Nixon's decision to make public now the secret negotiations. The first, the officials said, is the hope that the disclosure will trigger a response. The second, they said, is the fact that the situation was "undermining our credibility and demoralizing the American people."

In his 20-minute speech, Nixon said his settlement offer is fair to both North and South Vietnam. "It deserves the light of public scrutiny by those nations and by other nations as well," he said. "And it deserves the united support of the American people."

The White House would disclose no details of Kissinger's 12 secret journeys to Paris. But press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Kissinger would meet with newsmen Wednesday.

Nixon's speech followed a day of mounting speculation on Capitol Hill and elsewhere that Nixon was prepared to set a date for full American withdrawal from Vietnam in exchange for the release of U.S. prisoners of war. But Ziegler during the day cautioned reporters about focusing on this aspect of the problem.

An Editorial

Nixon Misses Point

President Nixon last night disclosed an intricate series of secret negotiations between the United States and North Vietnam, proposed the most far reaching and liberal terms for a settlement of the Vietnam war that a U.S. president has so far deemed "reasonable", and showed that he is still missing the point about why the Vietnam war exists and why so many people in so many ways have urged the U.S. to end its military involvement immediately.

Last night's speech was the most comprehensive statement Nixon has made so far about the diplomatic attempts to stop the war, but doesn't guarantee that the U.S. will ever end its military involvement in that war torn area of the world. We are very willing to listen to the President's revelations about what the U.S. has done for the past 30 months (in which an additional 20,000

Lee Sandwen Wants You!

By EARNIE ROTMAN

The problem of undermanned offices & positions has always existed at UMass. But starting this semester, Student Senate President, Lee Sandwen, has decided to do something about this problem. He has announced that he will be looking for administrative assistants to aid him in his work as Student Senate President. "We have 12-15 good people working here in the Senate offices, but all of us are up to our ears in work," said Sandwen in a recent interview. He went on to say that in the past, good working people had to be dug out of the woodwork, but that he hopes to change this image with his newly created offices.

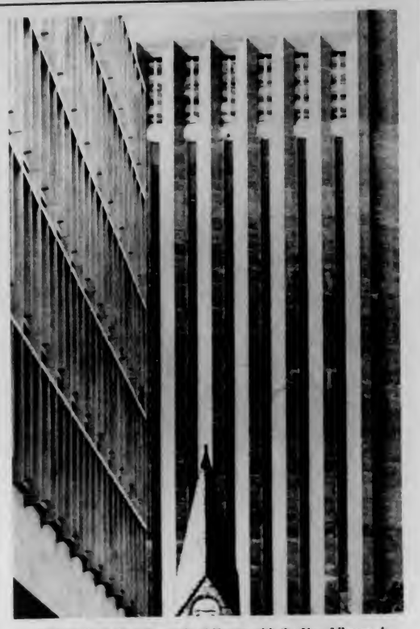
These positions, each to be an assistant to Sandwen's office, would specialize in one of three areas, trustees, faculty and graduate senate, and voter registration. The first committee would lessen Sandwen's burden by reading the endless amount of trustees' notes that flood into the Senate office. Also, they would act as a communication link between the campus and trustees, by allowing the students to have knowledge of the trustees activities. The second committee would keep tabs on the Faculty and Student Senate, also imparting information to the students on the Senates' activities. The third committee would assist Sandwen in the research and written work that comes up in the area of local government and administration. Lee Sandwen was quoted as saying that these committees would be similar to his "leg men" since they would be responsible for important decisions in their workings with Sandwen. All committees will also write periodic articles in the Collegian to keep students up to date on what is happening on campus.

Any UMass student is eligible to apply for one of these positions. Any interested people should see Lee Sandwen in the Student Senate office, Campus Center.

Ponds Serve Double Standard

Small ponds and wetlands built along interstate highways will not only enhance scenic values but will undo some of the environmental damage that comes from the construction of such roads, a UMass planner contends.

Resource planning Professor Carl Carlozzi headed a team that spent three years on a detailed study of the ecologic and aesthetic values of water associated with interstate highways. His conclusion is that water areas, properly planned, constructed and maintained, can provide a variety of scenic, recreational and ecological benefits.



"In building highways, engineers have frequently created new wetlands when they dig borrow pits that subsequently fill with water," Carlozzi explained. "Impoundments of streams and culvert construction also create manmade wetlands. With forethought and planning these new wetlands could enhance the environment of the highway corridor rather than detracting from it," he reports.

Carlozzi's study was supported by federal funds granted through the UMass Water Resources Research Center. He has summarized his findings in a 114-page report published by the center. The authors of the report were four UMass graduate students. Kenneth L. Bergstrom did the wildlife portion, Paul R. Dommel the public administration and legal portion, James C. Moulton the aquatic biology portion and Walter E. Rogers the landscape architecture portion. Co-investigators with Carlozzi were three UMass faculty: Julius Fabos of landscape architecture, Lewis C. Mainzer of government and Roger J. Reed of wildlife management.

Roughly one-half of the report sets out detailed design criteria for the creation of highway-bordering wetlands, including visual effect from the highway, construction, types of plantings, wildlife management, maintenance and many other factors.

The other half of Carlozzi's report deals with the administrative role of federal, state and local agencies in implementing a highway wetlands program or any other highway-environmental policy. Carlozzi concludes that a number of changes must be made in the present highway policy process if any kind of comprehensive highway-environmental programs are to be achieved.

First, he says, "The federal government must adopt a comprehensive policy that requires the states to incorporate environmental planning in the earliest stages of interstate highway planning." The federal government should also make a continuous commitment of adequate financial assistance to support such policy.

Feeling Split On Grading

By JEANNETTE MARTINEAU

Student reactions about the new grading system are fairly equally divided, with those student against the system as more vocal.

Predictably most of the student against the intermediate grades said that they had been hurt in one or more courses last semester. However, one education major felt that "we should try to get away from grades," and that the new system would tend to make her "more grade-conscious ...Now we're fighting over a half of a grade."

In general though students felt that the new system had the possibilities to help them also. Several said that their grades had "balanced out", and described the new system as "fairer".

Faculty said that the new system had "made grading easier." "My students fall into more than four categories," one faculty member explained," and with the new system, I have seven categories rather than four." Another agreed that his students' grades "were higher and fairer" than otherwise.

The question as to whether an "F" grade should be included in the cum received similar reactions. Those who answered "morally, yes" usually admitted never having failed a course.

Some reactions were: "I've never heard of a good reason why not..."It's a grade, like a D or an A. This way the people with D's get screwed." "If someone got four F's and one A, he'd get a 4.0. It's not fair to the guy who gets all C's."

Several students who had previously received an F felt that having to take the course over again, as well as having the F on their permanent record, had penalized them enough.

Howard Ziff casts a concerned eye on one of the many victims of course change day. Oh well, see you next year.

Herbert Aptheker seated on the left, discusses a major point concerning the Angela David case. If you want to hear Dr. Aptheker come to his lecture in room 106, Thompson Hall on Thursday, January 27, at 8 p.m.

Aptheker Will Discuss Angela Davis Case

"Angela Davis' case against The United States" will be the subject of the fifth presentation in the DuBois Lecture Series being offered at the University of Massachusetts by Dr. Herbert Aptheker. This lecture will be held in room 106, Thompson Hall at 8 p.m. on Thursday, January 27th.

The DuBois lectures which are offered under the auspices of the Afro-American Studies Department of the University which is named after and committed to the example and work of the great Afro-American intellectual and activist, concern the writing and work of Dr. DuBois. Dr. Aptheker, a leading historian of slavery and black resistance to that condition is a close personal friend, collaborator, and colleague of Dr. DuBois. He is an executor of Dr. DuBois' literary estate, the editor of the second volume of DuBois' autobiography, and is presently working on a ten volume series of the unpublished papers of the late scholar--activist who is known as the architect of Pan-Africanism.

The fifth lecture, originally scheduled on the subject "DuBois and Africa" will be presented next month. Thursday's lecture will begin with a discussion of Dr. DuBois' writing and thinking on the question of prisons and penal systems as they affect Black people and will include a discussion of Angela Davis' case against the United States, a political and legal development which is of major significance to the cause of civil liberties in this country and would certainly have been of great concern to W. E. B. DuBois. The delayed trial of Miss Davis on conspiracy charges will begin on February 1st.

Gap In Drug Laws

BOSTON (AP)-Judge Felix Forte was told in Suffolk Superior Court Monday that when the legislature recodified the state's drug laws last year it repealed the old law months before the new one takes effect.

Asst. Dist. Atty. Robert Snider said the old law was repealed effective Feb. 9, 1972, although the new does not take effect until next July 1. He said emergency legislation was being prepared to correct the error.

The matter came up when attorney John A. Pino, defending a client charged with heroin possession, said the old law went off the books 30 days after the new law was signed by Gov. Francis W. Sargent Nov. 11, 1971. Pino said all drug arrests since that date have been illegal.

Judge Forte said he would study Pino's claim and refer it to the Supreme Judicial Court if necessary.

Faculty Studies Union Plans

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

The idea has been termed revolutionary. It has been referred to in such words as essential and radical and it may find its way on the UMass campus in the near future.

Collective bargaining on the part of faculty is indeed innovative and different. In fact, it is difficult to assess the implications of faculty collective bargaining because it is such a new phenomenon.

"Collective bargaining on college campuses is so new as to defy prophecy" stated a special report of the Faculty Affairs Committee of the Faculty Senate. The committee was requested by the Senate to "investigate the appropriateness of faculty collective bargaining on the UMass Amherst campus." The findings of the report were reported back to the Senate on March 4, 1971.

Professor Harvey L. Friedman, chairman of the sub-committee which produced the report and Director of the UMass Labor Center, said efforts concerning the unionizing of UMass faculty members started about a year and a half ago. He said collective bargaining is the next step in University government because it is a "more efficient and effective means of governance."

The faculty senate has come under attack not only on the UMass campus but also in other Universities. The main reasons for the attacks stem around the fact that the Faculty Senate is only an advisory body and is not fully effective in implementing its policies.

The UMass Executive Chapter of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) stated in this month's AAUP newsletter that under its plan the Faculty Senate would be operated under a collective bargaining agreement. The votes of the senate would be made as collective bargaining demands instead of requests or resolutions.

"The faculty senate would no longer act merely in an advisory capacity, but would be an equal partner in the decision making process," said the newsletter.

There has definitely been a national trend toward faculty collective bargaining and at UMass the issue is beginning to attract attention. On Feb. 17 at a meeting of the Senate a special informative session will be held to discuss the issue.

At the meeting representatives of three unions will speak to the Senate; The American Federation of Teachers (AFT), the National Education Association (NEA) and the AAUP. The exact details of the meeting are being worked out, but it is expected that each representative will speak for 25 minutes. Directly after the speeches, the representatives will engage in a question and answer period. The speakers will break for dinner and afterwards will take part in an informal discussion with interested faculty members.

As far as the legality of a faculty union is concerned the report of the Faculty Affairs Committee states, The Faculty of the University is entitled under this law (Chapter 774 of the Mass General Laws) to designate an organization to represent them in contract negotiation with the administration over a whole spectrum-economic and non-economic in nature-of issues that gear directly on faculty interests.

"The administration is legally obligated to bargain with the faculty and to comply with any contract resulting from such negotiations," if the faculty elects to be represented for purposes of collective bargaining under the appropriate statues, states the Mass General Laws (Ch. 149, Sect. 178F).

Friedman in relating the labor-management concept said, "In our society the large support of public education has come from the labor unions since business normally supports private institutions."

Nader Endorses McGovern

WASHINGTON (AP)-Consumer advocate Ralph Nader said Tuesday Sen. George McGovern, D-S.D., was the only announced presidential candidate that would be an improvement over President Nixon.

Nader, one of 11 panelists who appeared to present the "People's State of the Union" message, added, however, that he did not intend to work actively for McGovern or any other candidate.

"I think he really means what he says about foreign policy," Nader said of McGovern. "Domestically, I think he has related to the poor...."

Asked about Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, who generally is conceded to be the front runner for the Democratic nomination, Nader said "I don't think he generally would be an improvement over Nixon."

Nader said Nixon failed to address himself to consumer protection in his State of the Union message and said the administration had not used the tools available to help the consumer.

"The President spends 10 times more of his time and effort watching football games than he does on consumer protection," Nader said. He called it a sign of the times that Miami Dolphins wide receiver Paul Warfield should command more of Nixon's time than persons defrauded by false advertising and mislead produce information.

Sen. Fred R. Harris, D—Okla., who moderated the program, said the anelists "come in more hope than dispair." John Kerry of the Vietnam Veterans Against the War, said those who had been in Vietnam "know that they have been carrying this war on so that the President can set a total withdrawal date and insure his election."

Attention Collegian Staffers

The following, as required by the Collegian Constitution, is notice of the forthcoming elections to fill the Board of Editors; the procedure to be followed for those wishing to file for office; the date and time for those candidates interviews by the MDC publishing Board, and the date of the general election.

The election shall be at 7 p.m. Tuesday, Feb. 1, 1972.

Applicants must file by 4 p.m. Friday, Jan. 28, 1972, in writing to Chairman, MDC Publishing Board, and appear for an interview by the Publishing Board at the designated place on Monday, Jan. 31, 1972, at 4:30-6 p.m.

The Publishing Board shall prepare a slate to be presented for vote on Feb. 1, 1972, by a simple majority of qualified staff members (those on the masthead the week preceding elections) present and voting. Nominations are to be encouraged from the floor.

The new staff will assume duties with publication of the edition for Thursday, Feb. 3.

Reaction To Nixon Peace Plan Warm

WASHINGTON (AP) — Accenting mixed but mostly favorable congressional views of President Nixon's peace plans, the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee said Tuesday night he understand the offer also included a halt to all U.S. bombing.

Sen. John Stennis, D-Miss., who said he approves the offer as "both reasonable and honorable," was countered by some longtime critics of the war including Sen. George McGovern, D-S.D., a Democratic presidential contender, who said he does not think the new Nixon formula will work.

Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., another of the large field of Democratic seekers of their party's presidential nomination, said the President's course of negotiation and action is "close to what I've been emphasizing".

"By making his proposals public the President has laid a useful foundation for his visit to China," Jackson said. "I hope he will make very effort to get Peking to use its good offices in getting the release of our prisoners and a standstill cease-fire."

McGovern recommended that a Senate panel of four Republicans and four Democrats be set up "to find a way to end this miserable war we shouldn't have gotten into in the first place."

Many long-time congressional critics of Vietnam war policy maintained silence--at least temporarily.

But some expressed caution or out and out disapproval. Sen. Jacob Javits, R-N.Y., said he believes the President's action in making his secret proposals public "indicates there is little hope for near-term acceptance."

U.S. Jets Hit N. Viet Radar

SAIGON (AP) — American planes have struck at three more missile-radar sites in North Vietnam for a total of eight in the past three days.

The U.S. Command reported Tuesday one strike Sunday and two Monday in the intensified air war that began in earnest with the mass raids on North Vietnam in December.

U.S. sources said the increasing number of so-called protective reaction strikes is due to North Vietnam concentrating its antiaircraft defenses along the Laotian border.

U.S. planes fly bombing raids against roads coming out of North Vietnam and into the Laotian panhandle, the supply routes feeding the Ho Chi Minh supply trail network into Cambodia and South Vietnam.

When antiaircraft radar locks on a plane in preparation for a missile firing, or when missiles actually are fired, the U.S. planes take what is called protective reaction.

In two of the attacks, Navy A4 Skyhawks fired missiles at radar sites near the Ban Karai Pass, 45 miles north of the demilitarized zone separating North and South Vietnam.

Equipment aboard the Navy jets indicated they were being tracked by enemy radar, the command said.

In the third attack, Air Force F105 fighter-bombers escorting an RF4 reconnaissance plane hit a missile radar site near the North Vietnamese coastal city of Dong Hoi, 45 miles north of the demilitarized zone.

The command said the results of the strikes were not known but no U.S. planes were hit.

The air war far to the south showed no sign of letup. The U.S. Command reported one B52 mission was flown against enemy targets 43 miles southwest of Kontum in the central highlands.

Other sources said four other missions hit enemy base areas west of Kontum in the area where the borders of South Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos meet.

A mission usually consists of up to three of the giant Stratofortresses, each carrying 30 tons of bombs.

Intelligence sources have reported a buildup of four North Vietnamese regiments in the central highlands, and the construction of roads for tanks, which have frequently been sighted there. They predict an enemy offensive in the central highlands may come as soon as the end of January.

Military sources said six Soviet-made T54 tanks had been sighted by South Vietnamese observation planes on the Vietnam side of the border, about seven miles south of the Ben Het border camp.

Ben Het was attacked by tanks in April of 1969, the second and last time that North Vietnamese forces were reported using armor in an attack inside South Vietnam. Ben Het is considered a prime target for any new offensive in the highlands.

The 40-ton T54 is the largest medium tank built in the Soviet Union. It mounts a 100mm gun.

Equal-Employment Compromise Ruled Out By Senate Leaders

WASHINGTON (AP) — Leaders on opposing sides of a seesaw Senate fight over enforcement of equal-employment legislation Tuesday ruled out any compromise.

Earlier Republican Leader Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania told newsmen he hoped a sensible compromise could be reached, saying he understood talks were underway.

He referred specifically to Sens. Peter H. Dominick, R-Colo., and Jacob K. Jacits, R-N.Y., but they both said there would be no compromise.

Dominick is chief sponsor of an amendment to require the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to bring suits in the federal district courts to enforce its findings of job discrimination based on race, religion, sex, or national origin.

The amendment would erase from the bill authority for the EEOC to issue cease-and-desist orders. The commission now is limited to persuasion and conciliation in trying to prevent discrimination.

The Senate rejected Dominick's amendment Monday by a 43-41 vote but later voted to reconsider. A second, decisive vote is set for Wednesday at 10:45 a.m. EST.

Civil-rights and labor leaders are pushing for cease-and-desist powers for the EEOC, while President Nixon and major business organizations have advocated enforcement through the courts.

One change in Dominick's amendment, offered by Sen. J. Glenn Beall, R-Md., with Dominick's concurrence, was adopted by a 73-0 vote. It would provide that any court award in a discrimination case could not exceed two years' back pay.

Another amendment by Javits, adopted over Dominick's objection, would let the EEOC rather than the Justice Department decide whether to appeal a court ruling that went against the commission.

Apollo Delay Likely

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP) — A fuel leak developed Tuesday in the Apollo 16 moonship, and officials say there is a possibility of a second delay in the moon mission now planned for launch April 16.

The spacecraft and its rocket will have to be moved from the launch pad back to the assembly building for repairs, officials said. But no decision on postponement was expected until a day or two after the problem is thoroughly assessed.

Earlier this month the flight was delayed from an original March 17 launch date because of several technical problems.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration reported that the leak developed during a pressure test Tuesday when a Teflon bladder in the moonship's reaction control system apparently was overpressurized by accident, causing it to break.

The reaction control system is a series of small jet engines which the astronauts use to maneuver the command ship in space.

Scheduled to fly the mission are John W. Young, Thomas K. Mattingly II and Charles M. Duke Jr. Young and Duke are slated to become the 9th and 10th Americans to step on the moon, exploring the central highlands near the crater Descartes.

NASA said the 36-story-tall, Saturn 5 spacecraft combination would be rolled the 3.5 miles back to the assembly building, probably on Thursday. The trip, on the back of a large tracked transporter, will take several hours.

This is the first time that an Apollo rocket and spaceship have been ordered off the pad once they were in place. And never had an Apollo launching been delayed by technical problems until the postponement was called earlier this month.

Mother Saves Son From IRA

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — A mother blocked the doorway of her home, fought off a man armed with a submachine gun, and saved her son from death at the hands of an execution squad, police said Tuesday.

In separate incidents three policemen were shot and wounded and a fourth was believed kidnaped in the latest wave of violence blamed on terrorists from the outlawed Irish Republican Army-IRA.

Toxic Cans Lost At Sea

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — The New Hampshire state police said Wednesday E.I. DuPont DeNemours and Co. had issued a warning that 100 drums containing toxic fumes which were lost at sea in December may wash up on shores on northeast coastal states.

Police said the chemical firm cautioned that the drums contained "tocix residues...of motor fuel anti-knock compound" and that they should not be opened or punctured.

Official Praises Child Agencies

BOSTON (AP) — An antipoverty official praised the work of community action agencies in the child development field Tuesday as he participated in the New England Child Development Conference at Suffolk University.

Robert Fulton, New England regional director for the Office of Economic Opportunity, urged child development administrators to use the resources of the 71 agencies serving the region.

Panel to Investigate Judge

BOSTON (AP) — The presiding officers of the House and Senate named a 21-member committee Tuesday to investigage the proceedings leading to the censure of Superior Court Judge Vincent R. Brogna.

Meanwhile, a spokesman for Gov. Francis W. Sargent said the governor would make a statement Tuesday afternoon reacting to Brogna's refusal to resign. Sargent asked for Brogna's resignation Friday, and the judge sent a letter to the governor Monday refusing.

Laird Warns of Red Arms

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird, seeking new airborne command posts, said Tuesday he is concerned about Soviet nuclear arms developments and the dangers of "electromagnetic pulse."

Laird, detailing a request for $254.8 million to "meet defense requirements as a result of the Soviet weapons momentum," told the House Armed Services Committee he is concerned that U.S. missiles might be paralyzed by electromagnetic pulses released by explosions of enemy nuclear warheads.

He sought approval for $113.8 million during the current bookkeeping year to buy four Boeing 747 aircraft for use in an advanced airborne command post program. Two more would be bought in the next fiscal year and another the following year, Laird said.

He asked for $89.4 million for research and development funds to meet what he called "potential near-term Soviet threats posed by their upgraded ICBM force. Cruise missiles, surface-to-air missiles, ballistic missile defense, and antisubmarine warfare systems."

This, he said, would include such projects as the Undersea Long-range Missile System and an electronics version of the F111 aircraft, plus updated ballistic re-entry systems, an ocean surveillance system and Cruise missiles.

U.S. Trade Deficit Worst In 83 Years

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States closed 1971 with its worst trade deficit on record, and its first in 83 years, the Commerce Department said Tuesday in a final report of last year's exports and imports.

The trade deficit swelled to $2.046 billion as exports expanded by only 2 per cent and imports jumped 14 per cent.

It was the first calendar-year trade deficit since 1888, when the red ink was $33 million, the department said.

The department said the deficit in December was $273.7 million, marking the third straight month of unfavorable balances in trade and the eighth month for all of 1971.

The government blamed the worsening picture on dock strikes, the threat of strikes in the steel industry which expanded imports, and an economic slowdown in the major industrialized nations overseas.

A trade deficit results when the value of imports from foreign companies exceeds that of U.S. exports. This adds to the U.S. balance-of-payments problems and puts American businesses into stiffer competition with foreign firms.

Exports in 1971 were valued at $43.555 billion while imports were $45.602 billion.

The 1971 deficit represented a massive turnaround from a year ago, when the nation recorded at $2.7-billion surplus.

The Commerce Department conceded that the 1971 rise in imports was greater than had been expected even if the world economy was out of kilter.

"This suggests that transitory influences-anticipations of import restrictions and exchange rate uncertainties-may have been contributing factors," the department said.

It was in mid-1971 that President Nixon imposed the 10 per cent surcharge and announced the United States would no longer redeem dollars for gold. The surcharge was removed in late December when a new agreement on money- exchange rates was reached.

But the uncertainty during late 1971 may have retarded trade, the department indicated. It also offered another reason: American consumers are expanding their taste for imported goods.

Inmate Wants Male Marriage

SOMERS, Conn. (AP) — An inmate at the state prison in Somers has requested permission to marry or adopt another male, who was paroled from the prison Jan. 5.

Steven Duffen, 26, of Deal, N.J., wrote Corrections Commissioner John R. Manson last fall asking to marry Karlton W. Hudson, 22, of Hamden.

Manson refused to acknowledge Tuesday that such a request had been made, but he said he would consider such a request "a very personal matter," not to be publicly discussed.

Duffen's letter is part of the court record in his legal battle to continue his practice as a jailhouse lawyer. He claims his fellow inmates need his help, since they have little other legal aid.

The court files contained no indication that Manson answered the letter, but Manson said, without confirming that such a letter exists, that his reply would not necessarily be part of a court record.

In the letter on file, Duffen based his request on "the recent marriage of two males in Minnesota.

The Minnesota Supreme Court held last Oct. 15 that two 29-year-old men who had made the request could not be issued a marriage license.

Last August, however, before the Supreme Court decision, the couple took out a marriage license in Mankato, Minn. and they were married Sept. 3 by a minister in Minneapolis.

Mail Fraud Conspiracy Brings 22 Arrests

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — Authorities were rounding up 22 persons in seven states Tuesday after indictments by a federal grand jury in what the government says was a $150 million mail fraud conspiracy.

"This is one of the largest mail fraud conspiracy cases in history and perhaps the largest," said Asst. U.S. Atty. Arthur Tifford of Miami.

Tifford and Asst. U.S. Atty. Richard Kirschner of Los Angeles said losses totaling about $150 million were suffered by hundreds of corporations and individuals. They said the scheme involved payments of advance fees for obtaining permanent loan commitments for business purposes even though no loans were later provided.

In addition to individuals, the Trans-Continental Casualty Insurance Company Ltd., was named a defendant. The government claims TCI is a "shell" company without assets whose address is a post office box in Nassau and whose name is listed on a shingle on a garage attached to a home in Nassau.

Postal Inspector John Davis of the Miami office and John Brady, assistant inspector in charge of the Atlanta regional office, testified before the grand jury last Thursday and Friday, and in a session Monday lasting until 5 p.m.

Tifford and Kirschner quoted the indictment as saying the defendants participated in a scheme under which individuals or companies seeking business loans were assured they could get commitments from TCI upon payment of a premium 4 to 10 "points" of interest to TCI in advance.

The indictment said the scheme had been going on since September 1968. The investigation began after persons all over the country began complaining, Tifford said.

Tifford and Kirschner said advertisements offering permanent and interim loans would be sent through the mails to victims by a broker.

After various meetings with a broker, the government attorneys said, the prospective borrower would be required to deposit "point money" and would receive a worthless loan commitment and a spurious financial statement.

The borrower could theoretically take this loan commitment to a bank or other lending institution and use it to obtain interim financing.

In one case, Tifford said, a building company paid $160,000 for eight "points" as a pre-payment on a $2 million permanent loan commitment.

No permanent loans were actually provided by TCI to any of the victims, according to Tifford.

Eleven of those indicted were residents of Fort Lauderdale, Fla. Authorities said the other defendants were from St. Louis, Mo.; New York; Alabama; Los Angeles; Atlanta, Ga., and Albuquerque, N.M.

Chisolm Formally Declares

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Rep. Shirley Chisholm officially became a Democratic presidential candidate Tuesday, while Sen. Edmund S. Muskie scored a significant gain the same race by winning the endorsement of the governor of Pennsylvania.

Mrs. Chisholm, 47, the first black woman in Congress, formally announced her candidacy in a church in the Bedford-Stuyvesant slum of Brooklyn where she grew up and once taught school.

She said she would enter primaries in Florida and North Carolina and would run delegates in Pennsylvania, Illinois and Massachusetts. She also said she had an eye on the New York primary.

In Harrisburg, Pa., Gov. Milton J. Shapp cast aside his neutrality and declared his backing of Muskie for the Democratic nomination. Pennsylvania will send the third-largest delegation-182-to the national convention.

Shapp's endorsement of the Maine Democrat came on the day Pennsylvania allows candidates to begin circulating petitions for slates of convention delegates. Muskie, Mrs. Chisholm and Sens. Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota and George McGovern of South Dakota were expected to run slates of delegates.

The governor, who supported Eugene McCarthy for president in 1968 after splitting with Humphrey over Johnson administration war policies, said he was backing the Muskie because "he will help us restore our faith in ourselves."

The development was seen as a setback to Humphrey, who reportedly had been hoping for a strong showing in Pennsylvania.

Mrs. Chisholm omitted mention of other Democratic candidates in her formal announcement of candidacy, although she told newsmen afterward she expected her campaign to hurt the chances of New York Mayor John V. Lindsay because "Lindsay will be getting votes from the same area that I am."

She told a standing-room only audience of well-wishers and newsmen in the social hall of the Concord Baptist Church that she was "not the candidate of black America, although I am black and proud. I am not the candidate of the women's movement in this country, although I am a woman and I am equally proud of that."

President Nixon, she said, "has broken his promises to us and therefore lost his claim to our trust and confidence to him. I cannot believe that this administration would have been elected four years ago if we had known then what we know today."

Bail Bond Fire Said To Be Set

BOSTON (AP) — A Boston fireman testified in Superior Court Monday that a fire which damaged financial records in the bail bond offices of brothers I. Charles and Nathan Baker was set.

Lt. Herbert Barley of the fire department told Judge Herbert F. Travers in a hearing that he smelled gasoline when he entered the partially burned basement where the Bakers' financial records were kept.

"An accelerant, in all probability gasoline, was used," he said. "The file cabinets were set, and the resulting fire caused an electrical fire."

Charles Baker is petitioning to regain custody of his records and to be purged of a contempt citation for refusing to turn the documents over to the court. He has not been sentenced on the citation.

However, he is serving a separate 29-month contempt of court sentence for refusing to answer questions in the state Supreme Court inquiry into misconduct charges against two Superior Court judges.

Two insurance companies are suing the brothers charging they failed to turn over hundreds of thousands of dollars in bail premiums they collected in the companies' names.

Charles Baker's attorneys argued Monday that the contempt citation connected with the records should be vacated because he no longer has custody of them.

Two fires were reported in the building where the files were kept-owned by Nathan Baker-after the insurance firms asked to copy and inspect them. Following the fire, the court agreed to have the records removed and placed in a bank.

In connection with his current contempt of court sentence, Charles Baker was named as the middleman in an alleged bribery incident which led to the investigation and subsequent resignation of Judge Edward J. DeSaulnier Jr. DeSaulnier was disbarred by the high court and declared unfit to serve as a judge.

Judge Vincent R. Brogna, also implicated in the investigation, was censured by the court, but has refused to resign.

Convicted stock swindler Michael J. Raymond testified before the state Supreme Court that he paid the money to a Boston bail bondsman to arrange for a suspended sentence in a 1962 stock fraud case. He said the bondsman told him the suspended sentence was to come through an arrangement involving Judge DeSaulnier.

Navy Commander Charges "Hardship Case" Fraud

MIAMI (AP) — Cmdr. Lawrence Weber testified in U.S. District Court that political pressure was applied in 1969 to obtain a "hardship discharge" from the Navy for the son of industrialist Henry A. Keller.

Weber took the stand Monday on the opening day of the trial of Martin Sweigh, former aid to retired House Speaker John McCormick. Sweig is charged with peddling McCormick's influence to Keller for $5,000.

Weber testified that he was the administrative officer at the Jacksonville Naval Air Station when Keller's son, Henry Jr., applied for discharge as a hardship case in February 1969.

"He said his wife had a psychological problem, was seeing an analyst twice a week at Miami, was pregnant, and that he couldn't afford to continue her treatments, so he wanted out," Weber said.

Weber said he advised Keller that the Navy would supply a psychiatrist and that if he wanted a discharge he would have to make a formal application.

"Four or six weeks later," Weber related, "I got a telephone call from Lt. Cmdr. Jones of the Navy's Bureau of Personnel saying the speaker's McCormick's office was asking why there was a delay in processing Keller's discharge."

Keller had not yet formally filed for the discharge, Weber said, and "I called him in and told him I didn't appreciate his using political pressure, but his papers would be processed as soon as he filed them."

After the conversation, Weber said he received a second call from Jones asking why he had told Keller, "I don't give a damn what the speaker of the House has to say."

Weber said he told Jones he had referred only to "political pressure," and "after we saw there was political pressure, we got others to help him prepare the papers." He added that he then recommended that no discharge be granted.

"My investigation showed Keller was being subsidized by at least $400 a month from outside sources and that he was living above his means as a yeoman in the Navy," Weber said.

His recommendation was countermanded, he testified, and the papers went to Washington approving the discharge.

The 48-year-old Sweigh now is serving a 30-month prison term on a perjury conviction.

The government claims that Michael A. Silbert, a Keller Industries labor relations expert, contacted Sweig, who then telephoned Navy brass to push the discharge in exchange for a payoff.

Boltwood Volunteers Bring Belchertown Residents Joy

A game to play, a jukebox to dance to Saturday nights, or just a hand to hold–350 college students have been bringing these and other gifts of attention to the 1100 residents of Belchertown State School all semester.

The students, from UMass, Smith, Mount Holyoke and Amherst Colleges, work with the retarded two hours a week through the Boltwood Project which is funded by student governments at the four schools.

For the two hours, most of the volunteers work in a one-to-one relationship with the residents, playing games, working on crafts and skills, and teaching self-care. Boltwood has provided them with about $200 worth of toys and materials to use with the residents.

The volunteers are supervised by 10 of their fellow students, trained over the summer under the auspices of a federal Health, Education, and Welfare grant. During their training, the student supervisors assessed the residents' needs and set up the 14 programs in which the volunteers work--programs ranging from teaching handicrafts and sex education to interning as recreation leaders.

The Belchertwon co-ordinator with the student project says he is pleased with the volunteers' work. Lee Douchkoff, junior mental health co-ordinator at Belchertown, says "The human contact just the stimulation that the volunteers can offer the residents–is much needed and appreciated."

Douchkoff sees the students' involvement as helpful, not only to the school's current residents, but also to the prospects of improving the treatment of the mentally retarded in the future. He says that as students get involved, they see the "community's responsibility" for caring for the mentally retarded. He hopes this will lead them to support attempts to improve the treatment.

Douchkoff and his assistant, Christine Shane, say they would like to see the project expand into more areas of work at Belchertown. Ms. Shane says, "The size of the student response is fantastic and the commitment level is high. Three years ago when Boltwood started we had trouble getting 20 students out here." There are now 350 volunteers.

Douchkoff credits this year's "overwhelming" student response to the Belchertown administration's willingness to let the students supervise themselves.

One of the features of the Boltwood Project is a Saturday night coffee house the volunteers set up at the school, where they painted, furnished and decorated a large room and installed a jukebox. Saturday nights about 10 Boltwood volunteers join 40 to 50 residents there for refreshments and dancing to the rock tunes on the jukebox.

The Boltwood volunteers have also given the school more than $2700 in the past six months for use in its speech and hearing clinic. The funds are being used for ceiling tiles, carpeting, and furnishings for "sound treatment" of two auditory training rooms; for equipment for an "audiometric" testing room; and also for an intercom for the building.

The coffee house, the equipment, and the volunteers' regular visits are all part of what one of the student supervisors, Richard Hamilton, a UMass senior from Braintree, calls the project's goal of "bringing a little happiness in."

New Methods Needed For Education

By GILBERT J. SALK

Well, brothers and sisters, it's the start of a new semester. Last semester, I started out with a column on Attica, a problem which still exists, even though it's no longer front-page news. Now, the problems, if we are to believe the media, are less spectacular. The war is winding down (we are told) but the bombing rate is horrendously high. If we ignore the unemployed, the hungry, the dependency on a hugh defense budget, we can believe that the economy is healthy--maybe. Soon we will get to choose a new (?) president--Edmund Muskie or Richard Nixon, in all probability.

In the meantime, all we have to do is stand in line to register, to change courses, to pay bills, to eat meals, to buy books, to go to the john. If we're lucky, we might find one meaningful course, but we already know that the most relevant educational experience we'll have this semester is line-standing, for it prepares us for the "real" world outside. I wonder what other possibilities might exist...

Imagine, for example, a really free educational experience. Let's say we live in the state of Utopia, where the legislature believes that education is supposed to produce thinkers, and they have training schools for those who want degrees so they can get jobs. Suppose the legislature provides funds for buildings, and, on an experimental basis, hires 300 young people to learn the socially valued skill of thinking.

That's it. That's all the imposed rules. The 300 have to learn, probably first from each other, how to make decisions which will be followed by the whole group, how to regulate the use of space, what to learn and how to learn it, how to get assistance from outside experts, and how to evaluate the usefulness of the experts' information, and how to simply survive without parents, residence heads, administrators, and pre-built requirements, registration procedures, housing plans, course offerings, and the rest of the trappings of our university's force-feeing system.

It seems to me that the first thing I'd learn is how little I really know. Most of the formal education we've all received has little to do with teaching us to be resourceful, innovative, sure of our own abilities. So I'd have to unlearn most of the stuff keeping me from functioning as a truly interacting human being.

What this rap is all about is the fact that today's education really has little to do with teaching us to think and to create. It is, instead, isolating, confining, regimentating. We seriously need to experiment with new approaches to educating, and to carefully scrutinizing the old approaches. The foregoing is one possible new approach–let your mind float on some of the implications of the model-but there are many others.

If the idea intrigues you, you might want to explore some other avenues.

Worlds in the Making: Probes for Students of the Future, by Maryjane Dunstan and Patricia Garlan (Prentice-Hall, Englewood Cliffs, N.J.) is one of the most revolutionary books I've seen, if it is used as a text for high school or junior high school, because it provides entire new reality bases from which to start viewing the surrounding world. The readings are taken from a broad range of sources, and provide a dizzying kaleidoscope of perspectives. It doesn't answer questions; instead, it poses approaches to finding answers by showing the visions of other thinkers ranging from Bucky Fuller to Eldridge Cleaver, from Carl Rogers to Robert Heinlein, from Ken Kesey to Alan Watts. The educational approach of the book will make most other approaches to creating creative thinkers pale in comparison. (p.s. I liked it.)

The Rasberry Exercises: How to Start Your Own School (and Make a Book) by Salli Rasberry and Bob Greenway (Bookworks, Berkeley, Cal.) is a fine ideabook for start in a street school or other type of education endeavor. It's ideas, experience, feelings and failings, trips, sources, pictures, charts, and more. If you want to do a school trip outside of the monstrosity the state has created for you and your children, Rasberry can help find the way. Excerpts of it, by the way, appear in the last couple of issues of Mother Earth News, available from the Draft Counseling office in 923, CC.

For a completely different trip, check out The Teachings of Don Juan: A Yaqui Way of Knowledge, by Carlos Castaneda, (Ballantine Books, NYC). Castaneda spent five years learning from Don Juan, a Yaqui Inidan, after finding him while researching a paper on peyote. Don Juan opened up new perceptual doors with peyote and other hallucinogens, while at the same time sharing his own insights into the world of the Yaqui. The book pulls us into that world, and forces us to share in the Yaqui experience.

Happy reading, friends.

PEACE.

Aqua-Polymer Study To Begin

UMass and a leading plastics manufacturer have announced a research project to develop the use of polymer plastics in marine aquaculture and coastal fisheries.

The one-year project will be directed by the UMass Aquacultural Engineering Laboratory at Wareham and aided by an $11,250 grant in funds and materials from the Plastics Division of the Conwed Corp. of Minneapolis.

"We will study and conduct pilot demonstrations with Conwed developed plastics in a wide variety of operations, ranging from the harvest of oyster larvae to production of cape scallops, clams and quahogs in continuous submerged plastic nets," according to Dr. John W. Zahradnik, project director. He is principal scientist for the Aquacultural Engineering Laboratory and UMass ocean engineering program coordinator.

The plastics research will go on in connection with aquacultural engineering work now being done by UMass in the towns of Wareham, Marion, Mattapoisett, Westport and Harwich. The overall aim of the work has been to increase the shellfish population and improve the aquatic environment.

Laird Expresses Concern Over Soviet Weapons

WASHINGTON (AP)-Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird said today Soviet weapons developments have caused "considerable concern" that U.S. missiles might be paralyzed by electromagnetic pulses released by big enemy nuclear warhead explosions.

Laird told the House Armed Services Committee that "the upgrading of the Soviet strategic forces and the consequent re-evaluation of the possible vulnerabilities of our own forces" has led to this concern.

He urged, in a $254-million supplemental money request for this year, that Congress authorize a number of measures designed to deal with this problem.

Concern about what is called "electromagnetic pulse" EMP first arose about 10 years ago when missile and electronics experts became aware that such effects could black out radar, communications and other electronics in a major Soviet nuclear attack.

What might happen, experts have explained, is that electromagnetic surges released by big nuclear explosions could travel through the atmosphere and fuse electronic components and circuits, in effect paralyzing missiles and antimissile weapons which these electronic devices control.

The first measures taken at the time involved sheathing missile control buildings and operation centers with steel plate so the pulses could be absorbed before they got to the vulnerable wires and circuits.

Although Laird did not say so specifically it appeared that U.S. studies of giant Soviet warheads developed and tested in recent years showed that the danger was greater.

Magazine Accepting Stories

The National Collegiate Literary Review, a new national magazine designed to give national exposure to outstanding collegiate writing, is scheduled for publication in the spring of 1972.

"This magazine is designed to be highly provocative, indicating what students think and believe today. Importantly, it will give a national format to student thought and opinion" according to Michael S. Standish, a spokesman for The National Collegiate Literary Review.

Standish stated further that "This magazine is unique since never before has such an opportunity existed for a student to gain broad exposure of his creative writings. They are no longer campus bound in the expression of their ideas. For the first time the thinking of American's youth will have national exposure."

The magazine will available to all students and distributed to major college and public libraries. In addition, copies will be forwarded to new papers and magazines for review.

The National Collegiate Literary Review is now accepting applications for the spring, 1972 issue. The entries are in four categories; poems, short essays, political and social commentaries, and pen and ink drawings. Poems and essays may be no longer than three hundred words. Original pen and ink drawings may be no longer than five by eight inches. All works must be original but may have been published previously.

An application must be accompanied by a registration fee of $6.00. If the submission is accepted for publication by the editorial board the author will receive membership in the Society of Collegiate Writers and a complementary copy of the 1972 National Collegiate Literary Review. Membership is limited exclusively to student authors whose works are published.

If the submission is found unacceptable by the board, the full application fee will be refunded. Entries and application fee should be forwarded to The National Collegiate Literary Review, 746 Hinman Avenue, Evanston, Illinois 60202.

American lives were lost and countless numbers of Vietnamese, North and South, were killed) and feel relieved that there is some explanation for Henry Kissinger being in Paris so often.

But, it is apparent to us that the President has never thought much about the idea that the U.S. shouldn't be in Vietnam militarily at all. Once again the basic philosophical argument for going through all the rigamarole of an eight point peace program is to maintain this nation's "honor". We are still seeking that "honorable" settlement.

Senator Edmund Muskie said well what the President is unwilling to act upon: that the U.S. made a "mistake" getting involved in Vietnam and that the only way to end the war would be to admit error and leave.

The only possible reason, that we can see for the President continuing along the path that he is taking is to mollify the element in American society that some fear would be disheartened to the point of violence over an American defeat in Vietnam. Possibly, there does exist in this nation a strong desire to feel "right" about the Vietnam war, that some Americans actually do feel that we would be "running out on the Vietnamese people" by just leaving with our weapons and troops that have caused over a million deaths and ravaged their land.

We don't think that way and would support fully an announcement that American troops were all going to leave Vietnam as fast as possible and a massive infusion into Vietnam and Southeast Asia of non-political American money to re-construct the land that we still are destroying. We even would have supported President Nixon three and a half years ago in such a policy.

The speech was timed to fit into a "gameplan" that will, some think, get Richard Nixon re-elected. The merits of the proposals made last night can only be judged by how President Nixon's "enemy" reacts, as such, whether successful in ending the fighting or not, the President has a comfortable "it was their fault" to answer his critics with.

And the horror of our national and international politics goes marching on.

The State Of Humor

WASHINGTON–My Fellow Americans,

I am happy to report to you today on the State of Humor in the United States: 1971 was a watershed year for humor in this country.

The GNL (Gross National Laughter) in America rose by 3.2%. Most of this could be attributed to the Good News-Bad News jokes which picked up in the last quarter of the year.

There was a marked drop-off in Polish and Italian jokes, and they will probably be recycled and aimed at another ethnic group.

Politically, 1971 was not a great year for humor, but you could call it a good year. Spiro Agnew, Martha Mitchell and Henry Kissinger provided 74.3% of the political humor, with President Nixon accounting for only 10%.

Former President Johnson, former Vice President Hubert Humphrey and Sen. Edward Kennedy were responsible for less than 5% of the political laughs.

I am sorry to report there was not one joke made at the expense of Sens. Muskie, McGovern and Jackson during the entire year, though heaven knows their staffs tried.

New York was still the biggest joke as far as a city went, and most of the credit for this can go solely to the efforts made by Mayor John Lindsay.

Los Angeles came in second, but no one has laughed at Chicago since the Democratic National Convention.

TV football was one of the main sources of family humor, though very few women laughed about it. Howard Cosell became the Comedian of the Year, accounting for an amazing 66.5% of the laughs on television, thanks to his two straight men, Don Meredith and Frank Gifford.

College students were laughing more in 1971 than in 1970, but youth on the whole contributed very little to the Gross National Laughter factor in the country.

Youth was also responsible for cutting down laughter among adults, mainly because it was impossible for grownups to laugh when their children were in the same room.

What do I predict for 1972? Since it is a presidential election year we can expect an escalation in political humor. Every candidate will be obligated to warm up his audience with good, homey, self-deprecating jokes which will show what a good guy he is.

This humor, which comes painfully to every one of the presidential candidates in both parties, could put the country into a humor recession which they may not get out of until 1976.

We can expect a tremendous number of Chinese jokes just before and just after President Nixon's visit to Peking, most of them having to do with the President's laundry.

We can look forward to the same amount of production of Jackie Onassis jokes, wage-price freeze jokes, American dollar jokes and married priest jokes that we had in 1971.

As for new jokes, we have to wait for President Nixon's State of the Union Message later this month.

But I am very bullish about humor for 1972, mainly because I feel that if Americans could laugh after what they have been through during the past 12 months they can laugh at anything, any time.

Pennies From Heaven

Four of the men we admire most were testifying almost unseen in a hearing room in the Senate Office Building last week before indefatigable Sen. Proxmire, two representatives, an audience of maybe 30 lost in the spectator's chairs and one tired motion picture camera (CBS News) intermittently taking pictures. Since it was about taxes and Mr. Nixon's whopping deficit the talk inevitably turned to Jean Paul Getty.

Getty is the expatriate American who is possibly the richest man in the world worth a billion or a billion and a half dollars. He receives a cozy daily income of around $300,000. The men who were testifying were probably the top tax experts in America, Joe Pechman and Ben Okner of Brookings, Stanley Surrey of Harvard, plus Phil Stern, author of "The Great Treasury Raid" and sponsor of the fund for investigative journalism that financed the My Lai massacre revelations.

All the group wanted to do was to show how the Treasury could save $60-$70 billion in leaked taxes.

The Federal graduated income tax goes up to a theorectical rate of 70 percent and under it Getty would presumably write a check every April 15 for the Internal Revenue Service of around $70 million. But Getty is an oil man with all sorts of escape hatches, and President Kennedy told a couple of senators back in the early 60s that Getty's tax, at least at that time, was no more than a few thousand dollars.

The tax witnesses took it up from there. After all, what is more fun than watching the rich get richer? Surrey came up with this cheerful example. Congress wants to stimulate community development and home ownership, so it gives a tax deduction on mortgage interest payments estimated to have cost (in lost taxes) $5.7 billion in fiscal 1971. Because the Federal income tax is graduated, the rebate is worth $70 per $100 for a taxpayer in the top (70 percent) bracket. It is worth nothing at all to the poor man who isn't in the income tax scheme.

As a consequence of using a tax instrument to provide assistance, about 70 per cent of the total goes to individuals with incomes over $10,000. The law puts no limit on the value or number of residences for which a taxpayer may receive aid. Billionaire Getty may have a dozen residences, a modest chateau here, a little castle there, who knows? — all with satisfactory tax deductible loans. It is an example of the jolly brutality of our present tax system.

Congress has been boring loopholes into the tax laws for years; it is doubtful if it has known what it was dling; many of the escape holes were set up for desirable purposes but, in the aggregate, turning the Federal income tax into what Rep. Henry Reuss called a swiss cheese. All told Proxmire has identified at least $60-$70 billion in subsidies. And there's not a loophole that can't be gouged wider by a good tax lawyer.

In most cases it would be vastly cheaper to give simple, direct Federal grants. Take tax-exempt bonds, for example. Cities and states finance themselves by selling bonds to the rich that are like church indulgences, sold in the Middle Ages, to keep a loved one out of Purgatory. Only these are tax indulgences. The poor today can't afford to buy them-it takes money to escape taxes. As Surrey figures it, the Treasury pays $1 in tax benefits to a top-bracket taxpayer so that he will pass along 75 cents in interest rate benefits to the state or city issuing the bond-a 133 percent commission.

Three thousand families in America have an annual income of $1 million or more. The experts explained the lovely bargain-counter subsidies, tax shelters and rebates open to the top 3000-American's fiscal elite. They are in fields like oil drilling, stock farming, equipment-leasing and the like. Poor people can't shop here; few of the 12 million shabby families with incomes under $5,000 go into these Tiffany shops.

Tax incentive rebates are only one form of subsidy but it is amusing to consider them in this light. It turns a lot of things upside down. For example, the 1971 act gives a tax credit for political gifts, a worthy objective it seems, amounting to a credit of one-half of the contribution, up to $25 on a joint return. Thus if a taxpayer sends $25 to a candidate, the government in effect will also send $25-the result of allowing half the amount off in taxes for a $50 contribution.

But if poor people contribute money the government refuses to match funds. Poor people don't pay income taxes; they are below the taxable level for participating.

J.O.E. Gets Voiced

(Ed. Note-Larry Dye is the UMass consultant for Youth Services and the JOE Program)

Dear Mr. Dye:

We, members of Project Voice, who spoke to the kids and advocates at UMass last Friday, would like to thank you for inviting us down there and affording us the opportunity to be involved in a meaningful way with the Youth Services Dept. in helping to create a truly effective method of dealing with the juvenile offender.

As you probably are aware, Friday was the first time we, or any inmate from the Mass. penal system, has ever been allowed to participate responsibly in a program off the institutional property where we are confined. For us, being there at UMass. and contributing our experiences and knowledge towards opening lines of communication; giving an understanding to mutual problems that the kids are experiencing and attempting to cope with; playing a responsible role for the benefit of society, the kids and ourselves, was something that myself and the other men on the panel have busted our butts for during the last 10 months.

Being an ex-con yourself, you must know the myiad of frustrations and problems that we have had to cope with ourselfs, not only from the reluctant "old guard" forces within the administration of the Correction Dept. but from the other cons themselves who cling to the traditional hard-rock attitude of, "never do anything for anybody else and especially the square society that forever condemns men like us." Fortunately for our program, people like yourself, Dr. Miller, Mr. Keizer, Mr. Mahoney and others are pushing for constructive progressive changes and are making a good fight of it. You, as an ex-con, having pulled yourself up out of the negative thinking atmosphere of prison and into the successful position in society that you possess now, know how important it is to guys like us to keep a positive attitude and the value there is in realizing a goal in which we have put every resource and effort at our command. THANKS!

But, (yeah-there is more, and you know it)! Reaching the goal of our project getting off the penal institutional grounds and into the community initially was just one of the first steps for us. We want to be as effective as we possibly can. To do this we fell that our services should (and can be, now) utilized on a regular basis. We would appreciate the opportunity to talk to every juvenile being handled by the Youth Service Dept. and also the administrative and custodial personnel. We sincerely feel that the intangible values within our program (experiences, knowledge and communication level) can be realized to the utmost only if we make every attempt to reach as many (every) kid, offender or not, to add to their awareness of the realities and complexities of life within our social environment today and especially the attitudes and actions that lead to crime and prison.

To do this we need your active support. By active, I mean speaking on our behalf to the powers-that-be and influencial people who can make the decisions necessary to let us continue and expand our program with the Youth Service Dept.:-the Dept. of Education, (we have numerous requests to go into the high schools and speak to the student body);-with the Legislature, who will be acting in the near future on a legislative bill allowing us to go out into the communities for school and civic organization appearances etc. I know, it sounds like we are asking a lot of you, but sometimes a few words of support at the right time and place can be the difference between success and failure for a project like ours and we are attempting to touch all the bases. Any support you can give us would be deeply appreciated.

In any case, we think what you and your associates are attempting to do with J.O.E. is great. You people will have your hands full creating the kind of a system you have in mind but it is a better method. Hang in there and give 'em hell. Don't let the problems and complexities wear you down, and especially watch out for the sucker-punches from the opposition in the clinches. Those punishment for punishments sake people are a sneaky lot who will use every trick in the book to hang on to their secure little positions of authority. Then again, use caution-change just for the sake of changing can be a bad hang-up too.

Once again,-THANKS! Hope to hear from you. Lots of Luck!

Sincerely,
Roy J. Martin
Chairman, Project Voice

What Next J.O.E.?

By TOM DERDERIAN

Most of us think that the JOE program for the Juvenile Delinquents was a good idea. Maybe it was. Kids who got into trouble don't need to be locked up. You lock 'em up and they get pissed off so when they get out they have a good rational for bustin' things...they're pissed off. So far it's a good idea to end schools like the Lyman School and the Lancaster Training School because they don't work. They don't train kids.

This move is a good step toward prison reform to prevent such uprisings as Attica. Very good and the liberals are happy. The Lyman School is closed up, dust is settling and stillness reigns; an era has ended. The era of Oliver Twist, cruel, unusual punishments and child labor is ended, but before the dust settles what is going to happen to the old Lyman School located on prime Boston land?

Politics is not the only overtone tinting JOE. Joe was a bit tainted to begin with. They are going to change the Lyman School into a college. The middle class liberals will be even happier. Their consciences will be clear and they will have themselves another college. And we all know how much we need another college. Another play place for the rich kids and JOE will be homeless.

These kids who got into trouble used to have a place. The use of the place was against their needs, unfortunately. They didn't need to be imprisoned. Now they have no place but four weeks 'programs', and are dependent on politicians' needs for programs that have happy overtones that they can get involved with. Governor Sargent immediately leaped to Amherst to get his picture in the paper (and we put it on the front page of the semester's first MDC) and Sargent's detractors attracted him through the incidents with the JOE kids on campus, (reported in the Springfield Union and other papers).

The kids are now at the mercy of political expediency. In short they lost. They have no place and so can be phased out or forgotten easier than the ever present old brick buildings of the Lyman School can be forgotten by a guilty commuter.

But, we can do something with these old brick buildings. We can give up another college and turn the buildings and land over to the same kids who just got kicked out of them. Change the Lyman School and the Lancaster Training School and other institutions into tuition free, residential, vocational and technical training schools reserved for youths of high school age who might otherwise have wasted away in regular public schools. What is needed is a 'Hampshire College' concept on the vocational, technical level for poor kids, ages 15-16, whose parents can't handle them. This is a sound and functional idea to replace the old era reform schools.

Editorial Points

The dining commons meals seem to be a little better than usual lately. Perhaps it is an attempt on the part of the University to convince those people eating there free till Thursday that they really ought to have meal tickets.

Didn't Nixon miss the point last night? Or was it just that we heard it wrong-remember the old story 'Everybody's out of step except Johnnie?'

You should think that after the trials of Course Change Day we'd deserve another intersession.

Wouldn't it be nice to be a registration official? Perhaps they get first crack at all the interesting courses. But then again, maybe they have to do their business after everyone else leaves. Ha Ha Herman.

They've changed the add-drop-switch-section hogpog this year. Now even the registration officials don't know what's going on.

Also adding to the general aura of confusion is the new marking system. It seems to us to be a double-edged sword. Those AB's might be nice when you thought you were getting a B, but the CD's are pretty hard to rationalize when you were expecting a C.

Zero-Base Security

By TOM WICKER

"Strong military defenses are not the enemy of peace, they are the guardians of peace," said President Nixon in his State of the Union Message, as preface to his announcement that he would ask for an increase in the defense budget. Undoubtedly, the Russians see it the same way, at least as regards their defenses, but the real question is not strength, but how much strength?

It could be forcefully asserted that, in the United States as anywhere else, "military defenses" could be built to the point of impoverishing society otherwise; and if that were the case, those who commanded such a force would almost surely be powerful enough and of such a mind to make it the enemy rather than the guardian of peace.

It could also be argued that more and more men, more and more weapons, more and more money, do not necessarily result in more and more strength. Putting two divisions or two aircraft carriers where one is scarcely needed is a build-up of fat rather than muscle.

Both arguments are often made against the American military establishment into which Mr. Nixon now wants to pour more money for more weapons. That makes all the more interesting an "alternative national defense posture" proposed by Senator George McGovern, who hopes to succeed Mr. Nixon and put his "alternative" into effect in fiscal 1975.

In estimated 1975 dollars, the McGovern military budget would be $54.8 billion dollars, against the $75.5-billion that the fiscal year 1972 military budget would cost in 1975 dollars. But the most interesting thing about the "alternative" is the so-called "zero base" from which it was compiled.

Most budgeting derives from the previous year's totals; that is, if the military establishment spends x-billion dollars in a given year, when it starts to work on the following year's budget it adds or subtracts from x-billion whatever the new year's conditions seem to warrant. This means that many of the same underlying assumptions carry over from year to year, some long after they have any real meaning.

Mr. McGovern and the military specialists who helped him did not follow this practice. Instead, they made their own assumptions about the dangers and problems the military forces will confront in 1975, and drew their own conclusions from those assumptions. Instead of moving up and down from x-billions of dollars, they wee able to start from a base of zero and budget only what to them seemed necessary.

Thus, for instance, current military forces include one land division and one carrier task force allocated to a possible Latin-American contingency. Mr. McGovern's "alternative" would assign only a land division, "in light of the special relationship dictated by the proximity of the region to the United States." The Senator saw no reason for a carrier task force "because of the virtual assurance that land bases will be available, at much lower cost, in the event that air forces are required."

This process of starting from scratch does not seem-at least to a non-expert-to have resulted in mere foolhardy budget-cutting. On the question of American troops in Europe, for instance, Mr. McGovern concluded that in the absence of mutual troop reductions negotiated with Warsaw Pact countries, eight American divisions should remain "available for service" with NATO, as at present. But he also concluded that, given rapid redeployment capabilities and the numerical superiority NATO would have in the initial stages of a conflict, two and a third American divisions could be pulled back to this continent.

That would leave two American divisions in Europe, enough to commit the United States to its defense; and it would require six divisions to be kept available in this country for redeployment to Europe. One of these would be a Marine division, but Mr. McGovern pointed out that since an amphibious landing in Europe "must be seen as extremely remote," that particular Marine division would have no need of a traditional World War II-style amphibious capacity.

Again, while Mr. McGovern could find no practical necessity for "nuclear superiority" and would concentrate on nuclear deterrence rather than on preparations for a possible failure of deterrence, his alternative could hardly be said to have dangerously downgraded American strategic forces. He would retain the present Minuteman missiles and manned bombers, but scratch multiple warheads for the former and a new version of the latter. This would place primary reliance on an improved Polaris/Poseidon submarine fleet, and Mr. McGovern would concentrate research and development on protecting that fleet against any threat that might develop (although he says none is visible now).

So the McGovern "alternative", however arguable, is something more than a campaign ploy; it suggests that the Pentagon itself might do well to go back to a zero base, not just with lip service but with an eye to real strength in real "military defenses."

Africans Battle Recognition Of Rhodesia

(Editor's note: The last few weeks have seen massive outbursts of black resistance in the strongholds of white supremacy, South Africa and Rhodesia–the correct name is Zimbabwe. A general strike by black contract laborers has crippled South African-ruled Namibia; and violent protests in Zimbabwe have jeopardized finalization of an agreement to recognize domination by its 240,000 whites over its 5 million blacks.

Both developments mark an acceleration of actity toward what many people expect to be a final showdown for white domination in southern Africa. Already guerrilla wars are being fought in Angola and Mozambique–the two Portuguese colonies which border on Zimbabwe and Namibia. Zimbabwe and Namibia themselves have seen guerrilla activity for several years.)

SALISBURY, Zimbabwe (LNS)–"NO, No, No!" they chanted, surging through the streets of Gwelo, of Salisbury, of Fort Victoria, of Umtali. In the largest demonstrations against white minority rule in over 10 years, thousands of blacks stoned cars, burned and looted buildings. For a time, the government tried to make a show of restraint, but before it was over at least 8 blacks had been shot and killed by white police. But the demonstrations didn't stop. And all the time they chanted nationalist slogans, most often the simplest one of all–"No, No, No!"

The angry demonstrations, the resounding chants of No, were directed against an agreement reached last November by Britain and the white minority which now rules Zimbabwe (and calls it Rhodesia.) The settlement would grant official recognition to the white minority regime while delaying the possibility of rule for the black majority into the indefinite future.

Leaders of the Rhodesian government had confidently included a clause in the agreement allowing a British commission to sound out all segments of the population for their opinion of it. But a day before two members of the commission were to arrive in Gwelo, some 8,000 blacks took to the streets to register an early vote of disapproval. When the crowd tried to march from the separate black townships outside the city towards its predominantly white center they were turned back by repeated teargas attacks and a wall of police and heavily armed troops.

The next day the British commission announced that they would postpone their visit to Gwelo but the angry protests continued. A movie theater and a welfare center were burned, 34 people were arrested and one killed. (Police claimed he died of chest injuries suffered in a fall while fleeing.)

On January 20, Gwelo was quiet but large crowds had looted shops and stoned cars within a mile of the center of the capital city, Salisbury. Rioting was also reported in Umtali to the east and Fort Victoria 200 miles to the south. At Ft. Victoria two members of the British commission were completely drowned out by chants of "No, No, No!"

The outburst of popular resistance to the agreement clearly took the white minority leaders by surprise. Because of the sensitive negotiations, they hesitated to take harsh repressive measures during the first days of the uprisings. One clause of the agreement had pledged that "normal political activity" would be allowed to continue while the commission was conducting its investigations. But by the fifth day the government's show of restraint gave way to a more "normal" response to political activity–at least eight blacks were shot down and killed, scores of others wounded and arrested. But still the uprisings spread.

And the street battles were by no means all they had to worry about. Tribal chiefs, who have generally been seen as totally dependent on the government for their authority and therefore acquiescent to government policy, also spoke out against the proposed agreement in meetings with the British commission.

The agreement seemed in real jeopardy of falling through. International pressure against it was building rapidly. The British government hastily dispatched a special representative to Salisbury to try and patch things together again.

If the agreement is created, it will be a severe blow to both the white minority regime of Ian Smith and to the British. Both sides had risked international protest for the sake of their long-term economic and political interests. The Smith regime had only recently begun to feel the impact of U.N. sanctions against trade with the white minority regime. An acute shortage of foreign currency which they needed to expand the economy and the inability to attract significant foreign investment had begun to take a toll. Indications from Salisbury were that some firms would only be able to last a few months longer.

For the British also, there were substantial economic incentives to reach a settlement.

British investors had watched a once prime market being invaded by competitors who have ignored the U.N. sanctions (particularly the South Africans and the Japanese). And Britain was losing as much as $9.6 million a year in foreign currency because they could not collect on investments in mines in Zimbabwe.

Economic pressures for rapprochement with the white minority regime mashed with what seems to be a general shift in strategy, in the U.S. as well, toward more open support for white comination of southern Africa. The U.S. recently resumed the purchase of chrome from Rhodesia in violation of U.N. sanctions and signed a massive new aid agreement with Portugal.

All these developments had seemed to indicate a consolidation of power in the hands of the white oligarchy. Their role as a bastion of the western world seemed more secure than ever. But now all that has changed and the future seems far from clear. For the black people of southern Africa, the stakes are very high.

As imprisoned African leader Joshua Nkomo told an interviewer who saw him after the terms of the agreement had been announced, "Tell my people. Tell them that the time for majority rule in our country is now. Tell them that we stick by 'no independence before majority rule.' That is my message for them." His people have now taken his message to the streets

Harrisburg 8 Trial Begins

HARRISBURG, PA. (LNS)–The residents of this conservative city stop and stare when Tony Scoblick drives by in his 1964 Navy surplus Dodge truck, which a cartoonist has brightly illustrated with biblical scenes of animals at rest in a garden.

They would stare harder if they knew Scoblick has been charged by the U.S. government with using that truck in a plot to kidnap Henry Kissinger, President Nixon's foreign policy adviser. The trial is now tentatively set for Jan. 24.

"The reason it was a Navy truck is because Kissinger was a former Navy man", Scoblick and the seven others who comprise the "Harrisburg Eight" find the charges against them no laughing matter.

The existence of an anti-war kidnapping plot was first revealed to a startled Senate appropriations committee in November 1970.

FBI director J. Edgar Hoover, who charged the alleged plot was led by Philip Berrigan and his brother Daniel.

Hoover's testimony was delivered at a closed committee hearing, but he made sure it received wide dissemination by dropping 75 mimeographed copies of it on a press table before he entered the closed committee room.

Critics of Hoover immediately accused him of trying the case in the newspapers instead of the courts. It was suggested he may have been motivated by the fact that Daniel Berrigan, recently a fugitive, had successfully eluded the FBI for four months while giving numerous underground interviews, making two public appearances and at one point, being trailed by a television camera crew.

"He made the FBI look like fools," fellow-defendant Ted Glick noted.

Hoover's charges were followed last January by the indictment of six of the defendants for conspiracy to kidnap Kissinger and bomb government heating tunnels.

Daniel Berrigan was named as a co-conspirator but was not charged. Last April he was dropped from the case entirely in a new indictment which added two additional defendants.

In the words of one of them, Rev. Philip Berrigan, their indictment is "a piece of legal pathology supporting our military pathology in Southeast Asia."

Kleindeinst Gets Award

WASHINGTON (LNS)-For a man who holds a reputation as a law and order strong man, it was all slightly embarrassing. Richard Kleindeinst, scheduled to replace John Mitchell as Nixon's Attorney General, found out that the Department of Justice had distributed hundreds of news releases reporting that Hall of Heroes Publications had presented him with its first "Outstanding American" award–without bothering to find out that Hall of Heroes is a one-man comic book company.

Kleindeinst did accept the award, which cited him for "achievements...above and beyond the call of his expected duties." But he admitted that he found the whole incident less than rewarding.

"This fellow called and said on behalf of Hall of Heroes he wanted to present me with a certificate as an outstanding American. Hell, he didn't say I was going to be the first one."

The government's foremost advocate of wiretapping and other refined methods of surveillance and control added, "The big mistake was the information office shooting out that news release."

Cambodia And The Nixon Doctrine

(LNS) — There has been some question as to just what the Nixon Doctrine means in practice. Its advocates claim that it is designed to lessen American involvement abroad, with the U.S. providing only material support for friendly third world countries fighting communism.

Critics charge that it is a rationale for greater U.S. involvement, allowing American leaders greater freedom to intervene in the third world by massive use of air power instead of domestically unpopular U.S. foot soldiers.

No less an authority than Richard Nixon himself has recently provided a perfect example to end the controversy.

On Nov. 13, 1971, he stated in a press conference that "Cambodia is the Nixon doctrine in its purest form."

It is indeed. Cambodia was at peace when Richard Nixon took office. Today it knows full-scale war. Unlike Vietnam, unlike Laos, American involvement in Cambodia cannot be laid to Johnson, Kennedy, Eisenhower or Truman. It is truly Mr. Nixon's affair, and he is to be congratulated for taking full responsibility for it.

Let us look then at Cambodia to see what the Nixon doctrine really means:

First it means massive use of air power in populated areas.

On Dec. 5, 1971, the New York Times front-paged a story headline "Refugee Problem in Cambodia Laid to Allied Bombs – General Accounting Office Says in Study Two Million Have Fled Their Homes."

The two million refugees are one third of Cambodia's total population, displaced in just a year and a half. In contrast, it has taken a decade of ground fighting in South Vietnam to displace one third of the population.

This tidal wave of human misery is due almost entirely to massive and indiscriminate bombing of towns and villages, which has become the Nixon Administration's trademark, the very "wanton destruction of cities, towns, and villages" described as a Crime of War in Nuremburg Principle VI, clause b.

Snoul, Mimot, Sre Khtum, Kompong Cham, Skoun, Prey Totung are a few of the towns reported as destroyed in a recent Cornell Air War Study. Recent newspaper reports have lengthened the list: Taing Kauk, Baray, Kamphong Thmar, Kleah Sanday, Tuoi Leap.

But such incidents mark the relatively few times that U.S. reporters have happened to observe first-hand bombed-out towns or villages. Vast areas of northeastern and northern Cambodia have been inaccessible to the western press, and the actual number of towns and villages leveled can only be guessed at.

Most observers have echoed such reports as a New York Times dispatch dated Dec. 2, 1971:

"There is growing evidence that the peasants fleeing the countryside not far from here do so because of allied bombing and artillery fire–most of it American and South Vietnamese–and not because communist troops are present or because pitched battles are being fought by the Cambodians and North Vietnamese invaders.

"'When the communists came all the houses were standing,' said Meas Yat, a farmer who fled the village of Tuoi Leap about 12 miles west of Phnom Penh's center two weeks ago.

"'But after they spent the night inside the village, the airplanes came and started bombing, so we all left.'

"Tuoi Leap is flattened now except for the railroad station. Meas Yat, his family, and a number of friends have been wandering up and down Highway Four since then, camping in fields and in the enclosed yards of pagodas."

Secondly, the Nixon Doctrine means heavy reliance on local conscripts and mercenaries.

The Nixon Administration has built up the Cambodian Army from 30,000 at the time of Sihanouk's overthrow to over 200,000 at last count. It is still growing.

This Army is raised, trained and "advised" by American military personnel. And, in addition, the U.S. has had anywhere from 20,000 to 50,000 South Vietnamese soldiers fighting in Cambodia permanently since April 30, 1970.

Chinook hovers over landing zone west of Pleiku 10 miles inside Cambodia. Replacement personnel were forced to leap to the ground because of incomplete clearing of the landing zone.

U.S. Asian allies are suffering enormous casualties. No figures are released on Cambodian military casualities, but all reports indicate they are skyrocketing; and in the week of Nov. 25 - Dec. 2, A.R.V.N. (Army of the Republic of Vietnam) dead alone outnumbered U.S. killed 439 to 9. Most of these casualties occurred in Cambodia.

Thirdly, the Nixon Doctrine means total disregard of political, social or even relief reforms.

The recent abolition of the Cambodian Parliament and Lon Nol's reference to the "sterile game of democracy" received wide attention in the world press.

What is less widely understood, however, is that the U.S. is giving no attention whatsoever to economic, social or even refugee relief aid under the Nixon Doctrine. What is called "economic" aid is entirely such war-related acts as supplying rice to the Cambodian Army.

During the April 1971 Refugee Subcommittee Hearings, U.S.A.I.D. (Agency for International Development) administrator Meinecke was asked what aid the United States was giving to Cambodian refugees.

As far as U.S.A.I.D. is concerned they have not asked for aid for refugees, and we haven't been involved," he replied. ("They" is the Lon Nol "Government.")

Senator Edward Kennedy (D-Mass), chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Refugees, later noted that "the U.S. assistance to Cambodia, this military assistance program, for $185 million and the A.I.D. program for $70 million, have nothing in them remotely connected to refugee relief or emergency health care."

The situation persists today.

The New York Times reported on Dec. 5 that Arthur Rosen, the public affairs officer of the East Asian Bureau, "said that it was the Administration's position that 'since only a limited amount of money is available, we can most effectively focus it on military and economic assistance.'"

The article went on to note Kennedy's charges, based on the Government Accounting Office (G.A.O.) report that "the Cambodian Government's efforts to cope with the refugee problem have so far been ineffective..."

The G.A.O. report stated that "the policy of the United States is not to become involved with the problems of civilian war victims in Cambodia."

This, then, is the Nixon Doctrine: massive automated war from the air, callous use of Asian soldiers on the ground, and not the slightest regard for democratic form of relief to the victims of the bombing.

Reagan Vetoes Reform

SACRAMENTO, Ca. (LNS) — "For five years I've listened to the Democrats say the Governor's veto messages are untrue." Frank Murphy, Republican whip of the California legislature, was referring to Ronald Reagan. "You're so right. It makes me want to throw up. This is the most ludicrous message I have seen."

Such fury came after Reagan announced his veto of a bill introduced by Murphy (normally a staunch Reagan man) for more prison reform. The governor based his veto on the grounds that state prisons already have "an effective procedure."

In 1971, Reagan vetoed a total of 157 bills already passed by both houses of the legislature–breaking all of his previous records and those of all other California governors since Hiram Johnson in the early 1900's.

Among the most outstanding bills demolished through these perfectly legal methods were those that allocated funds for improvement of state universities and their faculties.

The farm workers, who for the past twelve years have been denied the right to unemployment insurance, were again set back, this time not by the two houses, but by the governor.

Another bill, which would make it illegal for doctors to deny minors birth control information and equipment in most cases, was approved by everybody but...guess who?

Gordon Publishes Three Soc. Books

Three books dealing with important racial and ethnic groups in the United States have been published in recent months under the editorship of Professor Milton M. Gordon of the University of Massachusetts sociology department, author of the award-winning "Assimilation in American Life."

The books are "Indian Americans" by Murray L. Wax of the University of Kansas, "Puerto Rican Americans" by the Rev. Joseph Fitzpatrick of Fordham University, and "Mexican Americans" by Joan W. Moore of the University of California, Riverside (with Alfredo Cuellar). The books are all in the Prentice-Hall Ethnic Groups in American Life Series of which Professor Gordon is general editor.

Other books which have already appeared in the series deal with Black Americans, Jewish Americans, Japanese Americans, and White Protestant Americans. Remaining volumes, yet to be published, will focus on Italian Americans, Irish Americans, Polish Americans, Greek Americans, and Chinese Americans.

The series as a whole constitutes a major attempt to acquaint the American reading public with the historical and sociological background of its multi-racial and multi-ethnic heritage, while making extensive use of the analysis of the assimilation process provided by Professor Gordon in his book, "Assimilation in American Life," published by Oxford University Press in 1964, and winner of two national prizes including the Anisfield-Wolf Award in race relations sponsored by the Saturday Review. Those books in the series already published are currently in wide use in college courses throughout the county which deal with racial and ethnic relations.

Professor Gordon is a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Bowdoin College who received his doctorate from Columbia University. He taught at the University of Pennsylvania and Haverford and Wellesley Colleges before joining the UMass sociology department in 1961.

A Guggenheim Fellow in 1960-61, Dr. Gordon has contributed numerous articles to sociological journals, and has published in the New York Times Magazine and Daedalus, the journal of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. He is also the author of the book, "Social Class in American Sociology," published in 1958, and has served as a consultant on race relations to the city of Philadelphia, the Albert M. Greenfield Center at the University of Pennsylvania, and Brandeis University. In February, Dr. Gordon has been invited to deliver a lecture on the subject of assimilation to a graduate class in minority studies at Yale University.

Alcohol Causes Traffic Deaths

BOSTON (AP) — A study of 85 one-vehicle traffic accidents in 1971 in which the adult driver was killed showed that 67 per cent of them had been drinking and 54 per cent were "impaired by alcohol," state police said Tuesday.

A similar survey of 32 drivers under the age of 21 who died in one-car accidents showed that 56 per cent had been drinking and 28 per cent had drunk enough to be "impaired."

The study released by the office of Department of Public Safety Commissioner John F. Kehoe Jr. said a 0.10 per cent alcohol content in the blood is considered enough to "impair" a person.

The report also reviewed 72 accidents in which the victims were pedestrians over the age of 18 and found that 55 per cent had been drinking and of that number 44 per cent were "impaired."

Fort Devens Gets Higher Training

FT. DEVENS, Mass. (AP) — Soldiers and other residents of the area will be able to study for a four-year bachelor's degree in a new evening school program getting underway Jan. 31 at the Ft. Devens Army Education Center.

Curry College in Milton will provide 11 faculty members to teach three-credit evening courses in areas including mathematics, physics, sociology, history, government, economics.

Dr. Allan C. Greenberg, director of the Division of Continuing Education at Curry, said Tuesday the once a week, three-hour courses will be conducted mostly at the junior and senior levels. Persons who complete the program will be eligible for the B.A. degree in several fields.

Mount Wachusett Community College and Northeastern University already offer college courses at the Ft. Devens center. Most of the Wachusett courses are on the freshman and sophomore level.

Pay Board Approves Most Of New Rail Contract

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pay Board Tuesday approved by a one-vote margin all but the last six months of a new contract covering 140,000 railroad trainmen, but the union declined to say whether it will now put the long-delayed contract into effect.

The trainmen's union, the AFL-CIO United Transportation Union, has refused to go ahead with streamlined work rules in the contract until the Pay Board approves all of it.

UTU President A.H. Chesser declined to comment on the action Tuesday until he receives official notification of it, so it was not known if the near-total approval of the pact would satisfy him.

Although a tentative pact was reached last Aug. 2, ending an 18-day strike that tied up 10 rail lines, the union held up final approval and demanded assurances that the wage freeze and later controls would not force any scaling down of its sizable pay raises.

The 3-1/2 year contract, retroactive more than two years to Jan. 1, 1970, contains 42 per cent in pay raises along with changes in work rules that the industry says will enable it to give more efficient service and eventually save millions of dollars.

A spokesman for the Pay Board said it approved a resolution clearing the agreement through the present, and saying it intends to approve two raises this year, totaling 10 per cent, so long as the work-rules changes go into effect.

Two more raises in 1973, totaling 5 per cent, were not affected by the action. The board would have to deal with them next year, if wage controls are still in effect.

The vote to approve the resolution was 8 to 5, just achieving the eight-man majority needed for passage.

Although board spokesman refused to say how various members voted, board sources said the eight favorable votes came from the five labor members and three business members including Benjamin F. Biaggini, the Southern Pacific president who sponsored the resolution reportedly because of a desire to get the work-rules changes in effect.

Sargent Files New Budget

BOSTON (AP) — A fiscal 1973 budget of more than $2 billion was to be filed with the legislature Wednesday by Gov. Francis W. Sargent.

A Sargent spokesman also said the governor will ask for nearly $100 million to carry the Department of Public Welfare for the rest of fiscal 1972.

Fiscal 1972 ends June 30.

The budget message will ask for no new taxes, but Sargent spokesmen said the governor will address tax reform in the same manner as the "State of the State" address delivered earlier this month.

Sargent at that time said Massachusetts must prepare the way for a state takeover of education costs, referring to recent court decisions which found the local property tax in other states an inequitable means of financing education.

He has said and will repeat Wednesday that the state cannot afford to take over education until the federal government assumes all welfare costs.

A Sargent spokesman said the governor will propose nothing specific relative to the education problem.

The theme of the message will be the same as last year, austerity. Soon after the governor delivers his message Secretary of Administration Robert L. Yasi will announce a new expenditure control program for state agencies.

The budget unveiled Wednesday is the first to be drawn up cooperatively with Sargent's 10 new cabinet secretaries. The secretaries at this point in the state government reorganization process are confined primarily to budgetary responsibilities.

Sargent at this time last year filed a budget totaling $1.914 billion. The budget was not approved until the end of August, two months after it was to have gone into effect.

Deficiencies and supplemental budgets approved by the legislature principally for welfare after approval of the main appropriations bill have brought the total appropriation for fiscal 1972 to date to $1.977 billion.

The additional welfare deficiencies requested by Sargent will bring the fiscal 1972 budget above the $2 billion figure.

Efforts to keep Sargent's budget request Wednesday below $2 billion failed. Some budget planners have termed the $2 billion mark a "psychological barrier."

Welfare consumes nearly one half the annual state budget. Welfare Commissioner Steven A. Minter requested some $970 million to run his department during fiscal 1973, but resources indicated his request has been cut considerably.

Minter requested $905 million for his department in the fiscal 1972 budget but that was cut to $817 million by Sargent. The deficiencies will bring the total welfare appropriation for fiscal 1972 to well above Minter's original request.

Last year Sargent requested some $311 million in new taxes. The legislature ended up approving about $260 million in new levies, including a 25 per cent increase in the personal income tax.

New tax proposals would not stand much of a chance with the legislature this year. All 280 members of the House and Senate must stand for re-election in November.

Be A Teacher

Through the Modular Credit Office in the School of Education, the University Day School is able to offer a team teaching course, for either 1-1/2 or 3 credits. Participating students would teach pre-schoolers in an open classroom plan, assuming all the responsibilities of a regular teacher. The teaching team is made up of students from various departments, with the majority numbering from Human Development, Education, and Work Study, although teachers with differing backgrounds are welcome.

Those students interested in earning 1-1/2 credits would teach one four-hour session on Fridays, and attend a one-hour team meeting, while those interested in earning three credits would teach two four-hour sessions, and attend two team meetings.

Anyone interested should phone the University Day School this week at 545-2466.

Rent Questions To Be Sent

By JENNETTE MARTINEAU

The Student Senate Committee on Rents and Fees met last night to plan the mailing of questionaires to be sent to the business managers of four hundred colleges and universities. The questionaire is to concern mostly housing costs and fees.

"The purpose of this questionaire," Chairman Bob Chiller explained, "is to get figures that we can talk about. We can't fight Campion on a financial basis, paying too much rent." He described the function of the Committee as "first and foremost, to represent the students."

The Committee also plans to complete its own research into a booklet.

Classicist Goes Public

Prof. Gerald F. Else, a classicist, will give four public lectures at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst in February.

Dr. Else is director of the Center for Coordination of Ancient and Modern Studies at the University of Michigan where he is also a professor of Greek and Latin.

He will lecture three times Monday, Feb. 7, and once Tuesday, Feb. 8. All lectures will be free to the public. The schedule: Monday, Feb. 7, 1:25 p.m., Hasbrouck room 134, "Some Thoughts on Greek Drama;" 4 p.m., Herter room 301, "Readings from Greek and Latin Poetry;" and 8 p.m., School of Business Administration room 120, "The Humanities in a Changing World." Tuesday, Feb. 8, he will speak at 1:25 p.m. in Herter room 301 on "What Use are Foreign Languages?"

The visiting lecturers program which brings Prof. Else to UMass was begun in 1957 by the Arts Program of the Association of American Colleges, and is supported by a grant from the Danforth Foundation. Its purpose is to assist colleges in efforts to strengthen liberal education.

Dr. Else has a Ph.D. from the University of Nebraska and has taught at Harvard and the State University of Iowa. He has been president of the Classical Association of the Middle West and South and of the American Philological Association, and chairman of the Colloquium on Classics in Education.

A PAULIST DOESN'T WAIT TO BE ORDAINED TO GET INVOLVED.

If you think that ordination is something like graduation —and the time in between is similar to marking time—then you couldn't be more mistaken.

The Paulists were founded with the belief that each man is a member of the community and he contributes his own thing. Each is an individual with his own talents and he is given the freedom to use them in his own way. But not later. Now.

For instance, during the novitiate, novices work in such diverse areas as hospitals, vocational rehabilitation centers and Universities. They serve as assistant chaplains, co-retreat masters, student teachers and psychiatric aides.

Paulist Seminarians create recreational programs, direct "Days of Recollection" for CCD students, direct film series, experiment with the use of media in the liturgy as a preaching tool, originate and edit the Paulist Free Press, coordinate Lenten lectures and organize Home Masses, to mention just a few.

When you commit yourself to the Paulists, it isn't a someday thing. It's now. Today.

For more information about the Paulists write to: Rev. Donald C. Campbell, C.S.P., Vocation Director, Room 300.

Building Materials Found Flammable

BOSTON (AP)-Laboratory tests by the Boston fire department have indicated that all but one type of plastic used to protect open floors of buildings under construction are highly flammable and dangerous.

Fire Chief George Paul said Tuesday the plastic coverings, made of polyethylene, burn quickly and form fire balls which are carried by the wind.

Paul said one type of polyethylene covering will not sustain fire because it has been treated. But it costs more.

He also expressed concern over the use of overstuffed office furniture made of polyurethane foam. He said the material burns quickly and produces a thick, black toxic smoke.

"We have regulations to control its use in buildings or homes," Paul said. "All we can do is alert people of its dangers.

The fire chief said it was "bad enough in a house fire, but at least most residences can be ventilated."

But, he said, windows in high rise buildings are sealed and usually made of glass that is difficult to break, so a one-room fire could create toxic conditions.

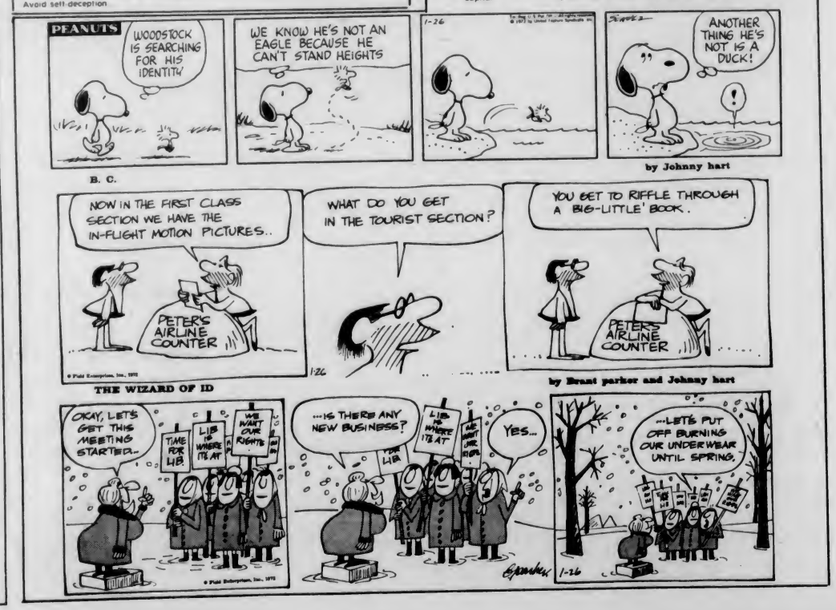
PICTURE YOURSELF AS A PAULIST.

First, picture a religious Community. A Community founded by an American, and for, the benefit of North America.

Picture a founder who was a century ahead of his time. A man with a vision that came true. A man with a belief that a Community could be modern and flexible enough to meet the needs of the Church in every age as they arise. A Community that wouldn't lag behind the times on leaden feet. A Community that would communicate through the spoken and printed word and one that wouldn't be hampered by specific activities when new needs arise.



Next, picture the men in this new Community. They would be flexible. Each one would use his own individual talents in his own way and would be given the freedom to do so.

These are the Paulists. The modern religious Community. Keeping pace with the times. Concerned. Involved.

If you can picture yourself as a Paulist, why not write for more information to: Rev. Donald C. Campbell, C.S.P., Vocation Director, Room No. 400

Royals' Owner Linked To Organized Crime

WASHINGTON (AP)-The commissioner of the National Basketball Association said Tuesday his office is not ignoring accusations that a club owner is linked to organized crime.

"We're not turning our back on it," Commissioner Walter Kennedy declared before the Senate subcommittee on antitrust and monopoly.

Kennedy's assertion followed allegations by Rep. Sam Steiger, R-Ariz., that Cincinnati Royals owner Jerry Jacobs has organized crime links through a holding company called Emprise Corp.

The exchange came as the subcommittee continued its hearings on a bill to permit merger of the two professional basketball leagues.

Steiger said Emprise operates a number of subsidiaries known as "Sportservices."

"Their history," he said of Jerry Jacobs and his brother, Max, the operating head of the Royals, " is replete with reports of business associations with underworld and organized crime figures.

The moral is clear," said Steiger, a long-time foe of Emprise and its owner. "It's all right to do business with organized crime, provided you do enough business with the standard settlers of organized sports."

Under sharp questioning by Sen. Sam J. Ervin, Jr., D-N.C. about what action was being taken, Kennedy replied, "I deeply resent the inference that the office of commissioner of the NBA is totally unaware of what is going on and not doing anything about."

Testifying on the merger bill, American Basketball Association Commissioner Jack Dolph declared that pro basketball's troubles have moved beyond the mere serious to the critical stage.

"And to lose sight of the main issue at hand, the merits of the merger, can sound the death knell of professional league basketball as we know it today, as surely as if relief were denied," Dolph said.

He said every ABA franchise has operated at a loss every season. He named as the chief culprit "the intense interleague fight to sign college superstars..."

The merger, with its common draft, he said, would end "the bidding war for untested rookies" and eliminate "the single, most destructive economic factor to the well-being of professional league basketball..."

Steiger said the original interest of the Jacobs brothers, was in concessions at sports arenas and ball parks. Subsequently, he said, they became "very active at parimutuel operations, horse racing, dog racing and jai-alai, first as concessionaires and then as investors."

Steiger said Sportservice operates concessions for the Baltimore Colts, Buffalo Bills, Cleveland Browns, Detroit Lions, St. Louis Cardinals and Washington Redskins, all of the National Football League, and baseball team in Miami, Montreal, Cincinnati and St. Louis.

In New York, an NFL spokesman said the Sportservice operates the concessions for the cities, not the league clubs.

"Grandfather" Patterson Set To Fight Bonavena

NEW YORK (AP)-Floyd Patterson said Tuesday he feels a victory over Oscar Bonavena would put him in line for a shot at Joe Frazier's world heavyweight championship, a title Patterson first held 16 years ago.

Patterson is scheduled to fight Bonavena in a 10-rounder Feb. 11 at Madison Square Garden, and he said at a press luncheon that he wanted to fight the Argentine "because fighting him would be more beneficial than fighting anyone else.

"He's the only man who fought Frazier twice and went the distance both times and he also practically went the distance with Muhammad Ali," said the 37-year-old Patterson, the only man ever to win the heavyweight title twice.

Bonavena went 10 and 15 rounds with Frazier and never was knocked down, while he knocked Frazier down twice in the first fight. He gave Ali a hard time before being stopped in the 15th round last Dec. 7.

"No matter what you hear, if Floyd wins, I'm sure we can sit down and put together a match between Floyd and Joe Frazier," said Teddy Brenner, matchmaker for the Garden.

Bonavena, 29, couldn't resist a couple of verbal digs at Patterson.

Bonavena said he liked Patterson and when asked why, he replied, "May be because he's my grandfather," in reference to the difference in ages between he and Patterson.

Asked if he ever saw Patterson fight, Bonavena said, "No. I saw him fight Liston the second time but that was no fight." Sonny Liston knocked Patterson out in the first round of each of their two title fights.

John Condon, publicist for Garden boxing, brought laughs from assembled sports writers and broadcasters when he opened the luncheon by saying, "The fight everyone's been waiting for..."

Since the fight was first announced for Jan. 17, 1971 it has been postponed four times. When Bonavena finally arrived in this country last month for the latest signing, Patterson failed to appear at a press luncheon because his car broke down.

Patterson has won his last seven fights and has a 54-7-1 record with 39 knockouts. He won all six of his fights in 1971. Bonavena, who won his only start last year when Al "Blue" Lewis was disqualified, has a 47-7-1 mark, with 32 knockouts.

Bonavena is ranked fourth among heavyweight contenders and Patterson fifth by the World Boxing Association.

Pistons Possibly Up For Sale

DETROIT (AP)-General Manager Ed Coil of the Detroit Pistons confirmed Tuesday reports that the National Basketball Association team probably would be sold before next season.

Coil said at least six firm offers have been made for the NBA club owned by Fred Zollner, 71-year-old industrialist.

Coil returned Monday from a meeting at Zollner's home in Golden Beach, Fla., at which the sales offers were discussed with Paul Schirmeyer, Zollner Corp. treasurer.

The Zollner firm manufactures pistons and other automotive parts and is based in Fort Wayne, Ind.

Coil declined to name any of the six groups or to say how much Zollner was asking for the franchise. The going rate for NBA franchises now is about $5 million, he said.

Zollner said two weeks ago he had received several exploratory offers for the ball club.

Coil said Zollner "definitely is willing to listen."

He said the Florida conference was called by Zollner to set up ground rules for any sales talks.

"One of the requisites Fred has is that he has to sell the team to a local group or a local individual," said Coil. "But the price has got to be right, I'm sure. If it is not, I am just as certain Fred Zollner won't sell. As he said, he doesn't need the money."

He said the NBA was also interested in keeping the team in Detroit, since Detroit is one of the nation's largest television markets.

Meyer Falls To Death

ST. PAUL-MINNEAPOLIS (AP)-Daniel H. Meyer, president of the Salt Lake club of the Western Hockey League, plunged to his death Tuesday, police said.

Meyer fell to his death from a 19th floor window at the Radisson South Hotel in suburban Bloomington, where hockey executives had gathered for two days of meetings.

Police were investigating.

The Hennepin County medical examiner's office said it was informed of the death at 2:45 p.m., but had no further details.

Meyer, 45, is survived by his widow, Juanita; two daughters, Linda, 20, and Lesa, 8, and a son, Danny, 20.

The incident occurred about 2:30 p.m., authorities said.

An official of the Minnesota North Stars quoted persons who had breakfast with Meyers as saying he appeared cheerful Tuesday mroning.

Pit Martin, a center for the Chicago Black Hawks and a member of the West team for Tuesday night's National Hockey League All-Star game, was in the next room, heard a crash and saw Meyers fall, the North Stars official said.

Pucksters Face Amherst Tonight

By ALAN WRIGHT

The second semester of hockey action begins with an unusual game tonight when two teams will be playing each other on their own home ice. Orr Rink will be the common denominator scene at 8:00 when UMass faces off against Amherst College.

The Little Ivy pucksters from uptown have fared pretty well thus far this season despite lacking depth with a 4-2 record including a win over Connecticut and a loss to Williams--two teams that are on the Redman schedule. UMass has beaten Williams twice so far this season, which is an indication that Coach Jack Canniff's charges should be able to handle their neighboring opponents easily enough tonight. The only foreseeable problem is that during the semesterbreak,it was tough for UMass to get enough ice time to practice and their precision play might be affected.

Other than that, the Redmen are all set to try and equal or better their successful first half of the season that saw three wins at home, seven wins on the road and only two losses, both on the road.

If the Division II leading skaters get by Amherst College tonight, they have to really be up for Friday's home game against powerful Vermont.

NHL Solves Franchise Problem

ST. PAUL-MINNEAPOLIS (AP)-The National Hockey League solved its realignment problem Tuesday by assigning the new Long Island and Atlanta franchises to the already existing East and West Divisions.

Long Island joins the East Division composed of five pre-expansion teams along with Vancouver and Buffalo-the last two teams added to the league two years ago.

Atlanta goes to the West Division composed of the six original expansion teams and the Chicago Black Hawks.

The decision was announced by NHL President Clarence Campbell as the board of governors concluded two days of meetings prior to the league's silver anniversary All-Star game.

There had been speculation that with the addition of the two new clubs, ballooning NHL membership to 16 teams, realignment might be achieved by the establishment of four divisions of four teams each.

A proposed alignment had achieved 13 votes last November, but when it was presented to the governors Tuesday several of the clubs had changed their minds. Unanimous approval of the 14 member clubs was needed.

"I think as many as six teams were opposed," said Campbell. "Two were very assertive in their opposition.

"I'm quite satisfied with this arrangement. My personal preference was that we go the other way, but remember my dollars aren't at stake. My only concern is a viable operation."

The teams will play a 78-game schedule and the arrangement will stand for the next two seasons.

"I consider that this constitutes a commitment until 1974-5, when two more teams will be added," Campbell said.

Campbell said interest in the next two expansion franchises has been shown by groups in Kansas City, Cleveland and Washington, D.C. The NHL has previously announced that it will add two teams in 1974-5 and in a press release Tuesday said, "It is self-evident that the NHL must expand to at least 24 teams in North American during the 1970s."

In line with this ambitious plan, the NHL announced that the Western and Central Leagues would merge next season. Each league has six member teams and the new merged circuit would operate with two divisions.

The NHL said that as part of the merger agreement, at least one-half of all expansion franchises in excess of 18 will be offered to present WHL members provided they comply with NHL requirements.

The WHL presently consists of Seattle, Wash.; Portland, Ore.; Salt Lake City, Utah; Denver, Colo.; Phoenix, Ariz., and San Diego, Calif., CHL members are Dallas and Fort Worth, Tex.; Kansas City; Oklahoma City and Tulsa, Okla., and Omaha, Neb.

Lenny Lyles: "I Never Feel I've Done Enough"

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — A sign over the desk of former Baltimore Colts defensive halfback Lenny Lyles shows a black hand and white hand clasped together and reads: "What will you risk-responsibility, unity, understanding and progress."

Lyles, 35, created the slogan and had it made up in the drafting department of the Brown and Williamson Tobacco Corp., where he is training coordinator for some 5,000 people.

Words like these mean a lot to Lyles, a product of the Louisville ghetto who grew up with rats, roaches and crime.

Now more than ever, the man who played 10 years with the Colts is trying to instill these qualities in others, mainly kids.

Last year he spoke three nights a week at high schools, youth correctional homes, little league functions, churches and settlement houses.

He shows films of his Colts' days, tosses footballs with youngsters on the block, takes them to ball games and tells them about his life.

"I try and call on experience and what has helped me," he says. "I say to them, 'Don't steal.' Because I stole and because my father wasn't there, I can identify with kids like this. I can understand their problems, frustrations and anxieties first hand."

Lyles was named one of the ten most outstanding men in America in 1971 by the U.S. Jaycees. The silver trophy which sits on his desk, reads: "The hope of mankind lies in the hands of youth and action."

Lyles left pro football in 1969 after a brilliant career with the Colts and the San Francisco 49ers. During that time, he played in the 1968 Super Bowl and the 1966 Pro Bowl and was Baltimore's defensive captain in 1968 and 1969.

Lyles credits his success in athletics to his mother, Alice Lyles, a teacher's aide here.

"Mother kept a clean house and she tried to inspire my sister and me as much as possible," Lyles says. "I got my drive from her."

Lyles serves on many boards and is active with the Urban League, March of Dimes, Boy Scouts, health and welfare council and others.

"I spread myself pretty thin and I get pretty tired," says the man who was the Colts No. 1 draft pick in 1958. "But if I can make it, I'll go. I never feel that I've done enough."

Lyles often wonders what mankind--and this nation in particular--could accomplish in easing tensions if everyone set aside some time for helping others.

It is necessary "to zero in on the problem and its causes, find a solution to it...and find what each of us can do to solve it," he says.

Espo, McKenzie Lead East Stars

ST. PAUL-MINNEAPOLIS (AP)-Scoring champion Phil Esposito and Bobby Orr combined for the winning goal Tuesday night, ending personal All-Star Game scoring droughts and leading the East Division to a 3-2 victory over the West in the 25th renewal of the National Hockey League's mid-season classic.

Esposito and Orr, whose scoring explosiveness has dominated the NHL in recent seasons, accounted for the winner with just 69 seconds gone in the final period of the nationally televised game that attracted a crowd of 15,685 to the Met Sports Center.

Orr's perfect pass sent his Boston teammate into the West zone and Esposito made no mistake with a pinpoint shot for the game-winner.

The goal was Esposito's first All-Star point in five appearances and Orr, in his fourth appearance, picked up his first point with the assist.

It was a come-from-behind victory for the East Stars, who spotted the West two early goals.

Bobby Hull, who hustled all night long, put the West on the scoreboard with just under three minutes left in a somewhat listless first period.

Chicago teammates Pit Martin and Chico Mako combined to get the puck to Hull about 20 feet in front of Ken Dryden, the East's starting goalie from Montreal. Hull teed off and Dryden never had a chance.

With the second period just 71 seconds old, the West scored again, this time on a spectacular effort by Philadelphia's Simon Nolet.

Dennis Hull, Bobby's brother, sent Nolet into the East zone with a pass. Nolet bored in past Dallas Smith of Boston and fired a back-hander that caught the far corner behind Dryden.

That made it 2-0. New York's Jean Ratelle provided a needed point 2 1/2 minutes later, being in the right spot when Rod Gilbert hit him with a pass to the left of Chicago's Tony Esposito.

Ratelle snapped a shot that caught the upper corner behind Esposito's right shoulder.

It was still 2-1 when the teams shifted goalies midway through the second period. Filles Villemure of the Rangers replaced Dryden in the East net and Gump Worsley, who received a standing ovation from the hometown Minnesota fans when he was introduced, took over for Esposito.

Shortly afterward, Ranger defenseman Brad Park caught Bobby Hull's stick as the Chicago star bombed a shot at the net. Park cut for three stitches over the upper lid of his right eye.

After returning and with just 75 seconds left in the period, Park's pinpoint pass sent Boston's John McKenzie in alone on Worsley. McKenzie faked once and then fired the tying goal past the 42-year-old goalie.

Trustee-Faculty Controversy Settled

By STEVE FINE

"The recent controversy which occurred at the Board of Trustees meeting on December 28, 1971, resulted from a lack of communication between the Board and Faculty Senate Delegates."

That's the way Robert Wellman, Secretary of the Faculty Senate, saw it when he discussed this misunderstanding at his fifth floor office in Herter Hall.

"What happened late in the meeting," Wellman explained, "was Professor Burroughs told Acting Chairman Robert Wood, (Joseph Healy left earlier) that he was disturbed that six members of the Faculty Senate's Committee of Concern had not received a copy of the Board's response to two requests by the Faculty Senate. He was also upset that President Wood had not given him the chance to speak on one of those requests concerning the Faculty Senate's endorsement of the 1966 AAUP statement about the government of colleges and universities, despite the fact that he had sent a letter to Secretary McCartney requesting to talk at the meeting on this subject."

Wellman said the controversy involved the two Faculty Senate Delegates, Professor Joseph Burroughs, of Human Development, Professor Terry Burke, of the Geography Department, himself, and the Chairman of the Board of Trustees, Joseph Healy, President Robert Wood, and the Secretary of the Trustees, Robert McCartney.

Wellman then quoted Burroughs directly from the agenda where he had spoken to Wood. He said, "Mr. President I have in hand another example of the breakdown in communications between the faculty and the Board. (Wellman says that Burroughs is referring to Wood moving on to new merit salary increase plan which none of the faculty knew about, and neglecting to call on him.)...On December 22 I addressed to Secretary McCartney, and delivered personally to the mail room in Whitmore Hall, a request, that Professor Wellman and I be permitted to address the Trustees before they put the vote on their response to the Faculty Senate's motion of December 2 with reference to the 1966 AAUP Statement and their response to the Committee of Concern. I did not have the opportunity to speak."

Professor Wellman then went on to explain what exactly the circumstances were behind the schism in communication which occurred between Burroughs and the Board.

"What actually happened," he explained, "was the letter Burroughs had written to the Secretary never reached him because it was left unopened on his secretary's desk. She was new in the office and didn't know the procedure for these types of letters very well. So really neither Healy or Wood could have known about Burroughs or my address."

He also said that the copies of the Board's responses to the Senate's requests causes another communications gap. It was also learned later from Chairman Healy that he didn't want to release the documents to the six members of the Committee of Concern until Joe Burroughs and myself had personally received them. Again President Wood didn't know this acting as chairman at the time, because Healy hadn't told him!

Wellman added that the Faculty Senate's Rules Committee got together later on, still under the assumption of Burroughs being denied to speak, and drafted a resolution. "This resolution," he maintained, "says the trustees have been violating certain set procedures. These specifically state that a faculty Senate Delegate to the Board of Trustees should sit in on the executive session of the Board."

Wellman says the Senate has received an answer to this motion from the Board, and it agrees with the Senate's position. He added the Board felt that there were certain occasions when a Faculty Senate Delegates could not sit on it.

In response to this position by the Board, he says, "I understand the Board's ruling. Let us say a certain faculty member was in line for a promotion. It would be a conflict of interest for a faculty member to sit on this session. I can understand the trustees position and appreciate their point of view."

Today's Faculty Senate's agenda will encompass the final reading a question concerning an alleged censorship of the University of Massachusetts by the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) concerning the negative response by the Board of Trustees on the AAUP 1966 statement on Faculty Responsibility in University Government. There will be also a final reading of a Constitutional Amendment to add more students to the Athletic Council and another question by Professor Gerber asking about President Wood's new Academic Advisory Council.

Draft Counselor's Corner

Conscientious Objectors Must Use New Form

By GILBERT J. SALK

A quick flash for all of you, followed by some more info on the new draft.

First, you should all take the opportunity to hear Arlo Tatum's talk on "What's Up with the Draft?" tonight in the SU Ballroom at 8:00 p.m. Arlo is the director of Central Committee for Conscientious Objectors, and is one of the top experts on the draft in the country. What with all the changes the SSS is going through these days, it might really help you out if you make sure you catch this lecture. And please, be sure to pass the word on to your friends–after all, they might not want to fight the Johnson-Nixon War Against Southeast Asia either.

(Special for draft counselors: Arlo will be holding a seminar just for you Friday morning from 9 a.m. to noon in 174-176 CC. Please try to attend. I'm sorry about it being during class time, but it was all we could do with Arlo's schedule.)

Now, on to the new draft.

There's a whole new thing for Conscientious Objectors now. The old SSS Form 150 has been scrapped and replaced by a new instrument of torture. This should not effect those who have already filed a Form 150, but those who now decide to apply for either a I-O or I-A-O classification will be supplied with a new form. The pertinent sections of the form will be reproduced below.

It should be noted that an old fact is still true. Anyone who sincerely believes that it is wrong to kill if there is any other alternative, or who feels that he will not participate in war in any form, and can give as reasons strongly held moral, ethical, or religious beliefs, can get a C.O. classification. He must, however, get his head together. It is not impossible, or even particularly difficult, to be a conscientious objector once you go through the job of understanding your own value system.

If you think you might be a CO, consult a draft counselor in 923 CC. He or she will discuss the classification and your beliefs with you, and go over the Form 150, giving you ideas about how best to present yourself on it. Then look over the form and start roughing out answers to the questions. After you've written a first draft, consult your counselor again to find out which of your answers need strngethening. Then do a final draft. After you have completed your answers, write a short letter to your board summarizing your beliefs and requesting classification as a CO. Go over this letter with your counselor before mailing it.

Keeping a copy of the letter for yourself, send it to the board by Certified Mail, Return Receipt Requested. When the receipt comes back, staple it to your copy of the letter and save it. The board will soon send you a SSS Form 150, which you must fill out and return within 30 days. Be sure to consult your counselor before sending your form back.

The questions on the form are reproduced below. Clip them out and save them, so you will have them if you decide to apply. The best time to apply, by the way, is as soon as you believe that you are a CO. The earlier the better.

SSS Form 150 (Revised 1-3-72)

"...The Supreme Court has interpreted 'Religious Training and belief' to include moral and ethical beliefs as well as traditional religous beliefs. The court did state that those persons whose beliefs are not deeply and sincerely held and those whose objection to war does not rest at all upon moral ethical or religious principles but instead rests solely upon considerations of policy, pragmatism or expediency would not qualify."

Emphasis added.

"...Include in your statement answers to the following questions in the order given plus any additional information you wish to provide:

1. Briefly describe your beliefs which are the basis for your request for conscientious objector status.

2. If you seek classification in Class 1-O, why will not your beliefs permit you to serve as a noncombatant in the armed forces? If you seek classification in Class 1-A-O, why will your beliefs permit you to serve as a noncombatant in the armed forces?

3. Explain how, when, and from what source you received the religious, moral, or ethical training, or acquired the belief, which is the basis for your claim for classification as a conscientious objector.

Include in your answer a statement of:- (a) When and how you first began to formulate your opposition to participation in war; and (b) When you decided your beliefs qualified you for classification as a conscientious objector.

4. The Supreme Court has held that for sincere beliefs of conscientious objection to qualify under the law they must be- "based upon a power or being, or upon a faith (or belief) to which all else is subordinate or upon which all else is ultimately dependent."

Show in the context of the above quotation that your beliefs are deeply and sincerely held by (a) Explaining what most clearly demonstrates the consistency and depth of your beliefs; (b) Describing how your beliefs affect the way you live your life, the activities you participate in, your vocational goals; and (c) Depicting what actions, incidents, or other aspects of your life give evidence of your beliefs...."

That's what has to be answered. It's tough, but not really as bad as it may appear at first glance. Give it some thought, and if you want to take a crack at it, stop in and rap. Draft Counseling Services' office is in 923 Campus Center, and the folks there are anxious to help.

PEACE.

T.V. Violence Necessary?

LONDON (AP)-Violence is a necessary part of television, says a report published Thursday after two years of research.

"There must be some violence. The problems are in deciding what to include and how to present it honestly," it said.

"To exclude all scenes of violence from the television screen would be to falsify the picture of life presented to viewers."

The survey was ordered by the British Broadcasting Corp-(BBC)-to discover exactly how much violence was contained in programs and define viewers' relations to it.

Of the 1,588 programs monitored, half contained no major incidents of violence and one-eighth contained four or more.

Nearly half the violent incidents were in news and current affairs programs and about a third in drama programs.

The report said American programs contained twice as many violent incidents as British-made productions, and that Westerns had the most violent themes.

But the two men who compiled the report-Brian Emmett, head of BBC audience research, and Prof. Elihu Katz, director of communications at Jerusalem's Hebrew University-concluded that 96 per cent of all drama productions were justified in showing violence.

The report named the television series "The FBI" and "The Untouchables" and the classic movie "Stagecoach" as being among those that had used violence for violence's sake.

Guns and fists were the most common weapons of violence, with Americans preferring guns and the British fists, the report said.

On audience reaction to violence, the report said most people distinguished between "real violence and unreal violence" and that it did not appear to be an important issue among more than a few.

Nominated as the top 10 violence programs were "Mannix," "The Untouchables," "The Baron," "The Avengers," "I Spy," "Dr. Who," "Hawaii Five-O", "The Virginian," "Callan" and "Star Trek."

Author Bill Pannell Speaks Tonight

The visit of Bill Pannell, gifted Black lecturer and author, to UMass will be climaxed tonight in an address at the Campus Center Auditorium at 8:00. Pannell will be joined by "The Apostles and Co.," a ten-member Black gospel-soul group from Brooklyn, N.Y. in this unique program open to the whole campus community.

Pannell is Vice-President and the Director of the Campus Ministry for Tom Skinner Associates, Inc. He and his staff seek to communicate the relevance of Jesus Christ to Black students on Black college campuses. He has authored numerous articles and a book, My Friend, The Enemy. His speaking has the tone of a prophet, as he deals with controversial issues with candor and a directness which cuts to the heart of problems and seeks to bring reconciliation and healing.

Pannell has already spoken at several occasions to members of the Black Community on campus. Yesterday he addressed Black faculty and leaders in CCEBS and Afro-Am at a luncheon held for him at The New Africa House, and last night he engaged in dialogue with many members of the Black community at an informal rap session at the New Africa House. He is also speaking at several Black Studies classes during his three days on campus.

"The Apostles & Co." have been together since 1965, when they began as six teenage fellows in Brooklyn. They have since grown to twelve young men and women, all of whom are college students in the New York City area while maintaining a busy schedule of engagements in coffeehouses, on campuses, in reformatories and prisons, and on the streets of New York.

Bill Pannell and The Apostles will be speaking and singing at "Spirit and Soul Breakaway '72, ' a weekend for members of the Black Community, international students, and concerned Conference Center in Groton, Mass. Registration is open for 120 students. Anyone interested should call 546-7125 or 546-6908 for information about cost and transportation.

Phone Rates Questioned

BOSTON (AP)-The state Consumers' Council Wednesday requested an advisory opinion from Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn on the legality of the $65.5 million a year rate increase awarded to the New England Telephone Co. Monday.

The rate increase, awarded by the state Department of Public Utilities, was announced at a news conference by Massachusetts Secretary of Consumer Affairs William I. Cowin.

Cowin estimated that the increase amounted to more than 14 per cent.

He also said that the increase represented a "settlement" negotiated between the DPU and the telephone company over two rate increase requests filed during the past 2 1/2 years.

The total amount asked by the company in the two cases was $101.5 million.

Cowin said the decision to negotiate was "dictated" by a 1971 state Supreme Court ruling which, he said, set down guidelines for permissible profit levels.

In a letter to Quinn Wednesday, the Consumer's Council asked if the DPU can "enter a decision in a telephone rate case without holding a public hearing and affording all parties in interest an opportunity to be heard."

Salzman Protest Expected At Trustee Meeting

BOSTON (AP) — Trustees of the University of Massachusetts afternoon. It may come from supporters of Dr. Freda Salzman, a former associate professor of physics at the UMass Boston campus.

She was dropped from the faculty in 1968 on the grounds that her husband held a tenured appointment in the same department.

Dr. Salzman claims she was a victim of discrimination against women, and has summoned the support of scientists and women's rights advocates in a protest against the University tenure system.

Last month, trustees announced they had rewritten their hiring and promotion policies to enable husbands and wives to serve on the same staff, but they did not reappoint Dr. Salzman.

UMass President Robert Wood said the ruling would not be retroactive.

Dr. Salzman asserts the true reason she was dismissed was her outspoken opposition to the administration of the Boston campus. But she also maintains that university rules are designed to keep women in low positions.

Dr. Salzman has filed complaints with the Massachusetts Commission against Discrimination and the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Her supporters plan to demand her reappointment.

N.E.S. Starting Afresh

For many people a new semester signals the beginning of many new things. Last semester over 300 UMass students began a commitment to tutor in Springfield through the Northern Educational Service. Unfortunately for many of the kids in Springfield a UMass student's commitment ends when the grades come out. This Sunday night at 7:00 in room 163 of the Campus Center NES will hold its first orientation of the semester where those students who are interested can continue their work. All new tutors will be welcomed. This meeting will be mainly to organize the tutors, answer any questions concerning the direction the program will be taking this semester.

The four centers where tutoring activities take place are Main St., Hancock St., Dwight St., and Riverview Housing project. Although other area colleges are involved with NES in Springfield, UMass provides over half of the tutors needed to keep the program running.

Many people hesitate to commit themselves to tutoring because they have no training or feel they are lacking in expertise in a particular field. Through a series of orientations the tutors will gain practical knowledge both in tutoring and in dealing with the situations they will meet. This will include an introduction to the urban school system. This is important because many of the tutors come from a suburban school and are totally unacquainted with the urban environment. No particular expertise is required - the only necessity is a willingness to spend some time with a kid who needs some help. This does not mean, however, that tutoring should be used to soothe the "liberal conscience". Kids are the first ones to notice honesty and sincerity or the lack of it. Ego trippers need not apply.

There is a wide range of age groups to be tutored, from first grade through high school. Almost any subject can be tutored. Students are matched up as close as possible to their preference in age and subject. There are also a lot of possibilities for those students who want to work in arts and crafts or arrange a special project or trip for a group of kids. Most of the centers have a day set aside for arts and crafts once a week and the center coordinators are glad to get any help they can.

The UMass branch of NES is coordinated in room 105 of the Campus Center. There are books and games that can be used in tutoring and also reference books covering such subjects as tutoring, education, and the urban school. These can be used mainly as background material for the tutors.

Tutors can receive 20 modules of credit by attending the orientation sessions and tutoring. The credit for tutoring this past semester will appear on next semester's grade cards. A list of those receiving credit will be posted on the office door.

Tatum To Speak On Draft Matters

Arlo Tatum, one of the nation's foremost experts on the draft and director of the Central Committee for Conscientious Objectors, will speak in the Ballroom tonight at 8:00 p.m. His topic will be "What's Up with the Draft?"

In addition to his work with CCCO, Mr. Tatus is a frequent lecturer on the draft, has authored the Handbook for Conscientious Objectors and co-authored Guide to the Draft, and has been a long-time opponent of compulsory military service.

Mr. Tatum will cover such subjects as the lottery, the new form for conscientious objectors, deferments and other alternatives to the draft, the Extended Priority Selection Group, and the likelihood for inductions this year. He will also speak about efforts to repeal the draft, having just left a meeting of the National Council to Repeal the Draft in Washington, D.C.

Following his address, there will be an opportunity for questions from the audience.

The address is sponsored by Draft Counseling Services, United Christian Foundation, and the Student Senate Social Action Committee. It is open to the public without charge.

On Friday morning, Mr. Tatum will hold a special seminar for draft counselors to give them up-to-date information on changes in Selective Service regulations and practice, and to provide specific counseling advice and assistance. This seminar will be open to draft counselors only, in 174-176 CC, from 9:00 a.m. to noon. For further information, contact Draft Counseling Services in 923 Campus Center, or call 545-0813.

Mr. Tatum will also be speaking at Amherst College's Converse Hall on Sunday evening at 8:30 p.m. His address there will also be open to the public.

Rev. Daniel Berrigan Granted Parole, Philip's Status Unsure

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Rev. Daniel Berrigan, convicted in the Catonsville draft-board raid, was granted parole Wednesday by the U.S. Board of Parole, chairman George J. Reed announced.

The decision followed a hearing to consider new information presented on Fr. Berrigan's behalf, including details concerning his poor health.

Daniel Berrigan, who reportedly had an adverse reaction to novocain while undergoing dental treatment, was hospitalized for about a week last summer as a result. He also is said to suffer from ulcers and a hernia.

Jim Noonan, leader of the Committee of Conscience in support of the Berrigans, said a vigil planned for Wednesday night at the main prison gate to demonstrate for the parole of Daniel Berrigan would still be held.

"Instead of a service hoping for his release it will be turned into a celebration...," he said.

"We feel it is something that certainly should have happened sooner not only because of his health but because we felt he was being held as a political prisoner."

Berrigan was sentenced to three years imprisonment for destruction of draft records at Catonsville, Md., and began serving his sentence Aug. 11, 1970.

He had been scheduled to be released Nov. 23, 1972.

Daniel Berrigan and his brother Philip, were denied parole last July. In November they instituted a suit to get a new parole hearing.

Both have been serving sentences at the prison after being convicted of destroying draft records in Catonsville, Md.

Philip Berrigan went on trial Monday in Harrisburg, Pa., with six other persons on charges of conspiring to kidnap presidential aide Henry A. Kissinger, to blow up heating tunnels in federal buildings in Washington and to raid military draft boards along the East Coast.

Besides Berrigan, 47, the others on trial are Eqbal Ahmad, 41, a Pakistani scholar; Sister Elizabeth McAlister, 32, a nun on leave from Marymount College in Tarrytown, N.Y.; the Revs. Neil McLaughlin, 31, and Joseph Wenderoth, 36, both priests from Baltimore; Anthony Scoblick, 31, Baltimore, a former Josephite priest, and his wife, Mary, 33, a former nun.

The Berrigans in a four-page complaint petitioned that the July 19 proceedings before a federal parole board be voided, that they be given a new hearing and that the reasons behind any new decision be stated on the record.

They charged that the parole board violated their constitutional rights of due process of law and protection from cruel and unusual punishment.

No information was immediately available on a change in the status of Philip Berrigan's request for parole.

Hanoi Balks At Nixon's Fine Print

WASHINGTON (AP) — Henry A. Kissinger said Wednesday Hanoi has balked at President Nixon's Vietnam peace proposals on two counts: The fine print on blueprints for a U.S. withdrawal and the election of a new Saigon government.

Kissinger, who was Nixon's clandestine go-between in 12 just-disclosed secret Paris conferences with key figures from Hanoi, said at a rare news conference he still hopes for a negotiating breakthrough.

He called the President's eight-point proposal a flexible one, not a take-it-or-leave-it proposition.

The President's far-traveled assistant for National Security Affairs said Nixon, by publicizing 26 months of secret negotiations in an address to the nation Tuesday night may spur North Vietnam to resume talks "on a somewhat more urgent basis."

Nixon unfolded a peace offer that includes an Indochina cease-fire, withdrawal of American forces and release of war prisoners, new elections in the South with the Viet Cong participating, and resignation of the Saigon government a month before the internationally supervised balloting.

Under the Nixon plan, all these developments would take place within six months after a Washington-Hanoi agreement.

The basics of the proposal have been in Hanoi's hands since October, Nixon said, but Hanoi has given no response.

Radio Hanoi, in a quick response to the President's address, said it contained nothing new and insisted that the U.S. position has "not changed in any way."

But the broadcast stopped short of rejecting the chief executive's proposal. The same was true of similar denunciations voiced in Paris by Hanoi negotiators.

Elsewhere internationally, the response to Nixon's disclosures found the Communist nations generally disapproving and U.S. allies hopeful although not necessarily confident.

On the domestic scene, comment from Congress members tended to follow party lines but with the Democratic presidential aspirants in the Senate most critical.

For example, Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota, the 1968 Democratic nominee and an aspirant again this year, complained that Nixon's proposals do not offer a precise date for withdrawal of U.S. forces in return for release of U.S. prisoners.

Similarly, he said the plan for South Vietnamese elections "if it were coupled with a withdrawal date could present a strong possibility of breaking the deadlock."

On the other hand, Sen. Jacob K Javits, R-N.Y., said Nixon's disclosure of the administration prolonged secret peace efforts has dealt a lethal blow to the Democrats' hopes of winning the presidency this year.

He said Nixon's move has virtually "sprung a trap" on Democratic who have asserted that the administration has done nothing to end the war.

But Kissinger said Washington and Hanoi remain apart on specific terms of a U.S. withdrawal and ways to establish a new government in Saigon.

The North Vietnamese, he said, want Nixon to agree to withdraw all American forces by a fixed date and, in addition, remove all equipment and supplies-even items already in the hands of the South Vietnamese army-as well as promising to end all U.S. aid to Saigon.

Kissinger said cutting off aid and removing equipment from an ally would be patently unfair inasmuch as, by his estimate, Hanoi receives $800 million to $1 billion in annual aid from its friends.

The security affairs adviser pictured Hanoi as insisting that the United States directly overthrow the government of President Nguyen Van Thieu or do so indirectly by stripping him of military and economic aid.

Besides expressing a hope that Nixon's public disclosure of secret talks may spur new negotiations, Kissinger offered a hopeful appraisal of a Communist offensive that apparently is developing in Indochina.

"We believe that we can contain the offensive," said Kissinger, "and it is even possible, maybe even probable that the reason they make the offensive is as a prelude to a subsequent negotiation."

Kissinger, who had 12 secret meetings in Paris with top representatives of North Vietnam, said that in most cases he flew by military aircraft to small American bases in Europe, then transferred once or twice to other aircraft which took him to "a little-used air field" near the French capital.

He said he kept out of sight by staying on the outskirts of Paris and meeting at remote sites which he said were chosen by the Communist negotiators.

Kissinger said he did not want to go into other details on his methods of getting to Paris, and moving around in France without detection because "we may want to do it again."

In Brief...

Men Disrupt Russian Show

TORRINGTON, Conn. (AP) — Four men were arrested during a performance of the U.S.S.R.'s Osipov Balaliaka Orchestra at the Warner Theatre here Wednesday night, after two small bottles of ammonia were uncapped and rolled down the floor.

One woman was treated at a hospital after inhaling the fumes, police said.

NAFSC Says War Increasing

BOSTON (AP) — The National American Friends Service Committee said it would release a study today showing that the war in Southeast Asia is not winding down but instead being fought with more sophisticated weapons.

According to a spokesman for the committee, the report said that "...instead of a ground war with American troops and casualties, Nixon is fighting an automated air war with American planes and bombs. He says he is winding down the war, but he is only making it less visible."

Irving Says Hughes Got Money

NEW YORK (AP) — Author Clifford Irving arrived from Spain on Wednesday and reiterated that he personally handed Howard R. Hughes a $275,000 check for the billionaire's autobiography. Irving said Hughes replied: "Thanks."

But Irving, arriving at Kennedy Airport with his wife, declined to be questioned further, saying he had lost his voice in talking with reporters in Spain.

N. Viets Term Speech 'Political Maneuver'

PARIS (AP) — The North Vietnamese have dismissed President Nixon's Indochina speech as a political maneuver and claimed he broke a promise by disclosing secret talks between Henry Kissinger and the Communist delegation to the Paris peace talks.

Initial Soviet reaction to the Tuesday night speech was negative, but the non-Communist world's response was generally favorable. Although some U.S. allies in Asia were cautious, there were expressions of hope that the plan would lead to settlement of the war.

The North Vietnamese delegation's angry reaction Wednesday to Nixon's address followed an unfavorable comment by the North Vietnamese radio. It said there was "nothing new" in Nixon's plan for setting a U.S. troop withdrawal deadline and new South Vietnamese elections in return for release of U.S. prisoners of war.

But neither the statement nor the North Vietnamese broadcast rejected the proposals.

Moscow's regular evening radio news program Wednesday said it "contains not a word on readiness of the United States" to withdraw its military units-including air and naval forces-from the other countries of Indochina.

According to the Nixon plan text released by the White House, "withdrawal of outside forces from Indochina" would be one matter subject to international supervision.

The Moscow announcer said the statement indicates "the United States intends to attempt to keep in power the pro-American regime in Saigon." He predicted that Washington would approach the Paris peace talks "from a position of force and insist on unconditional acceptance of the plan."

Soviet Union Proposes European Arms Cutback

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — The Soviet Union and its allies proposed Wednesday a cutback in the armed might of the East and West in Europe-home armies as well as foreign forces.

This came out of a two-day summit meeting of the Communist Warsaw Pact-the defense organization of the Soviet Union, Poland, East Germany, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Romania and Bulgaria.

A statement at the end of the meeting said: "It would be in the interests of strengthening European security to arrive at an agreement on the reduction of armed forces and armaments in Europe."

It added that negotiations on troop reductions "cannot be the exclusive matter of the existing military-political groupings in Europe."

The Soviet bloc proposal suggested reductions in both home armies and military forces on foreign soil. The latter would include U.S. troops in Western Europe and Soviet troops in Eastern Europe.

The West also has proposed mutual East-West cutbacks and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization has proposed that its former secretary general, Manlio Brosio of Italy, go to Moscow to begin discussions.

The Soviet Union, however, has never replied to the proposal for talks with Brosio.

The form for negotiating of mutual force reductions would have to be worked out, the Prague statement said. It advocated an all-European security conference by the end of this year.

The declaration said talks in Helsinki in preparation for the conference, proposed by Finland, should be started as soon as possible.

The Warsaw Pack countries have already chosen their delegates for such talks, they declared.

Kennedy Hits England

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., said today the strife in Northern Ireland will not stop until the British quit arresting dissident Catholics without due process of law.

"There can be no peace until there is an end to the policy of internment," he said.

He also renewed his call for a complete withdrawal of British troops. But that shouldn't happen, he said, until some sort of Protestant-Catholic police force is in operation to replace them.

Kicking off a lobbying effort by about 250 cheering members of the Americans Committee for Ulster Justice, Kennedy said:

"The presence of British troops just adds to the problem."

The Ulster group seeks to offset what their leaders say is a one-sided presentation given to congressmen by the U.S. State Department.

Federal Agency Says Noise Limits Needed

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Environmental Protection Agency said Wednesday the federal government should establish noise limits on aircraft and other transportation equipment, construction equipment and internal combustion engines.

It was learned also Wednesday that the EPA is drafting plans to broaden the sale of lead-free gasoline.

In a report to Congress, EPA said the technology already is available to control most forms of noise but is not being applied because of "inadequate social, economic, or governmental pressures for noise abatement."

EPA said noise already is having a harmful effect on the public and will get worse unless action is taken.

"Whereas noise levels sufficient to induce some degree of hearing loss were once confined mainly to factories and occupational situation," the report said, "noise levels approaching such intensity and duration are today being recorded on city streets and, in some cases, in and around the home."

Meanwhile, the EPA is drafting regulations to require the sale of unleaded gasoline at all large filling stations by the middle of 1974, a spokesman said Wednesday.

The EPA released a consultant's findings that lead-free gas is essential to meet 1975 and 1976 clean-air standards with automobile antipollution devices now being tested.

The report estimated auto antipollution devices might add anywhere from $229 to $388 in new equipment costs per vehicle, and car owners would pay a $56 to $109 per year extra in maintenance and operating costs, largely due to lower mileage per gallon.

EPA has authority to limit or ban lead in gasoline under the 1970 Clean Air Act but its proposed regulations still must be reviewed by the White House Office of Management and Budget.

Legislation to give EPA authority for noise control activities is currently pending in Congress.

EPA said its studies and public hearings in eight cities lead to "one over-riding conclusion: There is a need for improved and comprehensive efforts at all levels of government for environmental noise control."

Senate Passes Equal Employment Amendment

WASHINGTON (AP)-By a 48-46 vote, civil rights forces squeaked to a victory Wednesday in a Senate fight over enforcement of equal employment legislation.

The outcome was just the reverse of what happened earlier in the House, leaving the final verdict in doubt.

The bill before the Senate, still a long way from passage, would confer authority on the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to issue cease-and-desist orders when it decides there has been discrimination based on race, sex or religion.

For the second time, the Senate rejected an amendment by Sen. Peter H. Dominick, (R-Colo.,) to strike out this authority and to require instead that the EEOC bring suits in the federal courts to enforce its findings.

The Senate first defeated Dominick's amendment Monday by a 43-41 vote, but two hours later a motion to reconsider was adopted 40-39.

Wednesday, foes of the amendment immediately nailed down their victory with a 54-39 vote tabling and thus killing a motion to reconsider.

On the Senate's showdown vote, 26 Republicans and 20 Democrats-almost all of them Southerners-supported Dominick's amendment. Voting against it were 31 Democrats and 17 Republicans, including GOP Leader Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania.

The House took no action after the Senate passed a similar bill two years ago, but the situation is different now because the House already has passed legislation of its own.

The House, by the narrow margin of 202-197, voted for enforcement through the courts rather than empowering the EEOC to issue cease-and-desist orders.

This and many other differences will have to be ironed out by a conference committee if a bill is to receive final Congressional approval.

The Student Senate will discuss what action should be taken regarding the Student Educational Service (SES notes) when it meets in special session tonight at 6:30 in the council chambers in the Student Union.

Skip Olmstead, Student Senate treasurer has announced that the Senate plans to take over management of SES. He said SES offers a useful service, provides student employment and has tentative backing from the administration. He urges senators to attend the meeting.

Dangerous Cargo May Hit Mass. Coast

WILMINGTON, Del. (AP)-Dupont Co. officials say they have alerted United States and Canadian authorities that 170 drums-containing a noxious, flammable fuel residue-could wash ashore north of Cape Cod.

They had been carried as deck cargo on a Brazilian ship and were washed overboard in a violent storm in the North Atlantic last month, according to Jim Reynolds, Dupont public relations manager.

"We're afraid someone might find the drums on shore and come in contact with the residue of the anti-knock fuel compound," Reynolds said Tuesday. "It could cause a serious burn.

The ecological threat is slight by comparison, he said.

The Coast Guard from Martha's Vineyard north into Canada had been notified to be on the lookout for the drums, as had the Canadian Coast Guard, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, state police in several U.S. seacoast states, and coastal and fishing interests.

"The drums are gray and carry the Dupont name," said Reynolds. "They are about the same size as a standard 55-gallon oil drum, but are much heavier, and weigh 140 pounds when empty.

Dupont shipped a load of the anti-knock fuel compound to Brazil in December, Reynolds said. When the fuel was unloaded in a refinery there, the empty drums were put back onto the ship for a return voyage to America.

"The Marcos Souza Dantas was returning to Philadelphia with an intermediate stop in Montreal when on Dec. 5 they hit a storm with 30 foot waves," Reynolds said.

"The skipper cabled the Brazilian owners to tell them of the loss of about 100 drums," he said, "but no one thought to inform us."

"On the 24th of December, they hit another storm about 100 miles southeast of Nova Scotia, with the loss of about 70 more drums," he added.

"We're asking anyone sighting one of the barrels to call the Dupont Co. collect at 302-774-7500," he said.

I.R.A. Bombs Police Station

BELFAST (AP)-Guerrilla bomb-throwers blasted a dozen targets across Northern Ireland on Wednesday. The lone fatality was believed to be one of the guerrillas.

Peter McNulty, 47, was blown to pieces during a bombing raid on the Castlewellan police station a few miles from the home of Prime Minister Brian Faulkner, police said.

A second man was seriously wounded when two bombs apparently exploded prematurely.

The two men were believed to be members of the outlawed Irish Republican Army.

Two more bombs wrecked a nearby telephone exchange and an agricultural aid station in the area about 20 miles south of Belfast. No one was hurt.

Two persons on a Belfast street were cut by flying glass when an explosion wrecked an antique shop. A bomb weighing up to 100 pounds ripped through a Belfast telephone exchange. Passers-by were treated for shock.

Other bombs demolished part of the Newtonabbey town hall near Belfast, damaged a general store at Newton Hamilton and exploded in rapid succession in five buildings in the border town of Newry. One of the Newry targets was a new income office built to replace one destroyed earlier by a bomb.

No injuries were reported in these other bombings.

Campus-Free College Spreading In Country

Campus-Free College, a new nationwide institution for people who want to get their college education outside the usual pattern of campus resources, schedules, and requirements, is now operating in 100 cities and towns across the U.S. and Canada. Not a correspondent school, CFC is a non-profit, non-residential college which features person-to-person planning, guidance, and learning built around each student's own goals, schedule, skills, and budget.

The key to CFC's operation is the local services provided by more than 150 experienced "Program Advisors," who have been chosen from among outstanding teachers, artists, and other professionals. CFC students do their learning in whatever locations are most convenient, paying directly for their instruction to the people, programs, or institutions they work with. Because the college is not limited to the resources of any single campus, a wide variety of learning resources not usually available to college students can be made available through a student's advisor.

Campus-Free College aims to be an alternative to conventional institutions which can help each student get the best learning he can, in ways most suited to his values, goals, and general life situation. And by choosing Program Advisors carefully, the college expects to offer non-residential education of a quality equal to that of the best residential colleges.

Because CFC is not tied to the academic calendar of a campus, its services are available on a year-around basis, and students may enroll at the beginning of any month. In addition to the cost of instruction, the college charges a yearly fee to cover the cost of advising, records-keeping, information-sharing, and approving academic work. The college's Academic Council, a group of educators experienced in the evaluation of both traditional and non-traditional study, approves all student work and credits it toward degrees.

General information about Campus-Free College, and a free directory of CFC's nationwide resources, may be obtained from the administrative offices in Arlington, Mass. 02174.

JOE II Conference Explained

The JOE II Conference has had a variety of positive and negative publicity. The people involved in the JOE thing realistically do not have time to settle all accounts. The best that can be done is to lay a few options and statements on the line.

The JOE II Conference has two goals. They are the following: the staff and volunteers of the JOE II Conference want to move as many institutionalized youth out of a stifling setting into viable community based settings as possible. This is being done through the student advocate-Department of Youth Services group leader structure were youth, advocate, and DYS staff negotiate for a productive setting. The remaining goal was to close the many youth institutions that lay seeds of anti-social behavior which many of us see as a threat to our civilized society.

The point is that nearly 100 college students have become involved in an experiment in human potential. Discovering it in another and taking the responsibility in developing what lies beneath the skin. Therefore, the people of JOE II make this invitation to the university community.

Anyone wishing to see and discover for themselves what JOE II is all about a request for you--the curious and the interested--to invite a youth and his or her advocate home to dinner is made. Too much speculation is made about many things to let the JOE II Conference disappear in a few weeks with unanswered questions on the lips of the Commonwealth's citizens. Arrangements can be made through the JOE II answering service. The number is 256-8681. All one has to do is leave your name, address (and phone number) and time of invitation. A member of the JOE II staff will be in touch to make all the final arrangements.

SDS Still Breathing

The papers say SDS is dead. They wish! Despite the death notices more than 1000 will attend the SDS National Convention against Racism, March 30 - April 2, at Lowell Lecture Hall, Harvard University. (Some of the death notices are not merely on paper. Harvard, for example, tried to kill the Convention by denying facilities. When SDS launched a petition campaign, they backed down and gave in.) Last year's SDS Convention of over 1000 led to the launching of numerous struggles on campuses all across the country and several large national demonstrations to fight racist unemployment, welfare cuts, and the War in SE Asia.

This year SDS has led struggles against pushers of racist ideology such as Herrnstein at Harvard and Shockley at Stanford. In LA and Boston SDS is leading fights against administrations which boastfully push racist policies. In Chicago SDS has joined with welfare mothers and others to fight racist welfare cuts. In NY starting Monday, Jan. 24 SDS will launch a city-wide campaign aimed at defeating Rockefeller's attempt to replace the free city university system with a tuition-charging state system. At Northeastern University in Boston, SDS led a movement of workers and students which successfully prevented racist Attny. Gen. Mitchell from dedicating the new Police Science building.

Many SDSers feel that a key focus of the Convention should be the launching of a national campaign on the scale of the anti-war movement to fight the upsurge of racism on campus, be it racist textbooks, professors, or administrators and their policies. SDS sees allying both students and working people in common struggle around common interests as the most effective way to achieve progressive social change in America. We invite everyone-- in school and out--to attend the Convention and build the fight against racism.

Tyleration Cheese Cake

By TONY GRANITE

CHEESECAKE of John Tyler Community College, Chester, Va., is reported as "the student body of the month."

Tyleration, the student newspaper, displays the chosen female forms on page one, with pictures designated as "Faces and Legs."

Good clean sport, that.

HEADLINE OF THE WEEK comes from The Northern Iowan of the University of the same name: "Noted Tooter Heads UNI's First Trumpet Festival."

Which is a good start, any way you look at it.

THE NON-LETTER-WRITING population of the John Jay College of Criminal Justice in New York City has been chided by the frustrated editors of Lex, the campus newspaper.

A revised version of their letters column appeared under the title, "Letters FROM the Editors." And the subhead read: "To the Students: Since you did not bother to write to us, this issue, the Editors of Lex are taking the liberty of writing to you. With all our love, the Editors."

And there followed four letters. The Editor-in-Chief wrote of his amazement at how little respect there is for his position. The Art Editor lamented the lack of appreciation for his cartoons. A potpourri column by the potpourri columnist. And a "let's fight apathy" letter by an associate editor.

They gave the student body a taste of their own medicine.

WHAT A NICE THING FOR A HOUSING OFFICE TO DO...is what they're saying at Central Washington State. Their Campus Crier newspaper tells that the Housing Office is running vans to pick up students arriving after three-day weekends at the local Greyhound Terminal, where the only transportation to the campus is by taxi.

The free vans operate between 2 p.m. and 11 p.m. on Sundays and Mondays of long weekends. After the Thanksgiving hiatus, 142 students used the vans.

FREE FOOD FOR THE FAMISHED students of Mankato State was reported in a recent Reporter.

Seems that a restaurant called Antonio's celebrated a Student Appreciation Day to "show students how necessary they are to the town's economy."

For one entire day, Antonio's served up free rigatoni, bread, pizza and beverages.

The town and gown has never fit better, they say.

MEANTIME, at Washington State, the Daily Evergreen reports that tape decks are the prime targets of auto thieves who break into cars on the campus parking lots. A total of 25 such thefts were recorded for the Fall semester.

APPROVAL FOR OFF-CAMPUS HOUSING is being phased out at Illinois State, according to The Vidette newspaper there. Under the present system, the University is a de facto third party to housing agreements between students and householders.

Besides, the on-campus residences halls have caught up with demand, so that a 96 percent occupancy must be maintained.

DO-IT-YOURSELF ABORTION KITS went on sale at UCal-Riverside, according to a banner head in a recent edition of The Highlander newspaper.

An enterprising salesman set up a booth for uterine sounds used to induce abortions, during a Market Day sponsored by the Campus Activities Office.

"They're only a dollar and it's cheaper than a doctor's office. They work," he is reported to have said. "Any woman stupid enough to use them deserves them."

The salesman was subsequently rousted by the local gendarmes, but freed without charges because of local confusion about the legality of the sale of such devices.

Business Is Business

Small doses of business knowledge have been given to social agencies and civic organizations in New England by college students whose business is business and whose interest is cities.

Graduate students taking Business Administration 799 at UMass get to put some of their knowledge of the business world to work in social and civic organizations which welcome the volunteer service. They help and learn.

One student who worked in a social agency last summer made these comments in her final report to Prof. Robert H. Plattner, who directed the course.

She said, "...many problems crop up that we, fresh out of the classroom are trained to notice and analyze--while the agency regulars are either too busy to notice; or they never realize the significance of the symptoms."

And, "One personal gain that I received after having worked in the ghetto is that I am no longer afraid of a multitude of black people. They no longer look alike to me, which used to be a tendency in a crowd, even though I had many individual friends among them."

Business Administration 799 was offered in a new manner last summer. Students who find the course work satisfies a primary interest may decide to study for the new master's degree in urban and regional management, offered by the UMass School of Business Administration and directed by Prof. Plattner. The graduate degree program began last fall, though the School has for several years offered undergraduate students a concentration in urban and regional studies.

Says Prof. Plattner, "More and more today, business schools and business firms are finding that their talents are in demand to tackle urban problems and help manage urban organizations."

A student assigned to a civic organization was charged with the responsibility of evaluating a plan for the economic development of a shopping area. He reported, "The particular work project that I was supposed to be working on was a relative failure, since it never got off the ground until I was ready to leave. This was the result of a great deal of bureaucratic haggling."

Another, working for a town government, helped convert employee benefits to percentages of annual pay--to facilitate collective bargaining between the town and the employees. In his report, he said, "There was no organized mass of payroll data available. The men got sick and took days off at the discretion of the various foremen, and no record was kept of the days off. The same was the case with vacations and other benefits... I was surprised to find so much disorganization and lack of policy...The secret behind the fact that the town seems to function well is decentralized responsibility."

One student worked with a vocational rehabilitation office in one of the New England states. He found one of the office's major problems in operating effectively was a budgetary one. His report said, "The financial problem is aggravated by a cumbersome state budgeting system utilizing encumbrances to control the allocation of funds...It is quite evident that under the present system there is every incentive to encumber more funds than are actually required. This procedure is in direct conflict with the organization's goal of aiding the greatest number of people with the resources available by unnecessarily tying up funds, thereby limiting the number of people the organization can obligate itself to assist."

Room To Move

D.A. Callahan On Campus

On Saturday, February 5, at 2:00 P.M. in Thompson 102, Room To Move will be sponsoring a panel discussion revolving around the use of undercover narcotics agents. The members of the panel will be District Attorney Callahan, Judge Raymond Cross, Dean William Field, Lee Sandwen, E.T. Mellor (from the Sylvan Area Human Relations Center).

The issues which will be dealt with will include: should undercover narcotics agents be used on the University campus; what are their objectives and what effects do they achieve on the drug traffic and on the community as a whole; what rights should the community have in the decision-making process of whether or not undercover agents should be used to control drug traffic; what other means of drug control are available and how would they compare; what kind of community control would be possible and effective; the value of enforcing victimless crimes; should drugs be legalized and what is the scope of the drug scene here on campus. The format of the discussion will be fairly unstructured and questions from the floor will be encouraged.

There has been some confusion as to whether the student body as a whole endorses the use of undercover agents. The Student Senate as the elected representative body of the students has clearly taken a negative stand. The District Attorney, on the other hand, has stated at several occasions that he feels that the student body is in favor of the use of undercover agents.

In order to gather a little more evidence prior to the panel discussion, Room To Move is conducting a ballot survey to allow students to respond to this issue. The only way this survey will have any significance is if a large number of people vote. Both the Student Senate and the District Attorney have expressed an opinion as to where the student body stands. Both the Student Senate and the District Attorney are elected officials. Due to the nature of politics a large vote on this ballot night have an effect even beyond the use or scope of the panel discussion.

Ballot boxes will be set up at the Collegian dispersal centers in the Campus Center, Student Union and all of the dining commons. Please respond. We at Room To Move hope that everyone will take the time to vote and that those of you who are interested will be at the panel discussion.

Taxi Bills Paid By Welfare

BOSTON (AP)-State Auditor Thaddeus Buczko today disclosed taxi payments for welfare recipients that, in one case, totalled more than $2,600.

In a report on an audit of the Greater Boston regional office of the Welfare Department, Buczko included what he said was an analysis of payments to two taxi companies by the Summerville finance unit covering the period from Jan. 1, 1971, to Dec. 9, 1971.

In the Aid to Families with Dependent Children category, Buczko cited payments of $2,622 over a 13-month period for one recipient; $1,781 over a ten-month period to another recipient; $856 over seven months to a third recipient, and $800 over a nine-month period to a fourth.

In the second case, involving $1,781, Buczko said the original signed authorization was for a single trip enabling the recipient to visit her husband at Westboro State Hospital.

However, Buczko said, the recipient went to the hospital on several occasions at $60 per round trip.

The first case, involving $2,622, provided trips to the Massachusetts Mental Health Center for one member of the family and trips to hospitals for another, Buczko said.

Buczko also said that the Greater Boston office has continued to authorize special needs payments for items forbidden by Welfare Commissioner Steven A. Minter when the flat grant system of payments went into effect.

The audit report also said that the "state auditor has found many over charges on drug bills," and that "welfare service offices do not check enough of their drug bills."

Nixon May Be It

Though no one quite wants to admit it, it is becoming increasingly evident that President Nixon will win his second term in office with ease, no matter who the Democratic Party sees fit to run against him.

The Democrats will challenge him on the issues presidential campaigns have always been centered around, foreign policy, economics, the budget. They will look for new angels and issues, and will strain to point out the mistakes Nixon has made in his four years in office. But one can't escape the feeling that it just won't work.

With his move towards a conciliation with China, and his Vietnam speech of two days ago, Nixon is well on his way towards pulling off two of the more important coups in recent American foreign policy. No matter how the North Vietnamese react to his peace proposals, Nixon has probably satisfied a large segment of the American population that he has done all he could feasibly do to end the war. If the North Vietnamese do reject his proposal, (which they probably will) he is left with the obvious recourse of reducing American forces in Vietnam to a number small enough not to offend the sensibilities of the average citizen.

As for China, no matter what his trip there produces, even if it is no more than mutual back slapping, the fact that he was there will be what counts come election time.

His administration foreign policy debacle on the Indian subcontinent will have only mild repercussions. Few Americans worry about what happens to a million or two Asians, (If we did we would have gotten out of Vietnam long ago and there would have been a bit more of an outcry while the Pakistanis were slaughtering hundreds of thousands of Bengalis.), and Nixon is a good enough of a politician to realize when he has made a mistake. We can probably expect some attempt at reconciliation with India in the future.

One the economic front, AFL-CIO leader George Meany is pretty pissed off at the administration, but it remains to see how much steam he can mount in his drive to toss Nixon out. Big business is probably pretty happy. Nixon's vaunted Pay and Price Boards have opened holes big enough to drive a truck through. The only area where he might have a problem is the high unemployment rate, but there are enough ways to twist and turn the economy to lower it in time for the elections.

The Democrats are going to have it tough. They can push ecology and bitch about the defense budget; but unless they come up with some concrete proposals that will top Nixon's, they might as well save their money and plan for '76.

What About The War?

By TOM MORIARTY

It's pretty difficult for most of us to remember exactly when we first heard about the war. We were probably between the ages of 7 and 11, during the Kennedy administration, when American advisors were sent in. Since then, an entire generation has grown up with the most brutal manifestation of American foreign policy in history.

It is also the most hated war in U.S. history. It gave rise to a continuously growing antiwar movement the likes of which this country has never seen. That movement reversed the thinking of an entire nation, to the point of majority support for ending the war. Why does the war go on?

It's a perplexing question. The White House has been inhabited by "peace candidates" since 1964. Innumerable doves have been elected to both houses of congress, while still others have hatched within those hallowed chambers. The draft has been bitterly fought for years. Deserters and AWOLs reach unprecedented numbers. What little discipline existed within our conscript army has disintegrated. The antiwar movement brought a million people into the streets on April 24th, 1971 to demand immediate, total, and unconditional withdrawal. Antiwar sentiment has continually grown and has never been higher than at this time. The G.I.'s don't want the war. The American people don't want the war. The war goes on.

A mistake! It's all a horrible mistake they tell us. How many times have you heard the word "mistake" applied to the war by our democratically-elected representatives? From what we know then, the United States, the richest, most powerful and advanced country the world has ever known, committed a 20-year-five-administration $100,000,000,000 mistake. I think they expect us to believe that.

Nixon could barely be heard, over the 1000 bombing sorties flown between Dec. 26 and Dec. 30, shouting 'the war is winding down'; yet he expects to be reelected. According to the Center for International Studies at Cornell University, "By the end of this year (1971), the Nixon administration will have deployed in 3 years as much bomb tonnage as the Johnson administration did in 5." Nixon certainly did have 'a plan'. And now we know why it was so secret.

As another presidential election approaches, the political sky darkens, thunderous criticism roars, and the pent-up moral outrage of years bursts in the sky, illuminating that long sought messiah, that guardian of life and liberty, that Man of the People, Edmund Muskie !...no...McCloskey!...wait a minute...McGovern !...no,...no... Humphrey !...Jackson ?...how 'bout McCarthy? The truth is that each and every one of the above named politicians must approach the American people with a "don't let my past record fool you" attitude. But there's something else about these men that ties in with Nixon's bid for reelection. That is that their vote-grubbing promises and campaign strategy tell you to wait. Wait until November 1972. Wait until inauguration day 1973. Then wait until "negotiations" begin on P.O.W. release, and then wait some more. None speak for immediate withdrawal. None actively support antiwar demonstrations. All are content to allow the death and destruction to continue.

An important question with regard to the above mentioned presidential candidates is whether they have led or followed the antiwar movement. What type of commitment have they shown us in the past? Muskie apologizes for his record on the war, asks our forgiveness, indicates that we may signify that forgiveness by marking the correct name on the ballot, and promises to do better in the future. McGovern, who prides himself on his long-standing struggle against the war, explains to us that due to American parliamentary procedure and block form "defense" bills, he has simply had to vote sufficient funds to continue the slaughter, year after year after year. Poor George. And if he didn't have enough problems, what with voting in favor of a four year continuation of the draft, and against repealing the Gulf of Tonkin resolution, Daniel Ellsberg had the gaul to turn over to him the Pentagon Papers and ask that George release them. We can all rest assured that there were tears in McGovern's eyes when he sadly told Ellsberg, no dice. Humphrey is still trying to shed the stigma of his participation in the Johnson administration and the scandal of Chicago '68. His agreement, early in the Nixon administration, with the phased withdrawal plan hasn't helped his image. Jackson, the only avowed hawk, still hasn't gotten the message. A not so clean Gene McCarthy just can't get himself to be taken seriously - a real must for presidential contenders. It must have something to do with his endorsement of Humphrey following the '68 Democratic convention. And McCloskey, the old Commie fighter, has the same problem as all the others with his voting record on the war. Strangely enough, he has the same solution; wait 'til he's president. Wait. Wait.

Barring unforeseen circumstances, either Richard Nixon or one of those men will be elected president in November. Perhaps you are planning to vote for one of them. But what about the war between now and November? What about after November? Do we abandon the people of Southeast Asia and the GI's there to the escalated bombing and continuing war policy of Richard Nixon? Are the promises of another group of "peace candidates" going to take us off the streets? To these questions we answer a resounding no. We've been lied to too many times for that.

Few people trust Richard Nixon. Most agree that his phased ground troop withdrawals are a result of political pressure. And where does that political pressure originate? From the Democratic party, a party that shares equal guilt for the war? Certainly not. The politicians of both parties, despite their occasional rhetoric, have tailended the antiwar movement from the start. That political pressure emanates from the American people, overwhelmingly opposed to the war. That opposition is manifested in the facts that antiwar sentiment now dominates the country, forces Nixon to conceal his war aims, forces Democrats and Republicans to fight among themselves for the "most committed dove" award, and periodically rallies the American people to demonstrate independently, in the streets, for immediate, total, and unconditional withdrawal.

The war is not over. The facts show that Richard Nixon is pursuing a military victory. Nearly 140,000 U.S. troops are in Southeast Asia now. The already massive bombing has been escalated, from bases in South Vietnam, Thailand, and aircraft carriers off the coast. Even if his latest withdrawal schedule is kept, 70,000 GI's will still be there in May, more than enough for his "residual force" and perpetual bombing. Nixon cynically uses American P.O.W.s as political pawns. His declarations that the war is winding down cannot stand up to examination. We can accept neither his explanations, nor the promises of others. As in the past, our strength lies in independent mobilization in the streets around the principled demand of immediate withdrawal.

Havana 'Si', Peking 'No'

WASHINGTON–Not everyone is thrilled with President Nixon's visit to China next month. My friend MacGonnacky believes Mr. Nixon should go to Havana first.

"The way I see it," MacGonnacky said, "the President is going to a Communist country 4,000 miles away when it would be much easier for him, if he really wants to see a Communist country, to hop over from Key Biscayne to Cuba in a helicopter. It would save this country an awful lot of money."

"The President isn't going to the People's Republic of China just to see it. He has urgent business to discuss with Mao Tse-tung."

"That's another thing. How come we still refer to Castro's country as Communist Cuba and we now call Mao's country the People's Republic of China?"

"Because," I expalined patiently, "we're trying to build bridges between Red...oops...the People's Republic of China?"

"Why aren't we trying to build any bridges between Cuba and the United States?"

"Because Cuba is an outlaw, and it's exporting revolution around the world."

"What's the People's...oops...Red China doing?" MacGonnacky asked.

"China, though we may not agree with its philosophy, is a major power, and it's better to talk with them than eventually to fight them."

"Are you saying then that since Cuba is not a major power, it's better to fight them than to talk with them?"

"I'm not saying that at all. But you must remember that Cuba is a constant threat to us."

"I thought everyone agreed before Nixon announced his visit that China was the biggest threat to us."

"It was before, but now that President Nixon is going there, it's not as big a threat as it was before."

"Who are the biggest threats to the United States right now?" MacGonnacky demanded.

"Cuba, the Soviet Union and India."

"Well, if China is no longer a threat to us, why are we still building the ABM system to defend us against their missiles?"

"Because Canada is mad at us, and as long as we started building it we might as well finish it in case Trudeau gets any funny ideas."

MacGonnacky couldn't be convinced. "I still think Nixon should go to Cuba first and then work his way up to China. If he makes some gaffes negotiating with a Communist country, it might as well be a little one rather than a big one."

"It's too late," I said. "Nixon has his heart set on going to China. Besides, he'll get a lot more TV coverage going to Peking than he would if he went to Havana."

"Look, I don't care if Nixon wants to go to Peking, but it seems to me that it would be much more beneficial if he built a bridge to Cuba first. This country has done without Havana cigars for 10 years. What has China got to offer us that we can't get now in this country?"

"Cheap labor," I said. "If we can come to terms with Mao Tse-tung we could have 800 million people working for us, and we wouldn't have to work at all. Isn't that better than vintage Havanas?"

"I may be selfish," MacGonnacky said. "But I'd give up Nixon's trip to Peking for one good box of Monecristo cigars any day."

Letters To The Editor

Protection Of Our Peers

To the Editor:

I would like to make a short summary of the "Parking Fine" issue that made the Collegian during the end of December.

The General Court, the highest student court, decided in affect, that the present Parking System is equitable towards students as a group, and therefore, since university parking rules have been violated in the past, the student government should help in the prosecution of those who owe parking fines. I fundamentally disagree with their analysis and have attempted to discourage them from taking the actions they have.

Parking on campus is a mess and no one can entirely blame the Parking Office for it. On the other hand, I can hardly say the system is "fundamentally fair" when convenient spaces are allocated on a priority basis – a system where students as a "class" are given lowest priority in relation to ther campus groups (i.e. "staff", "faculty"). The Parking Office understands quite well that the priority system is the result of political relationships, not just intelligent "traffic flow".

But, the General Court has gone out of its way in its decision and in the Collegian to insist the present system is fair. I would hope that a large number of undergraduates would let them know through the Collegian that they're wrong. Few need protection of their "right" to park in "F" lot. The General Court, which publicly claimed "protection of our peers...our weightest responsibility", has let us all down.

Strange Phenomenon

To the Editor:

A strange phenomenon happened in the Blue Wall Cafeteria on Sunday, January 23rd. Two hundred hungry UMass students were fed free spaghetti dinners, courtesy of the University Counseling Center. This manna from heaven came about as a result of three quick-thinking counselors, Nancy Pike, Arlene Koweek, and Kit Voliva, who distributed the excess tickets purchased by the Counseling Center for the New Students Program. It is felt that this act of generosity should not go unnoticed.

Weight Problem

To the Editor:

The other day at Registration I was standing next to the girl who takes care of the Weight Room at WOPE on Monday through Thursday evenings, 7-9. She informed me that she had lost her job because the Weight Room would not be open this semester. I immediately recognized this closing down as typical treatment of women and especially women athletes on this campus. We have nothing. The men have every possible facility and comfort right at hand and you never see a facility closing down because it isn't used. They even have at least two whirlpools on campus, the women must get the permission of a Doctor in order to use the one in the Infirmary. Even then it is difficult to fit into their already tight schedule.

I demand, as a women and an athlete, that the weight room be reopened for the use of those who need it. I also demand that better facilities be extended to all athletes, so that we may all enjoy them. Lastly I demand that women athletes be treated other than as sub-humans. Women are people and deserve every facility that men-people get.

Blind Criticism?

To the Editor:

In an editorial (Blind Liberalism) written shortly before the Christmas vacation, David Volinn defined blind liberalism as "blind acceptance of radical or liberal viewpoints." I definitely agree that an attitude of blind liberalism as he defines it, does exist and is a problem, but instead of continuing on with what was potentially a good editorial, Mr. Volinn suddenly decided to support his point by presenting his two favorite gripes.

He described the using of a backpack as the "wearing of a backpack" which shows immediately that he is not going to be reasonable in presenting the picture. I have noticed that cyclists frequently use packs in order that both hands be free to steer the bicycle. I use a pack because it is the easiest way that I have yet discovered to carry the books, notebooks, etc. that are necessary for classes. I have noticed that many people do use backpacks, but I have to admire Mr. Volinn's exceptional powers of observation used to determine not only how many books are being carried, but that the people doing the "wearing" are "plastic members of the counterculture." That is as broad and ignorant a generalization as some of the ones that were created about hair length five years ago.

I have nothing to say about the practice of adopting characteristic accents because to the best of my knowledge, I have not met anyone who had done that, and I try to limit my criticism to areas that I know something about. I use a backpack because it protects the contents from rain; because it frees my hands to eat (while walking); because it allows me to keep my hands in my pockets when it is cold; and because it is the easiest way to carry any number of books or other things.

I resent being accused of trying to represent myself as a "radical-liberal vagabond..." or "uninhibited cross- country" hitchhiker (although I have used a backpack in hitchhiking across country instead of a Samsonite 3-suiter), when, in fact, I am simply making the transportation of materials to and from the University a little easier.

I agree with David Volinn that Blind Liberalism does exist–I wonder if there is such a thing as blind criticism?

Editorial Points

Now that the hullaballoo with registration and course changes is over, the coming of classes is kind of anti-climatic.

Have you noticed that the new library has recently been the subject of an intensive spray campaign by the builders? Although one observer suggested that it might be a waterproofing treatment for the bricks, one of our more serious-minded reporters investigated the situation more closely and came to some startling conclusions. It seems that the spray is actually an anti-gorilla substance and, according to a law passed in 1932, must be sprayed on every building above 25 floors.

Registration and course change day seemed kind of naked somehow with the usual deluge of throw away handouts and free information.

Although forced outdoors by the beginning of classes, many students no doubt took solace in the fact that after the first week or so is over they will be able to avoid the familiar freezing winds because they will have already discovered what work they will not be doing during the semester.

1972 Predictions

By JAN VILLANOVA

I predict Richard M. Nixon will be re-elected President partly because our nation's idea of a qualified person is one based on experience and seniority, not ability, and mostly because the anti-hero image is still very popular.

I predict most students will feel the apathetic atmosphere around them as they travel from on class to the next. I also predict once they are tucked into bed, the atmosphere will disappear.

I predict seat belts will still be unused for the simple reason they are a pain in the ass.

I predict at least one more leader who advocates non-violence will be murdered.

I predict that even if the construction men did punch out when they were supposed to, the new Fine Arts building would still fall behind schedule, only because nobody working labor ever tries 'killing a job'.

I predict the numbers eight and five will also become superstitious by reasons of association.

I predict the racial problem will again come second priority to things like no-fault auto insurance and what to do about junk mail.

I predict for each specie of life man destroys, his own chances of survival are increased, due to his technology. But we all know how it is after looking at just people all day.

I predict core requirements will remain mandatory and that meeting these requirements will remain optional. I refer you to the Official University Handbook, Chapter 10, "The Principles of Applied Paradox".

I predict babies will be born whether or not man understands why they are needed.

I predict more and more tests will be done on rabbits to see if the same tests will work on the monkies.

I predict American industry will increase it's factor of planned obsolescence by one year. This means if you are thinking of buying an item guaranteed for one year, your chances of actually seeing that item self-destruct are very slim; consequently, to rake in the profits and certainly to recapture your confidence, industry will need to ship the item before it is built, rather than store it for the usual one year. Regardless of how they do it, I cannot help predict a series of bluffs and counterbluffs, with the buyer still getting ripped off.

I predict the total rainfall will not exceed itself.

I predict that most students will pay their tuition fees on time and then two months later be forced to pay their traffic fines, or else be kicked out of school with the usual tuition refund.

Student Leaders Endorse Muskie

(Editor's Note--The editor of the DAILY COLLEGIAN, Richard C. Hanson, was approached by Senator Muskie's campaign organization to endorse him for the presidential candidacy. Mr. Hanson felt that "Muskie hasn't said anything definitive about anything that a President should be concerned with. I couldn't endorse a man on his looks and mannerisms alone, nor would I endorse him just because he is the strongest democratic candidate so far.")

Eleven Massachusetts students are among more than five hundred student leaders from across the country who today announced their support for Senator Edmund S. Muskie (D.-Maine) for President.

The eleven include the editor of the Boston College student newspaper and the student government presidents from ten Bay State colleges and universities: M.I.T., Brandeis, Holy Cross, Wellesley, Amherst, Boston State, Salem State, Williams, Massachusetts College of Art, and Nichols College.

The student endorsements, and the formation of a national student group backing Muskie, to be called Youth Coalition for Muskie, were announced by the Maine Senator at a press conference in Washington this morning (Wednesday, 11:30 a.m.)

"We believe that Senator Muskie is the best man to unite the Democratic Party and to defeat Richard Nixon in 1972," the students said in a statement released to newsmen.

The formation of Youth Coalition for Muskie followed a two-day conference of student organizers and months of preliminary work by Lanny J. Davis, national coordinator of the Muskie youth campaign.

The youth group already has affiliated committees at high schools and colleges in 39 states, including several in Massachusetts.

"Senator Muskie has won significant support among young people because of his strong stand for an end to the war in Vietnam and for the re-ordering of national priorities," Davis said today. "More importantly, Senator Muskie stands for the restoration of truth and honesty in government."

Doherty was in Washington this morning for the group's announcement. Also attending the press conference, and the conference of Youth Coalition organizers, were Richard Osborne, 20, and Sewall Arnald, 20, both of Tufts, YCM organizers in the 7th Congressional district, and Patricia Endel, 21 of Boston University, 9th district organizer.

Student Exchange In British Columbia

UMass has recently arranged an academic year student exchange program with the University of Victoria in British Columbia. Under this program a few UMass undergraduates will be accepted for study as juniors or seniors at the University of Victoria next year and will receive full academic credit towards their UMass degrees for courses successfully completed at Victoria. An equal number of students from the University of Victoria will study at the Amherst campus in 1972-73.

The University of Victoria is located in the outskirts of Victoria, a city of 175,000, capital of British Columbia, at the southeast tip of Vancouver Island. The city has great charm and a rather British atmosphere. The climate is temperate, similar to that of Seattle, and it seldom has snow in the winter. The modern, centralized campus overlooks the Puget Sound. The two nearest major cities, Vancouver and Seattle, are accessible by air or by ferry.

Faculties of Arts and Science, Education and Fine Arts. In addition to the usual course offerings in the humanities, in science, and in the social sciences, the Faculty of Arts and Science appears to offer a particularly wide variety of courses in the fields of English, marine biology and oceanography, Canadian history and psychology. The Faculty of Fine Arts offers courses in theater arts, visual arts, art history, and music, and is said to be particularly strong in drama. There are about 5,000 students at the University of Victoria.

Applicants for the program at the University of Victoria should have at least a 3.0 cumulative average. Students should plan to go during their junior or senior year and for the full academic year, not semester only. The program of study contemplated should fit into their degree program.

Tuition and fees at the University of Victoria are approximately the same as at the University of Massachusetts, and travel costs to the West Coast would be the only additional expense. A limited amount of financial aid may be available for travel costs. Students interested in applying for the program should contact Mrs. Barbara B. Burn, Director of International Programs, 239 Whitmore, as soon as possible for application forms.

Educational TV For Ed Majors

"Sesame Street it's not; but educational tv it is. And its audience of teachers may learn as much from it as the pre-schoolers watching "Sesame Street' learn about the alphabet, numbers, and the Cookie Monster.

In the past year and a half, about 100 of the graduate teaching assistants at UMass have watched what might be called "Tune In To Yourself." The teaching assistants saw themselves, on tape, teaching classes; and their reactions to the private-audience tv shows were varied.

Bob Kellner of Granby viewed his performance and then said, "I'm more confident and pleased with myself now that I've seen I'm doing what I wanted to do." Ms. Emily Hoffman, formerly of Newton, and also of Harvard, Mass., said, "Before the class I prepared very thoroughly, so I wouldn't be nervous. But looking at myself on tape, I'd say that I was nervous."

The taping service is part of a teaching Improvement Program begun about two years ago by UMass Graduate School Dean Mortimer H. Appley and Associate Dean Arthur C. Gentile.

Doing the taping are three graduate teaching assistants–Bill Delamarter, Terry Krumm, and Blair Stone. Their "teaching" is not in the classroom, but in the video-tape studio in the new Graduate Research Center on the UMass campus. By taping other graduate teaching assistants in the classroom, they give the classroom teachers a chance to learn about themselves in a special way. Says Blair Stone, "We want the teacher to see if he accomplishes what he wants to accomplish." The "performer" invites the video camera into his classroom and then goes to the studio to see himself on tape. He may also bring his class to see the tape.

One who did was Bob Kellner, an English major doctoral candidate who teaches a rhetoric class. He feels his class enjoyed the taping and would be willing to be taped again. And he feels neither he nor his students acted any differently because a camera was present.

But what were the benefits of having his classroom teaching taped? "In the classroom," Bob says, "I don't see the students' faces as I would like to." He saw these faces better on tape, and he also saw which students seemed to be "hiding in the back," not from the camera, but from the instructor. So, in future classes he has tried to "stop in the middle of my thoughts and try to look at the kids more carefully"–to better reach these students."

Bob invited his students to view the tape, and he thinks the teacher-student rapport in his classroom has improved since the viewing. The teaching graduate student enjoyed the taping on several levels. "Besides the pleasure of seeing yourself on television and besides seeing what idiosyncracies you have–the experience of performing is like taking your first airplane ride. It's quite exciting when you do it."

Emily Hoffman, who is studying for her Ph.D. in economics, sought the taping service because she was "looking for mistakes." Viewing the tape of herself, she noticed things she wished she hadn't done. "I should have erased the board before the class started." "I think I'm talking too slowly."

Did the presence of the camera disturb her teaching? "I was a little bit more nervous because I knew the camera was coming, but as soon as the cameraman began, I tried to ignore him. By the end of the class, I had almost forgotten he was there."

The three graduate student cameramen have about $6,000 in cameras, televisions and other equipment designated for use in improving the quality of graduate assistant teaching. Ideally, says Blair Stone, a graduate teaching assistant should be video-taped several times, maybe just 10 minutes each time, so that he may see his teaching abilities develop as the semester progresses.

"Tune In To Yourself" may also be used by regular UMass faculty members. Some foreign language professors have had their classes taped so that their students could see and hear themselves.

The program may never receive an Emmy and it may never become as popular as "Sesame Street," but it is picking up fans who are interested in becoming better teachers.

USCC Focus On Student, Legislator Relations

What is USCC? The initials stand for University and State Communications Council. It is a student run organization established to promote communication between different elements of the University community. In this context these elements include students, faculty, administrators, trustees and legislators.

Because other groups also exist on campus for communication purposes, USCC focuses mainly on student and legislator relations. Legislators are the ones who increase or, as has been more appropriate in the past few years, decrease the UMass budget. Ultimately these men hold the purse-strings of the University. But how many have actually even been up to see this school? How many have any knowledge of the many student activities and programs that exist on this campus?

USCC provides opportunities for legislators and students to come together to discuss the University they both have in common. Probably USCC is most noted for its unique Legislator's Days. The first of these was held during the 1970 Student Strike. All members of the General Court were invited to UMass and ushered around campus by student constituents. This program proved so successful that several more Legislator's Days were held on a limited scale last year. These programs give legislators an opportunity to see the school first hand and to exchange ideas with students.

In the past, USCC has filed bills in the Legislature. One of these bills resulted in a new student trustee being seated on the UMass Board of Trustees. This year USCC will be concentrating primarily on lobbying for bills which deal with the University and its students.

Another major area of work will be with tuition rates. Last year was the scene of a stiff battle within the Legislature over a proposed tuition hike. USCC was instrumental in fighting against this increase. A conference of all State Colleges was held on this campus, in an effort to create student unity and strength on this issue. USCC actions were successful according to the Massachusetts Taxpayers Association, a proponent of the increase, which stated student activism was a major defeating force of the proposed hike. This year the tuition issue again looms its head in the Legislature. The battle will be tougher.

This year USCC is attempting to work more with on-campus groups. It will be sending letters to RSO and department heads to keep them informed on Legislative action in their fields.

Another branch of USCC is the Legislative Research Council. The Council tries to coordinate students and legislators, who have an interest in the same fields, to work together. The student would research proposed legislative bills on this subject and receives three University credits for his work, plus invaluable experience in practical politics.

The fourth major committee of USCC is the Mass Media. The committee handles both publicity for the entire Council and initiates other channels of communication.

Summer Counseling Applications Sought

Applications are now being accepted for student group leader positions in the 1972 Summer Counseling Program. The program will operate from June 4 through August 4, 1972. Ten sessions for fall entering freshmen will be held, along with two swingshift sessions and three or more transfer programs.

Training sessions for the thirty selected counselors will be held during the latter part of the spring semester and the week of May 29 through June 2. All positions require residence in an assigned residence hall for the ten-week period. Summer counseling positions require full time participation. Summer school courses cannot be taken.

Qualifications for counselor positions include successful work experience, a positive attitude towards University life, knowledge regarding academic course planning, willingness to accept job performance standards and to attend the spring training sessions.

Interested and qualified students may obtain an application from the Counseling Center, 243 Whitmore. Applications must be returned on or before February 11, 1972. Selections will be announced during spring break.

Spend A Year In Germany

If, during these chilly January days, you miss the bustle of a lively university town, you should look into the possibility of spending the next academic year in Freiburg, Germany. Or you might spend next summer in the summer Freiburg program. Thursday evening January 27 a meeting will be held in the 3rd floor lounger of Herter at which students and faculty who have been in Freiburg will describe the year Freiburg program.

The fall semester in Freiburg starts about October 15 and ends February 15, while the spring term is somewhat shorter, lasting from mid April to early July. The summer program dates are June 19 to August 25 with three weeks for independent travel.

Life in Freiburg is largely clustered around the university, with its contingent of 12,000 students, of whom nearly one thousand are non-German.

The town offers many cultural diversions: frequent concerts, two repertory theaters, several musuems and about a dozen cinemas, but it is probably the 'genius loci' that adds most to the charm of Freiburg. The town is nestled against the mountains of the Black Forest and within a few miles of the center, thanks to a cable car, one can be several thousand feet above sea level and enjoy a magnificent Alpine panorama. There is excellent skiing less than an hour's drive away–and rates are remarkably low.

German students are among the friendliest in Europe and there is very little anti-American feeling in this most Americanized of western countries. Living conditions are comfortable, public transportation is excellent and there are close to one hundred restaurants in town offering a wide choice of succulent menus.

Although the Freiburg Program is not restricted to students concentrating in German language and literature, the University of Freiburg requires all foreign students to pass its language proficiency test. During the current spring semester the German Department is offering a six credit Freiburg Preparatory Course to enable students to gain more proficiency in German. The Freiburg Program begins next September with a several week orientation program which also stresses the German language. Courses offered during the year program include the social sciences, arts and humanities, including comparative literature, political science, philosophy, history, music, English, economics, and German language and literature.

Scholarships are available to outstanding students, and Fulbright scholarships may be applied to participate in the Freiburg program. University of Massachusetts undergraduate students who receive financial aid may apply it towards their expenses in Freiburg.

The estimated $2300 cost includes round-trip travel, room and board, tuition and fees. Not included are books, travel within Europe and miscellaneous fees. Applications and additional information are available from Dr. Barbara B. Burn, Director of International Programs, Whitmore Administration Building.

Find The Forgotten

The University Lost and Found, located at the bottom of the escalator in the Campus Center, has received all the sneakers and T-shirts which were left in the Boyden Gym lockers last semester. These articles will be held for only two weeks. Please come to claim them at your earliest convenience.

Also, Lost and Found has received many hats, scarfs, glasses, wallets, keys and other miscellaneous items. Students who have lost anything from last semester, should claim them at the desk.

Lost and Found will be open from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. daily, except Sunday 1-10 p.m.

Pull-Top Cans Hurt Kids

WASHINGTON (AP)-The House public heath subcommittee chairman says lid-licking kids are cutting their tongues on sharp edges because industry won't stop using metal pull-top cans for pudding and fruit.

There's a one-billion-can market for these school-lunchbox treats packed in pull-top containers and the "potential danger to consumers-especially those youngsters in kindergarten and grade school-is tremendous," Rep. Paul G. Rogers, D-Fla., head of the subcommittee which handles health and food-safety legislation, said at a news conference Tuesday.

Rogers said he hopes industry "will respond on its own-and, if it doesn't we will take necessary action" legislatively.

Rogers said children "have a natural tendency to lick the pudding off the lids and this had led to cut tongues. The lids and the sharp rims of the cans have resulted in cuts to the fingers and the tongue of both children and adults."

Limited statistics - "which are now available would indicate that literally tens of thousands of children use these types of cans and the injuries which are related to them would conservatively range from 50,000 upward," Rogers said.

Immediate action is needed, he added, but "despite the inquiries from injured consumers and consumer advocates, industry has not taken steps to correct these cans.

Although some cans carry some sort of warning, the "consumer audience which the product is aimed at is too young to read," Rogers said.

Rogers said Hunt Wesson Foods, Inc., of Fullerton, Calif., has 55 per cent of the market. Other firms making the products, he said, are Del Monte Corp. of San Francisco; General Mills, Inc. of Minneapolis; General Foods Corp. of White Plains, N.Y.; R.J. Reynolds Foods, Inc., of New York City, and Safeway Stores, Inc., of Oakland, Calif.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Sagittarians are proud, fond of teaching, love to travel and usually insist on complete freedom. Persons born under this zodiacal sign have "styles of their own." They set pace rather than imitate -they break through to new horizons. These persons are expansive, generous and, very often, naive. Some famous Sagittarians include Frank Sinatra, Sammy Davis, Jr. and Hermoine Gingold.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Build on solid base. Construct and consolidate. Adhere to factual information. One who proposes get rich-quick scheme should be ignored. Honest effort now will pay dividends. Older person figures prominently.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You will be busy-but don't scatter forces. Visiting relative, neighbor could take valuable time-if you so permit. Self-discipline is necessary. Don't become trapped by rumors, wishful thinking.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Money opportunity is present. Grab it. Be ready for change, travel, variety of experiences. By exchanging information you enjoy profit. Another Gemini plays important role. Display humor, versatility.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Circumstances turn in your favor. Your timing improves. Personal magnetism draws attractive people to you. Stress independence. Dance to your own tune. Don't back down from basic principles.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You enjoy role now of power behind scenes. You direct and organize. Romance is featured. But strive to know what it is you really desire. Avoid grandiose schemes. Simple approach gets results.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Accent in on friends, hopes and special wishes. Be careful about what you ask for-you are liable to get it. Means be sure you can handle added pressure. Capricorn person can show you the way.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Emphasis on career, goal, ways of achieving. Key now is to put much past behind you. Stop carrying another's burden. Popularize product. Spread message. Advertise and publicize. You're going places.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Join forces with one who has vision. Means be receptive. Broaden horizons. Travel opportunity could become available. Leo person aids. You will feel needed. Give and you also will receive.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Intuition works overtime. You perceive. What was hidden is revealed. You find out about finances as they affect marriage, partnership, contract. Unorthodox procedure works in your behalf.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Expand activities. But be sure you have legal green light. Check copyrights, patents. Get permission from proper sources. Consult mate, partner. You can have fun, but avoid carelessness.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Obtain hint from Sagittarius message. Stick to basics. Review lessons learned in recent past. You may feel good, but key is to also act in efficient manner. Check medical, dental appointments.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Love is very much in picture-so is speculation. There are changes, also an air of excitement. Shake off recent emotional rut. Accent greater self-expression. Young person demands, probably deserves attention.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: you help people as a matter of course. Some take advantage of you-but you would rather aid than be indifferent. A start made last year will begin to develop into something meaningful. June should be a most significant month.

Hoop War Raising Financial Problems For ABA Colonels

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — The Kentucky colonels win basketball games. But they are losing dollars, plenty of them, their owners say.

The five owners of the American Basketball Association team believe a merger between the ABA and National Basketball Association is imperative.

"If Congress votes down the merger," said Colonels' Board Chairman Wendell Cherry, "you're going to see a tremendous flight of capital out of basketball, and it won't stop short of Kentucky."

He said, "We'd have to quit, that's all. We'd have to throw in the towel."

If the Colonels' projected loss for this fiscal year--$402,837--is correct, Cherry and the four other owners will be $1,771,649 in the red since they purchased the ABA team in October 1969.

One reason for the deficit is the bidding war between the two leagues for college basketball players. This bothers Cherry but not as much as the ABA league assessment.

He said it came to $78,113 in fiscal 1970, was $128,297 during the past fiscal year, and probably will be $147,300 this year.

"This has been a tremendous expense," he said. "We pick up one-eleventh of the bill and it has been getting higher each year, primarily because of attorneys' fees. A lot of time and money has been spent on working out this merger at the league level."

Should the merger go through, he continued, "the league office can operate much more efficiently. Costs would generally be lower and would be divided among more teams."

When Cherry testified before the Senate subcommittee studying the consolidation, its chairman charged that club owners enjoy losing money because of the tax advantages involved.

Cherry calls this "absurd. I've said it before: there's no future in tax write-offs."

He explained that under the corporate setup for the Colonels, the largest possible write-off for one of the five owners would be 70 per cent, "provided the individual has other income to offset it--the loss."

The Colonels are averaging about 9,300 spectators per game at home. This figure, which is sixth best among the 28 pro teams, includes complimentary tickets.

Cherry said he has "no axe to grind with the fans. If we should have to call it quits, it won't be their fault."

The fact is, he continued, "these people (the owners) aren't going to put their capital into something that has no hope whatsoever of being rewarded. That's true in any area of business, and basketball is no exception."

Cherry is optimistic that the proposed merger will be approved but doubts that action is likely before the upcoming draft of college players.

And that means, he said, "that a lot of kids will be getting enough money to make sure they never had to do a full day's work again."

Archer Ill; Jack Solid Choice

SAN DIEGO (AP) — George Archer, the defending champion and this season's leading money winner, withdrew from the $150,000 Andy Williams-San Diego Open golf tournament Wednesday.

The 6-foot-6 Archer called tournament officials from his home in Gilroy, Calif., and said he had the flu and would be unable to compete in the tournament beginning Thursday on the 7,011-yard, par 72 Torrey Pines Golf Club course.

Archer, who has won $48,177 in just three weeks, lost to Miller Barber in a 21-hole playoff for the title in the Dean Martin-Tucson Open Monday.

The playoff at Tucson was the second extra round in three weeks for Archer, who had to go to 90 holes to beat Dave Hill and Tommy Aaron for the Glen Campell-Los Angeles Open title three weeks ago.

Nicklaus, rested and relaxed after a week off to clebrate his 32nd birthday, is gunning for a sixth victory in seven starts.

"I'm not as sharp as I'd like to be, but that's to be expected at this stage," said Nicklaus, who has played in only one tournament in more than two months.

That was the Bing Crosby National pro-am, which he won in a playoff with Johnny Miller.

In his last five starts in 1971, a year in which he set a single season money winning record of $244,000 in only 18 events, Nicklaus won two in Australia, including the National Open, took the individual title in the World Cup competition, won the Walt Disney World Open and was third in the Heritage Classic.

Alex Receives Compensation

DETROIT (AP) — The Detroit Lions have settled the contract of former All-Pro tackle Alex Karras, giving the footballer-turned-television personality an $80,000 lump-sum payment.

A Lions spokesman said the $80,000 settlement covered Karras' $35,000 salary for each of the last two years of his contract plus $10,000 in pension benefits which he would have earned had he played out the agreement.

Karras was starting the sixth year of a seven-year no-cut contract when he was released on waivers by the Lions last September. He had been with the team for 13 years.

Black Stars To Be Named

NEW YORK (AP) — The 10 man Negro Hall of Fame Committee will announce on Feb. 8 whether any stars of the pre-1947 Negro Baseball Leagues have been elected to the Hall of Fame, Commissioner Bowie Kuhn announced Wednesday.

The announcement will be made at a luncheon in conjunction with the first showing of the 1971 World Series film.

Expectations are that the Negro committee voting on the talents of Negro League players will vote in at least one or two players. The leading candidate appears to be catcher Josh Gibson, the Babe Ruth of the Negro Leagues.

Pitcher Satchel Paige last year became the first star from the Negro Leagues voted into the Hall of Fame by the Negro committee.

Worster To NFL

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The St. Louis football Cardinals announced the acquisition Wednesday of Steve Worster, former University of Texas running back who played last season in the Canadian Football League.

Worster was a fourth-round draft choice by the Los Angeles Rams in 1971. He signed with the Hamilton Tiger-Cats but was suspended by the CFL after four games because of an arrest on a charge of possessing marijuana.

Worster was arrested at his apartment where he was entertaining friends. He said he had no knowledge of the marijuana.

The 6-foot, 210-pound fullback scored 36 touchdowns and averaged 5.1 yards per carry with Texas.

The Cardinals, in order to get the rights to Worster, gave the Rams a fourth-round draft choice they had obtained when they traded Don Parish to Los Angeles in October.

SB Sets Record

NEW YORK (AP) — Super Bowl VI between the Dallas Cowboys and Miami Dolphins was viewed in more homes than any other television show in history, revised figures showed Wednesday.

The game was seen, according to the National Nielsen ratings, by an estimated 65 million people watching in 27,450 million homes.

Willis Reed: "I Might Never Be Back"

NEW YORK (AP) — Willis Reed, the 6-foot-10 center who led the New York Knicks to the National Basketball Association championship two years ago, is having so much trouble with an ailing left leg that he painfully speculates "I might never be back."

Reed was expected to return to work out with the Knicks Wednesday but a meeting with team doctor Andrew Patterson canceled that appointment. It was decided his left knee would not stand up to the pounding it would be required to take.

Reed, the Knicks' answer to superstar centers such as Kareem Abdul Jabbar and Wilt Chamberlain, has not played in 35 games dating back to Nov. 11. And while he was optimistic until now, the tone of his comments has changed.

"The knee hasn't responded to allow me to do the things I have to do to play basketball-running, jumping," Reed explained. "I haven't done a good job of just walking around. We're going to take a few days to think about what to do. Maybe continue the therapy. Maybe surgery. They don't know.

"They (the fans) have just got to forget about me until I'm actually out there again. But who knows? Willis Reed might never be back."

So, at 29, Reed's career is definitely in jeopardy, and his teammates realize it, although they remain hopeful.

"His future is definitely in limbo," said Walt Frazier. "He doesn't feel too confident. It's easy for him to get down on himself, not being able to play much this season. Maybe he won't be back this year, but he'll work hard all this summer, knowing him, to come back next year."

Next year, however, may not be soon enough for the Knicks, who currently trail the front-running Boston Celtics by four games in the NBA's Atlantic Division.

"We'll just have to go ahead without him," said Jerry Lucas, who has taken over Reed's post at center. "There's always been the hope in the back of our minds that he'll come back--there still is.

"If not, I'll just try to do the best job I can."

Greg Cook Calls It Quits

CINCINNATI, Ohio (AP) — Greg Cook, ailing 25-year-old Cincinnati Bengal quarterback, announced his retirement today from professional football.

Cook told the Dayton Daily News in an exclusive interview that he is giving up his 28-month fight to return to pro football. A shoulder injury led to two operations and forced him to miss two full seasons. He said he has no plans to join the Bengals when training camp opens.

"I may try to lob a few passes between now and then, just to see if there's some kind of medical miracle," Cook said, "but I don't expect one. As far as I'm concerned, this is it. It's all over."

A Bengal spokesman told The Associated Press that Cook had "indicated" shortly after the first of the year that he would quit but that he never made a definite statement.

Cook was not available for comment.

Skaters Pour It On Amherst

Keenan's Hat Trick Leads 15-1 Rout

By ALAN WRIGHT

Let's face it, the Redmen skaters proved a point by devastating Amherst College in a one-sided rout 15-1 last night. With all respect for and gratitude to the Lord Jeffs who let the University use the facilities there, UMass has outgrown Orr Rink as well as its schedule that includes teams like Amherst, who are no match for the up and coming hockey program here that deserves a convocation building and arena of its own to practice and play in. The fans were hanging from the chandeliers to see all the Redmen pucksters contribute towards an overwhelming victory.

At no time in the game was there any question that UMass was the superior team and they never stopped playing driving, hard-nosed hockey all night long, although it tended to get redundant to see the puck in the Amherst net. Periods one and two both were similar in that the UMass goals came in bunches. In fact, three goals were fired within the space of a minute and a half in the opening stanza, two more added, and then six big ones rained in the second. The last five goals in the final period only served to make the atmosphere at Orr Rink like a circus, thinly disguised as a hockey game.

UMass seemed to get better as the game progressed, continually charging up the ice on effective power plays. Captain Brian Sullivan made the defensive play of the game when he beat an Amherst wing who was moving in on goal one on one. He dropped to his knees and lunged to break up what probably would have resulted in an Amherst tally. Amongst all those goals, it was almost a relief to see the opponents muster some sort of attack. Credit has to be given to goalie P.J. Flaherty for being his usual stingiest and thwarting the few shots that did come his way off of Lord Jeff sticks.

An important factor to realize is that the UMass "super Sophs" played an integral part in this 10th season win. Jim Lynch, Jim Coleman and Bob Edwards were all in the action and hustling throughout the game. Junior Pat Keenan gave his regular stellar performance and garnered another five points. Don Riley was playing with style all night and he posted a goal, as well as controlling the disc with Don Lowe and Lonnie Avery for varying stretches that seemed like an eternity. Captain Brian Sullivan also got in the act, and his unassisted goal off his own rebound at 11:41 of the second period had to be the best of the night, closely followed by Mike Waldron's slap shot from about forty feet away at 9:32.

But, when a hockey team scores fifteen goals, you know they were rallied and everybody looked like they should have played in the National Hockey League All-Star game two nights ago. Even Jim Bittman, who beat John Kiah for the only Amherst marker at 14:59 should be congratulated.

Coach Jack Canniff, a successful man who doesn't waste any words, had this to say about the runaway win, "I'm pleased with what happened out there tonight, but it's the boys who play the game and they've been doing as fine a job all season as I could want them to."

Yes, let's face it, Amherst College wasn't much competition last night, but "home" has been heaven for UMass at Orr Rink where the Redmen are undefeated this season, but Vermont is preparing to make the trek down here on Friday, and they might be wanting to bring some hell.

Nittany Lions Trip Gymnasts

By MICHAEL CUSACK

After opening the season with successive wins over New Hampshire, Southern Connecticut, and Army, the UMass varsity gymnasts suffered their first loss, 160-152, at the hands of a powerful Penn State team. The meet, which was held on Sat., Jan. 22, was promoted by the Penn State Alumni Club, and attracted nearly two thousand spectators to Curry Hicks Cage. Gene Whettstone's Nittany Lions, led by sensational Marshall Avener, simply overpowered the Redmen in every event.

Avener was incredible for Penn State as he placed first in every event but rings, where he was second. He easily won the all-around total with 55.40 points, which is an average of nearly 9.2 for each routine. This is why Avener is considered one of the top gymnasts in the country, as well as a good future Olympic prospect.

Penn State led by only .3 after the first event, floor exercise, in which UMass took second and third place on the strength of routines performed by Jack Berner and John Calabria.

The Redmen lost nearly 3 full points on pommel horse. The only bright spot here was the performance of Redman Steve Nelson, who finally began to realize his potential, for a score of 8.4.

UMass' Eastern medalist Jay Aronstein led all scores on rings with a 9.25. Hopefully Aronstein will be able to continue scoring in this range--he is certainly capable of it, and the score would be very important for the Redmen.

The most consistent vaulter the Redmen have is Jay Thomsen, who again scored a 9.2, which was good for a second place tie in longhorse vaulting.

On parallel bars, the Redmen were led by co-capt. Dave Genest, who scored an 8.85, good for third place. Genest should be returning to the 9.0 routines he has been scoring.

Horizontal bar was somewhat of a disappointment for the UMass squad, as they managed 25.35 points. Co-capt. Tony Vacca led all UMass scores with a 9.35, which was bested only by Penn State's Avener, who had a 9.5 score.

Penn State was heavily favored to win the meet, so the Redmen loss comes as no surprise. Look for Penn State to sweep the E.I.G.L. again this year. Penn State's coach, Gene Whettstone, who is also coach of the U.S. National Team, has been turning out championship teams for many years.

The next meet for the Redmen will be on Sat., Feb. 5, at 2:00 p.m., when they host Pittsburgh. The meet will be held in Boyden Auxiliary Gym.

Varsity M Features Live Entertainment

By EARLE BARROLL

Wrestling coach Homer Barr probably had to dodge a few bolts of lightning on his way from the Newman Center yesterday. Anyone who can stage a two-fisted brawl between two guys wearing red leotards in a house of worship couldn't deserve anything but the best from up above.

Thanks to matchmaker James (Sam Silverman) Mulcahy, the president of the varsity M Club, yesterday's noon luncheon at the Newman Center featured a live wrestling clinic featuring coach Barr and two of his heavyweights, Dave Amato at 118 pounds and Barry Gadowsky at 126 pounds.

On the undercard Shelley Goldberg (at a heavy 150) and Carl Danbman (205) restrained from the physical segment of the program and turned to the more peaceful chores of speaking to the masses.

Wrestling at the university this season has not been extremely productive (3-5-1) but as Barr pointed out this is do primarily to "one of the toughest schedules in the east" coupled with "nine wrestling meets in fourteen days in December which made things just a bit too fast for the wrestlers."

"We have had weight problems on the team," he said. "Shelley ballooned to 174 during the summer from lifting weights. Clay Jester was also pretty big, but as soon as we get rolling again things should be all right.

"We have the potential to be as good or better than last year's team, but his doesn't mean another New England title necessarily as last year's shocker over Springfield caused them to recruit heavily for this season."

Goldberg was perhaps the most fired up person at the luncheon. After being introduced by his coach as "a wrestler who we handle with silk gloves off the mat, but who does the job when he's on the mat", the two time New England 134 pound champion became overly psyched over the thought of wrestling against Springfield next Tuesday.

Springfield, Springfield, Springfield...like a plague...or for him a mission. It just so happens that on Saturday the Redmen host Oswego, a national small college power. It took Barr no longer than a pin count (a second) to remind Shelley of this fact...But for Mr. Goldberg this moment to get ready was in itself something to remember.

Dambman is also a New England champion. At 205 pounds last year he defeated three men over 250 pounds for the heavyweight title, but this season he'll go after the top spot at 190 pounds. Said his coach, "He gets a little cocky once and a while so I get him on the mat to cool him down." Carl was quick to admit the coaches superiority...there wasn't enough room at the Center for a winner take all match.

Dambman cited the 40 day layoff between matches as a cause for concern when the so-called second season gets going, but he said, "Last Thursday through Saturday we came back to school for workouts. All we did was wrestle (three times a day), eat over coaches house (steak) and sleep (for hours)."

The clinic was something new for the luncheon. While Barr was speaking, Amato and Gadowsky (the guys in the red leotards) demonstrated such maneuvers as the "Japanese wizzer" and the "Harvard drag".

Barr emphasized that there are very few injuries in collegiate free-style wrestling. "College wrestling legislates against roughness, illegal holds and injuries," he said.

What's illegal? Things like a wrestler cannot cover the mouth or the nose of his opponents. When a wrestler is lifted off the mat he has to be returned to the mat safely or his opponent faces disqualification. The twisting knee lock and a hammer lock without holding an arm, which usually results in a choke hold (TV style) are all illegal.

Next week basketball is featured at the luncheon. Who knows, maybe Jack Leaman will have baskets set up for layup lines before lunch.

Results Disputed In Fac-Sen Vote

By MDC Staff

By a two-vote margin, the Faculty Senate has defeated a student-sponsored proposal to increase student representation on the Athletic Council. However, a dispute over the validity of the vote has emerged, so that the question of student participation will not be resolved until the next meeting of the Senate.

The constitutional amendment would reorganize the Athletic Council by increasing student membership from one to five, while giving five members of the faculty and one alumni membership also. The plan had been devised by the Faculty Senate Student Affairs Committee and had been endorsed by the Student Senate. The Faculty Senate had given its initial approval to the plan in December of last year.

The parliamentary dispute over the meaning of the vote centered around the fact that seven senators abstained, while 28 voted in favor and 18 against the amendment. The Faculty Senate Constitution stipulates that an amendment must be passed by a 3/5ths vote of those "voting." The question was whether the seven abstentions counted in computing the vote. If the abstentions counted, the amendment was defeated; if they did not count, the amendment was passed. The parliamentarian ruled that it was defeated, but the meeting ended with the dispute unresolved.

Debate over the proposal itself focused on that aspect of the plan that would reduce alumni representation on the Council. A spokesman for the Alumni Association contended that membership on the council was an important way that the alumni can contribute to the university. He said that alumni should not be denied the opportunity to participate in a program that was one of their major remaining links to UMass.

Student Senate Pres. Lee Sandwen responded that the athletic program should be the major concern of the participants in the program (students) and of others on the campus itself (faculty). He said that the alumni should be encouraged to support athletics, but should not have a major voice in determining athletic policy for the campus.

After more debate, the issue was put to a vote and the Parliamentary difficulties began. Professor David Booth, chairman of the Faculty Senate said that abstentions would not be counted into the vote. He also made it clear that an abstention would be a means of voting down the student proposal. The parliamentarian quickly overruled Booth and stated that abstentions would be counted into the vote. The mistake in parliamentary procedure was brought to light shortly after the meeting was adjourned.

In other business, Acting Chancellor Randolph Bromery announced that President Robert Wood yesterday imposed a temporary "freeze on filling all new positions". The freeze will be imposed, according to Bromery, for at least a week to ten days. This means that no new faculty members can be hired during this period, although Bromery promised that "all commitments will be honored." He asserted that the freeze will end when the Governor's Budget Office clarifies some budgetary questions.

Provost Robert Gluckstern reported on the reward system employed for recent faculty promotions. He stated that 29 faculty members have been promoted primarily because of their skills and contributions to teaching, while 22 faculty members were promoted because of their research and scholarship and 18 faculty members were promoted because of their service to the university. He asserted that his figures contradict the idea that only those professors who publish are rewarded with advancement.

Acting Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Rogert Gage reported on a group called the "Working Group for Minority Counseling," which is making an effort to make proposals to changes in admissions, academic matters, and counseling to meet the specific needs of minority students. He stated that he was willing to make a significant commitment of resources to the task.

In response to a question from the floor, Acting Chancellor Bromery said that he was "not at liberty to discuss" a report that the American Association of University Professors was considering censuring the university for violation of the 1966 AAUP Statement on University Governance. The censure deals with a specific faculty member who was denied tenure or reappointment allegedly in violation of AAUP guidelines. Bromery stated that he could not comment because of the "advice of legal counsel."

Answering another question, Bromery asserted that President Wood's "Academic Advisory Committee" had no real authority but was an informal group of faculty brought together by the President to be available to consultation and advice. Some Faculty Senators expressed their concern that the committee had been established without going through the usual campus procedures.

News Analysis

A Slap In The Face

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

The Faculty Senate's action defeating the student proposal concerning the Athletic Council on an invalid vote represents a slap in the face for all students.

The invalid vote may have been caused by a mistake in parliamentary procedure, but it is obvious that the 18 senators who voted down the proposal and the seven senators who abstained from voting were in fact, withdrawing their support for the student body. It is also important to note that approximately 20 to 30 senators walked out of the meeting before the Council vote was taken.

The fact that 25 senators seen fit not to vote in favor of the proposal is frustrating, but it is extremely disappointing to know that 20 to 30 faculty members couldn't find the time to vote on an issue that is as important to

Dye Terms JOE Successful; 14 Youths Placed Already

By BOB CALLAHAN

The four week long Juvenile Opportunity Extension program (J.O.E.) reached the half way point this week with a press conference held yesterday to explain the progress of this unique experimental program.

Larry Dye, chairman of the program, termed the past few weeks, "very successful". According to Dye, "The number of positive aspects outnumbers the few problems encountered since the program was begun here at UMass.

The program involves 88 youths from the recently closed Lyman and Lancaster Schools who are being counseled here by student volunteers on a one to one basis. The purpose of this program is to have the student volunteers negotiate for and with their youths with various community agencies for jobs and schooling arrangements as well as exploring family situations and living arrangements.

At the press conference held yesterday in the Campus Center, Dye announced that of the 88 youths, 14 have been already placed in new homes, and forty-three are working on being placed. Dye reported that difficulty is being encountered in placing 13 of the youths because of a lack of leads as to where these people can be placed.

It is hoped by those in the program that every youth will be placed in a living and learning, or working, facility by February 13.

A few of the other positive aspects mentioned by Dye involve a Puerto Rican youth being reunited with his family in Puerto Rico and the case where the family of a student volunteer became foster parents for a youth.

During the first week of operation, a few minor incidents involving youths in the program were reported. Dye reported that absence of trouble during the past few days is attributed to the fact that "the youths are settling down due to the program becoming intensified and the growing relationships between the youths and their counselors or advocates."

The program here at UMass is being evaluated daily by Dye and his assistants. They report that the majority of the youths involved are fitting into the program.

Of those being placed into foster homes, the older children find it most difficult because of their age to be taken in by a foster parent, Dye pointed out, stressing the need for them.

In response to the criticism leveled against the program last week by State Rep. Robert McGinn (D—Westfield) Dye said, "This comes from a lack of information on the total goals of the program," and he added that this could be clarified through shared communication.

Massachusetts is the first state in which training schools are being phased out, and Dye reported that this has been very carefully planned. He added that if there was no confidence of success it never would have been attempted.

Larry Dye, Ernie Ries, and Cindy Dunbar, discuss the merits of the JOE II Program at a news conference.

UMass Moves Towards Personal Interaction

By DEBRA MARR

According to several UMass administrators and student leaders, last semester showed a dramatic movement towards personal interaction between students, administrators, and the Pioneer Valley community.

Dean of Students William O. Field described the fall semester as "an individual, rather than institutional, semester" and as "the tight-dollar semester. I spent more hours this fall talking to individual students than to groups," Field remarked; most of the students came looking for some means of financial aid.

Field noted a movement away from "group hassling" on administrative problems and found that more students were coming to talk on a one-to-one basis. He felt that the change brought a "refreshing return to what the role of the dean of students was several years ago," and noted that, on the whole, he found students to be more interesting to talk to and more thoughtful about themselves and the people around them.

W. Daniel Fitzpatrick, Associate Dean of Students, felt that last semester showed "a redirection of student energies by the students themselves" exemplified by student action with programs such as J.O.E. and the Belchertown workers. He remarked that the areas where students most desired change were less visible and more personally satisfying with more emphasis on ecological work and social reform on a person-to-person basis.

According to Acting Chancellor Bromery, last semester marked the end of most of the groundwork for programs for residence hall living. Bromery described the residence program as offering "a complete spectrum of living alternatives from an urban experience in a Southwest tower to a quiet corridor on the Quad."

Bromery noted that last semester also marked the beginning of investigation into the Amherst campus' role in the multi-campus UMass system with the Future University committee report: "We must make this campus look at itself and ask where we are going in the next decade." He cited the better means of communication between the campus and the President's office, the reorganization of administrative facilities on campus, and the identification of areas on campus to be shared university-wide as examples of the direction the Amherst campus is moving in.

Gary Gomes of the Student Senate felt that the highlight of the semester for the Senate was the passing of the "Narc-Law;" Gomes said it showed that the Senate "finally had the confidence to do something about a matter like this."

He also remarked that this semester was the beginning of "the entire working within the system thing." The establishment of the Athletics Council, the work with Food Services, and the student imput on the committee working for the spring concert showed the "increase of student representation on things that the students actually own, control, and share."

Gomes noted the improving communication between students and faculty and agreed with Field and Fitzpatrick, stating that students have begun "talking to administrators as people rather than as a corporate monster." As for next semester, Gomes claims he is, on the whole, optimistic: "There's more openness on campus, and people are a little more cooperative."

Seniors Vote Themselves A Day

The Senior Class Poll cards that were included in all Seniors' Registration packets have been compiled by members of the Senior Committee. 70% of the cards were completed and returned, giving the following results:

Want Senior Day	1361
As in the past	1132
Alternatives	229
Want Loan Fund and/or Scholarship (instead of or with a Senior Day)	698
Scholarship	336
Loan Fund	213
Scholarship and Loan	149

Various responses for alternatives included 232 responses for: return the money, concerts, Bangladesh, other charities, and miscellaneous answers.

It was apparent from some of the responses that some Seniors didn't know that the Senior Committee had control over any Senior funds. The money that Senior Committee controls for Senior events comes from $4.00 per Senior which is paid through the Student Activities Tax twice a year. A separate Commencement Fee of $10.00 is collected from all Seniors which the Senior Committee has relatively no control over. This money is controlled by the University Commencement Task Force, of which 5 members of the Senior Committee are members.

The Senior Committee now knows how the Senior Class wants its money spent. 62% of the respondents want a Senior Day. But it takes a lot of people to plan and put one on. If any Seniors want to help plan and work on Senior events, they are urged to come to the Senior Committee meetings. This Sunday, Jan. 30, there will be a Senior Committee meeting at 7:00 P.M., in Rm. 162-175 of the Campus Center. Results of the Poll will be discussed, and plans for Senior activities (Senior Day, Class Gift, alternatives, Reunions, etc.) will be made.

Services Committee Answers Complaints

The conception of secret caucuses behind closed doors has always made the average person wary of the term 'government'. The investigation of what government does and how it operates should dispel at least a few of these fears. One arm of 'government', here at UMass, which few have any knowledge about is the Student Senate Services Committee. The main function of the committee is to answer all complaints made by anyone involved with the University. This is done by making investigations into the disputed area and enacting change where it is needed.

Some past products of the agency are the Food Services Advisory Board from which "Munchies" evolved and the Health Services Board which is in charge of the hiring of all personnel in the infirmiry. One especially bright aspect of this committee is that the proposed candidate must appear before a board consisting solely of students who will judge his attitude and decide whether he can effectively relate to the average student. This gives students more say in who runs campus facilities.

The Service Committee has not stopped with these accomplishments and has much planned for the future. They are presently working on a proposal involving refrigerator rentals in which the student senate would act as agents for the companies and would lower prices and put all profits made into a scholarship fund. Other suggestions are roommate matching by computers, creating new jobs for students, and setting up a security advisory board under the same model of the Health Board. The group has also looked into forming various cooperatives here on campus.

Pass/Fail Card Incorrect

Students may take up to five University core and distribution requirements pass/fail, as was voted by the Faculty Senate last May. This year's pass/fail cards are incorrect. It should be noted that CASIAC requirements may NOT be taken pass/fail.

Senate Bids For SES Transfer

By DON BISHOP

In an unusually scheduled meeting last night, the Student Senate drew up plans for the transfer of the operation of the SES note service from Mr. George Cheah to the auspices of the Senate. Originally, no meeting had been scheduled for this week, but the need for a quick transfer of the note service, with the beginning of a new semester, necessitated the Thursday night session.

Because the meeting followed upon yesterday's Faculty Senate meeting, the Student Senate seized the opportunity to condemn the Faculty Senate's rejection of Student Senate plan for the reorganization of the Athletic Council. Student Senate President Lee Sandwen sponsored a bill which requests the Board of Trustees to remove the Athletic Council from the "purview" of the Faculty Senate and which hints at disruption of future Athletic Council meetings. The motion as written reads:

"Whereas the Faculty Senate has acted irresponsibly by refusing to make changes in the Athletic Council structure that would allow real student voice in a program that is of great concern to them as a group,

"Be it resolved that the Student Senate request the Board of Trustees remove the Athletic Council from the purview of the Faculty Senate, and re-establish it under campus-wide auspices.

"And be it further resolved that the Student Senate formally announces that the Athletic Council will not be allowed to meet 'quietly' until substantive changes are made in its present structure that ensure that quality of student involvement that is of such prime importance.

The possible transfer of the operation of the SES service to the Senate had been discussed briefly at an earlier meeting. At last night's meeting, the Senate decided to negotiate with Mr. Cheah, the owner of SES who is presently residing in New Hampshire, to purchase a number of his machines, thereby transfering the operation of the service to the Senate.

There are a number of difficulties involved in this transfer, all revolving around Mr. Cheah's willingness to sell the equipment for what the Senate considers a fair price. Senate Treasurer Skip Olmstead stated at the meeting, that in a conference over the telephone with Mr. Cheah earlier this week, they tentatively agreed on a price of $5300 on a collator, a stitcher, and 5 typewriters originally purchased by Mr. Cheah for $8300.

Olmstead asked the Senate for authorization to purchase Cheah's equipment and other equipment that would have to be bought new, all of which is needed to keep the service oprating. Debate followed, with questions arising as to whether the Senate would incur any of Mr. Cheah's debts. Treasurer Olmstead stated that any agreement he would negotiate would stipulate that Mr. Cheah remains responsible for his past debts.

Senator Robert Chiller raised a queston on the feasibility of the Senate operating the service from the standpoint of possible monetary losses. Chiller and others wanted to know about the past financial records of SES. This wasn't possible though, because Cheah has kept his records private. The manager of SES, Frank Baglione, who came in the absence of Mr. Cheah, indicated that the service was operating on a profit that he roughly estimated at 20 cents on the dollar. Senator Nick Apostola pointed out that Senate control of SES will probably mean that more professors will allow the service for their course, thereby increasing profits.

Treasurer Olmstead stated that any profits coming from Senate operation of the service would go back into Senate funds, or into expansion of SES. Most of the money that is paid by students will go for materials, and salaries of SES employees.

At the close of the meeting the Senate voted to authorize the Treasurer, in consultation with President Sandwen and Senate Legal Counsel Howland, to spend up to $6000 for purchase of Mr. Cheah's and any other necessary equipment.

After the meeting was concluded, Olmstead and Sandwen contacted Cheah in New Hampshire and encountered some unforeseen difficulties in purchasing the equipment and transferring control of the service. It appears that Mr. Cheah is refusing the terms that Treasurer Olmstead says he agreed to earlier this week, and is holding out for more money. (See story elsewhere on page.)

Fac-Sen Defeats Council Vote

students as the Council vote. Much student time and effort was made in behalf of this athletic issue. The Collegian throughout the past semester brought many of the main issues into the open. It wasn't a difficult decision to make, the Faculty Senate had to decide if students would have greater representation on the Council than alumni.

A prominent Student Senate leader summed up the student viewpoint on the Council. He told the MDC in a previous interview: "The alumni have a right to be consulted. They do not have a right to say how student money should be spent. Athletics do not financially affect the alumni as they do the student in that the student must carry the major financial burden of the athletic program."

If the Athletic Council proposal is taken up to another vote at a Senate meeting which at this time appears inevitable, it can be expected that Bernie Bussel, secretary of the Athletic Council will oppose the student proposal with the worn out phrases which he has used in the past and can be expected to use in the future. Mr. Bussel will claim that his minority proposal - he was the only member of the Committee on Committees to support this proposal - makes for greater representation. Mr. Bussel's proposal which he seems so proud of would increase undergraduate support by three while maintaining alumni representation at four and increasing faculty representation by one.

Mr. Bussel misses the point completely. Students only want their fair share of representation on the Council in comparison with the present alumni representation. Alumni financial support compared to the financial support of the student body is poor and does not in any way justify the fact that alumni in the future should receive greater or equal representation on the Council with students.

The crux of the matter is that students are looking for representation on the Council which is proportionate to the financial support made by the student body to the athletic program in the way of 2 $30 athletic fee. The Senate vote seems to imply that students are not responsible enough to run a council which depends on their overwhelming financial support.

It is also ironic and hypocritical that the Senate should defeat a proposal which would give students greater representation on a committee which the student plays such a major role. The faculty is now in a type of situation with UMass President Robert Wood which may be termed a "power struggle." The faculty has been talking about gaining an equal role in all decisions which have a direct influence on their own interests. Many faculty members have advocated unionization as a means of attaining this power.

If faculty expects equal representation in matters which directly affect them, then it is difficult to understand why the Senate would withdraw their support of a student proposal which guarantees the student body their rightful representation. It just might be that faculty doesn't care what students feel. If the Senate votes on this matter again, then the senators can only vote only way or face the consequences of losing the support and the confidence of the student body.

The student proposal essentially keeps the size of the Athletic Council at eleven while increasing the number of undergraduates from one to five and decreasing the number of alumni from four to one. According to this proposal, the professional staff-alumni to student ratio would be changed from ten-one to six-five. An obvious increase in student power.

The main objection against the student proposal is that the alumni loses their major rallying point for supporting the athletic program. The Athletic Council is supposedly the alumni's vehicle of expressing their opinions and ideas and using their experience for the betterment of the athletic department.

The argument just doesn't hold up. The Student Affairs Committee of the Faculty Senate which presented the student proposal recognized the need for the continued support of the alumni and made room for more than adequate alumni representation on the Council. The student proposal would form a separate committee for faculty representation. This alumni committee would be composed of five members of the Alumni Association chosen by the association. It would be the responsibility of the committee to recommend and promote ways of obtaining greater alumni support for the University's athletic interests.

SES Rejects Senate Offer

By MDC STAFF

Student Senate President Lee Sandwen said last night that he "has reservations as to whether the Student Educational Service (SES notes) will continue to operate under present conditions for the remainder of the semester." The statement came after a break in Senate negotiations to buy SES from George Cheah, sole owner of the corporation.

Cheah was reported last night to have refused the Senate's offer of $5300 approved at the special meeting of the Senate. (See story this page.) He was unavailable for comment on Sandwen's forecast, but SES manager Frank Baglione was contacted.

Baglione said, "I am under instructions from George (Cheah) to continue to provide lecture note service until he and the Senate can resolve the problem. We plan to continue operating as usual."

He foresees no immediate problems in continuing the service.

Student Senate Treasurer Skip Olmstead said that he and Cheah had verbally agreed on the figure of $5300 and purchase of small equipment in a conversation on January 25, 1972. He and Sandwen said that they were "confused" as to SES' future, because Cheah now resides in New Hampshire, and can't personally operate the service, and he totally owns the corporation.

"We are just trying to make sure the students' interests are protected," Sandwen said.

Negotiations are expected to continue between Cheah and the Student Senate.

Henry Kissinger discussed at a news conference how he used 5 different routes to disguise his actual route to Paris in order to discuss secretly with the North Vietnamese President Nixon's peace proposal.

In Brief...

Sargent Requests Procedure Change

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Francis W. Sargent, whose resignation request was rejected by censured Judge Vincent R. Brogna, said Thursday he will submit proposals to revise the procedure for removing judges from office.

Brogna, a Superior Court judge, was censured by the state Supreme Court after a three-week hearing into allegations by convicted stock swindler Michael J. Raymond that he secured a suspended sentence in a 1962 stock fraud case presided over by Brogna.

Chief Mate Presumed Drowned

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — The tanker Cities Service Miami has reported that its chief mate is missing and presumed drowned at sea.

A spokesman for the ship's agent here, Chase Leavitt & Co., identified the missing man as Francis Coffill, 51, of Melrose, Mass.

Coffill disappeared at sea Tuesday night as the ship neared Portland, the spokesman said.

Coffill ate his evening meal in the superstructure at the stern and started to walk forward to his quarters in the midship house. The spokesman said he never arrived there. Presumably the man was washed overboard in high seas running at the time.

Apollo 16 Back on Schedule

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Space Agency said today that the time required to make repairs to the Apollo 16 spacecraft command module will not delay the scheduled April 16 moon mission launch date.

"Preparations of the space vehicle will be back on the original schedule," said a brief announcement from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

N. Viets Blast Peace Plan But No Outright Rejection

PARIS (AP) — North Vietnam and the Viet Cong unleashed a barrage of criticism Thursday against every major point of President Nixon's peace plan but stopped short of outright rejection.

The U.S. delegate told the Vietnamese Communists the United States will not complete a total withdrawal from South Vietnam until a final agreement is signed based "on all aspects" of Nixon's plan. The United States and South Vietnam placed the eight-point plan before the Paris peace talks.

The 142nd session of the talks showed no outwardly visible movement toward genuine negotiations, but such movement would not necessarily appear in the semipublic sessions.

The Nixon plan was under discussion over the past two years in secret meetings in Paris, between presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger, and North Vietnamese negotiators. The South Vietnamese and Viet Cong delegations were excluded from these talks because the Communists would not negotiate with Saigon's representative.

In presenting the plan, U.S. Ambassador William J. Porter and South Vietnam's Pham Dang Lam stressed that it was flexible and open to negotiation. The allied delegates hoped that the Communist side might take up the challenge and open bargaining in public or secret meetings.

The meeting produced no hint that the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong delegations were ready to bargain-publicly or privately-on the basis of Nixon's plan.

After denouncing the plan as a maneuver by Nixon to get himself re-elected president, Xuan Thuy, the North Vietnamese delegate, said he would have "other comments to make" later.

Thuy denounced Nixon for divulging the secret Kissinger contracts in spite of a formal promise he said the United States gave the North Vietnamese.

It was the second time in the three-year-old conference that Nixon has violated a similar undertaking, Thuy asserted, and added: "If Mr. Nixon cannot keep such a solemn promise, then what credibility will his other statements have?"

Both Thuy and the Viet Cong's Nguyen Van Tien referred to the Viet Cong's seven-point peace plan submitted to the talks last July 1. They avoided all reference to the nine-point plan North Vietnam put to Kissinger in the secret talks. The Hanoi plan demanded American war reparations. The United States rejected the demand while offering Hanoi a share in a multibillion-dollar reconstruction program.

The U.S. Command reported two Americans were killed in action and 30 wounded in fighting last week.

Four Americans died of non-hostile causes.

The South Vietnamese Command reported 326 government troops were killed last week and 824 wounded. The South Vietnamese said 978 enemy troops killed in action last week.

Enemy casualties formerly were reported by both commands, but the U.S. Command said it was suspending reports of enemy figures. Informants indicated this was due to the declining U.S. combat role.

Rogers Shows Optimism

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State William P. Rogers expressed some hesitant optimism Thursday about the future of President Nixon's eight-point peace plan because the North Vietnamese had not rejected the proposal at the Paris talks.

After saying a main sticking point in the negotiations is Hanoi's insistence on a Communist-imposed overnment for South Vietnam, Rogers told a conference of editors and broadcasters:

"I am somewhat encouraged by the fact they the North Vietnamese have not rejected our proposals at Paris this morning.

"There has been a good deal of invective," the secretary continued, "but they have not rejected" the plan outlined by President Nixon earlier this week and formally presented at Paris Thursday.

Rogers said he had talked to William Porter, the chief U.S. delegate at the Paris talks, following his meeting with the North Vietnamese representatives and was told the other side had asked questions about the American plan, particularly dealing with procedures for a proposed election.

"That is a good sign," the secretary declared, "that is what negotiations are all about."

He tempered his encouragement with such statements as: "It is not clear at all" that the North Vietnamese and their Viet Cong allies are seriously interested in a peaceful settlement.

"North Vietnam insists that the government of South Vietnam be removed and a government of their choosing take over," Rogers said, adding the American position insists on a free election.

"We are perfectly flexible" on the procedures involving an election, the secretary said, and "we are prepared to do anything to insure the election is fair."

However, he said, "we cannot accept North Vietnam imposing a Communist government on South Vietnam...the United States cannot retreat from that as a matter of principle."

Although he outlined the various points of the Nixon plan, Rogers stress primarily the matter of an election as the keystone to the current deadlock and an area of flexibility.

While declining to speculate on the outcome of any South Vietnamese election, Rogers said, "My guess would be that...the people of South Vietnam would support a free system."

Business Indicators Show Solid Gain

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's leading business indicators turned in a solid gain last month, providing new evidence the economy will be strong this year, the Commerce Department said Thursday.

The leading-indicators index advanced by 2.2 per cent in December, and the November increase, originally reported at a weak 0.2 per cent was actually a respectable 0.9 per cent, the department said.

The government says that the index, compiled each month, is a good gauge of whether the economy is ready to move up or down.

Asst. Commerce Secretary Harold C. Passer said the December report and the November revision point to a "year of strong economic gains."

Passer said the indicators dealing with employment were the most encouraging.

The indicator of the average work week increased by 0.5 per cent and unemployment insurance claims, 11.6 per cent. An increase in the unemployment insurance claims indicator means fewer claims are being filed.

"These two labor-market series strengthened in the closing months of 1971, in contrast to a lackluster showing earlier in the year," Passer said. "This turnaround may well be signaling a significant reduction in unemployment in 1972."

While the indicators for employment may have been strong, those dealing with business investment were not, indicating that this is still a weak area of the economy.

Four of the eight leading indicators increased and 4 declined.

These declining were indicators for new orders for durable goods, contracts and orders for plant and equipment, industrial materials prices, and the price-labor cost ratio.

Improving, besides the average work week and unemployment insurance indicators, were those for building permits and stock prices.

"The increases were all substantial while the declines were small," Passer said in explaining why the index rose so strongly.

He added that a revision of all the 1971 figures showed the indicators rose more strongly than reported earlier, mainly to reflect upward revisions in the profits of companies.

LBJ Favors Six Year Presidential Term

POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y. (AP)-A skyjacker was killed by an FBI agent with a point-blank shotgun blast Thursday while attempting to flee a Mohawk airliner with $20,000 cash ransom and a stewardess as hostage.

The latest incident of air piracy began at 6:30 p.m. Wednesday when Heinrick von George, 45-year-old jobless father of seven children, commandeered a twin-engined propjet as it approached New York's LaGuardia Airport from Albany. The pilot was forced to land at Westchester County Airport near White Plains, where the 42 passengers were allowed to deplane.

The mounting drama ended 10 hours later, when an unidentified FBI agent poked a shotgun into a getaway car that Von George had ordered at Durchess County Airport here. The agent was quoted as saying Von George screamed, whirled behind the wheel and fired a gun. A retaliatory shotgun blast killed him instantly.

The stewardess in the seat beside the hijacker-pretty, blonde Eileen McAllister, 35, was not injured. In the car was a duffle bag into which the $200,000 ransom had been stuffed.

Ironically, Von George had nearly pulled off his desperate air ransom scheme with nothing more deadly than a normally harmless starter's pistol. What he had florished aboard the plane as a bomb turned out to be two water-filled army canteens, wrapped in a blanket.

Before Von George's death, a small posse of FBI men, plus other law enforcement officials had been mobilized against him. Even the pilot and copilot of the plane were better armed than the skyjacker. On the ground at White Plains, the FBI had slipped pistols to them through a cockpit window.

But the aura of deadly menace that Von George succeeded in imparting lingered briefly even after his death. The FBI agent yanked the stewardess roughly from the car as he fired the shotgun, mindful of the skyjacker's threat that his "bomb" would go off were he shot.

"I feel fine, just glad to be here," was Miss McAllister's reaction after her ordeal. At one point, the hijacker had said he was going to make the New York City stewardess parachute with him while the captured airliner was in flight.

"She played it very cool, dealing with this maniac," another FBI man said admiringly.

Hijacking Ends In Tragedy

WASHINGTON (AP)-Former President Lyndon B. Johnson favors limiting chief executives to a single term of six years.

Johnson made the statement in a filmed hour-long interview with correspondent Walter Cronkite for broadcast over theColumbia Broadcasting System Thursday night.

Johnson argued that if a president knew that "he had to get everything through in six years" and need not worry about getting re-elected, it would probably "be in the best interests of the nation." But he wasn't too optimistic about chances of such a reform, which would require a constitutional amendment.

"I would like to see us try it," he said, "although I don't think we're likely to do it right now."

Cronkite, who chatted with Johnson in the LBJ Library in Austin, Tex., asked if Johnson meant to suggest that a first-term president must be governed in part by a desire to win re-election. Johnson said he thinks every public servant "has to think of that from the day he takes the oath until the time his term expires."

Cronkite also asked about the influence of campaign contributors on the people they support financially.

Johnson termed this "one of the most serious problems we have," and added, "I think every candidate for public office is beholden to groups and people with means."

He acknowledged that contributions influenced him to some degree "in practically every campaign that I've ever run." He went on:

"I don't guess it did much in '64 because I was President and it was not an expensive campaign for me and we had adequate funds."

Johnson said that Congress was better to me than they were to any other President I've known." And he described his vice president, Hubert H. Humphrey, as having done the best possible job. Humphrey, he said, "did a lot more work than he got credit for doing."

Johnson said that some well-meaning friends look back on his presidency and argue that he was misled by some of those around him. He said:

"Well, that's a lot of bosh, tommyrot. Nobody misled me. I don't recall a serious matter ever coming up that my people didn't give me both sides of it."

He said he considers himself personally responsible for all the major acts of his administration and feels President Nixon now bears similar responsibility.

ARVN Stumble Into Heavy Enemy Fighting

SAIGON (AP)-South Vietnamese troops stumbled on to a base camp occupied by a company of enemy soldiers in the central highlands, touching off on Thursday one of the sharpest battles since a North Vietnamese buildup began there two months ago.

South Vietnamese headquarters said 25 North Vietnamese were killed, 20 of them by air strikes, in the ensuing battle. The base camp was found 13 miles southeast of Tan Canh in the general area of the Ben Hot border base.

The number of South Vietnamese casualties was not disclosed, but Saigon headquarters reported five government troops were killed and nine wounded in scattered battles across South Vietnam in which it claimed 107 enemy soldiers died.

The Saigon command admitted it erred in reporting that four North Vietnamese tanks were destroyed in the central highlands, saying the vehicles actually were Soviet-built trucks.

But a field report later said one tank was in fact knocked out along with three trucks Wednesday.

The enemy buildup in the central highlands has officials predicting a North Vietnamese offensive there, probably next month.

In the other most significant battles reported Thursday, the South Vietnamese command said 20 enemy soldiers were killed near Cai Lay, a district town 45 miles south of Saigon in the Mekong Delta, and 22 others northwest of the capital.

The U.S. Command reported an American district adviser was killed in the Mekong Delta when a motorboat was ambushed by Viet Cong troopers hiding along the bank of a canal. The South Vietnamese district chief was also killed in the ambush.

The two were on an inspection tour of security posts in their district of Ba Xuyen Province.

The command also reported five American troopers were wounded by a booby trap on a security patrol 10 miles south of Da Nang in the north.

The five, members of the 196th Infantry Brigade, were patrolling less than a mile from their battalion headquarters when one of them stepped on the trap, a spokesman said.

Command spokesmen also announced the withdrawal of the U.S. Navy's only remaining helicopter attack squadron after five years in Vietnam.

The unit is Light Helicopter Attack Squadron 3, which has flown combat missions in the Mekong Delta. Also withdrawing, the command said, is the headquarters unit of the 101st Airborne Division's 2nd Brigade. The two withdrawals will reduce authorized troop atrength by 770.

In Saigon, Gen. William C. Westmoreland, army chief of staff, conferred with U.S. and South Vietnamese military officials of South Vietnam's 3rd military region. This region embraces Saigon and the 11 surrounding provinces.

Porter told the Communist side: "We would be willing, once there is an over-all agreement in principle, to begin implementing certain military aspects of the agreement, such as those affecting withdrawals and prisoners, while we continue to negotiate on other aspects.

"However, in connection with troop withdrawals, I wish to make it clear that although they could start on the date of the agreement in principle, they would not be totally completed before a final agreement on all aspects of the problem is signed."

Porter emphasized Nixon's plan was meant to be "as flexible as possible, so that we can speed the negotiations."

"We will endeavor to respond to any questions you may have or any clarifications you may seek with respect to the proposal, which is a serious attempt to meet those proposals already brought forward by your side," Porter said.

"In presenting this proposal, our purpose is to try to break the deadlock here. Please give this plan the careful attention it deserves."

Nixon Fund Raiser Stans Resigns Commerce Post

WASHINGTON (AP)-Secretary of Commerce Maurice Stans stepped down from the Nixon Cabinet Thursday, with the President's personal sendoff, to become chief fund-raiser for Nixon's 1972 re-election campaign.

The President simultaneously announced a reshuffling of two top White House Economic advisors to fill the gap:

—Peter G. Peterson, 45, of Chicago, a former president of the Bell & Howell Photographic Equipment Co., was picked as Stans' successor. Nixon said Peterson will carry on ideas he has been working on in his present post as executive director of the President's Council on International Economic Policy.

—Peter M. Flanigan, 48, a presidential assistant and a former campaigner for Nixon, who has specialized in economic and financial areas in the White House, was moved into Peterson's spot.

Nixon appeared with all three in the White House press room to make the announcements.

He did not specify Stans' new Republican role, noting that he has promised not to discuss partisan political matters until after the convention.

Stans' resignation is effective as soon as Peterson is confirmed by the Senate.

Stans' leaving the Cabinet came as "no surprise," as Nixon acknowledged, since it had been reported for a week that Stans would resume the campaign job he did for Nixon in 1968.

Nixon hailed Peterson as a young man who has been "remarkably successful" in business, has an understanding of world affairs, and could do "an outstanding job" in the Commerce Department.

Peterson said he will continue to look into improving America's competitive position and increasing its productivity.

Tobin, Library Near Finish

By DON POUTRY

Two of the three major construction projects in progress on campus are scheduled to be completed around the end of this semester so those of you who are sick of seeing the campus so torn up should get some relief next fall.

According to Bill Clark, the Superintendent of the new library for the contruction company, O'Connell and Sons, the building should be done about May first.

Rumors have been flying around campus concerning the substance which is being sprayed on the new library. It's not anti-gorilla spray, and it's not part of a germ warfare plot against college students. Clark says that it is simply water being used to wash off the bricks.

Workmen inside the building are involved in the last phase of construction, such as installing doors and laying tile and installing heat which only goes to the twelfth floor so far.

Clark says that his big problem right now is removing the crane from the top of the building. He says there are three possible ways of getting it down.

The first method is to lift it off with a helicopter. Second, the huge crane which was on the site earlier this year can be brought back to lift it off and lower it to the ground. Finally, the crane could be lowered to the ground by a "stiff-leg" derrick which would then be disassembled and brought down.

The new library will contain two "future floors." At present there is no second or fifth floor, but Clark says these may be put in later when the additional floor space is needed.

The other construction project which is nearing completion is the new psych building behind Bartlett. This building is being done by Fontaine Brothers, Inc., and Gene Roux, the superintendent, says that it is about ninety per cent complete. He expects the University to accept the new building in about four months.

As in the library, the workers on this project are involved in the last stages of the job.

The final project, which is also being built by Fontaine Brothers, Inc., is the new Fine Arts center. According to Mr. Spath, the superintendent, the building is now about forty per cent complete and should be finished by June first, 1973.

All the foundations have been put in, and concrete is now being poured for the main structures.

Tobin Hall and the new library will soon be completed, but the mud and the "hardhats" will be with us for a while longer with the Fine Arts Center. (MDC photo by Al Jagoda)

A.B.A. Proposes Modified No-Fault

WASHINGTON (AP)-A modified form of "no-fault" insurance for victims of automobile accidents was proposed Saturday by a special committee of the American Bar Association.

An injured driver or passenger would receive up to $2,000 to cover his medical benefits and loss of wages, regardless of who was at fault in the accident.

The payment would be made by his insurance company, without any legal action. All states, by law, would require insurance companies to include this "no-fault" provision in auto policies.

The committee, headed by Judge John T. Reardon of Quincy, Ill., said it recommended $2,000 as the cutoff for automatic payments since it would cover losses sustained by nearly 95 per cent of traffic accident victims. However, the states could pick a higher figure.

The Special Committee on Auto Insurance Legislation was set up by the ABA last May. Its recommendations will be presented to the ABA's policy-setting House of Delegates at a meeting in New Orleans next month. Formal action by the House would come next summer.

Auto insurance has been under consideration by the ABA since 1965, when two law professors, Robert E. Keeton of Harvard and Jeffrey O'Connell of the University of Illinois, proposed scrapping the current system of negligence suits in favor of a "no-fault" Under no-fault, motorists are compensated by their own insurance companies for accident losses no matter who was at fault. Versions of the plan are in effect in Massachusetts and Puerto Rico.

Indochina Aid Plan Exposed

WASHINGTON (AP)-The United States told Hanoi envoys in last year's secret talks that Washington would be willing to undertake a $7.5-billion postwar reconstruction aid program for Indochina of which up to $2.5 billion could go to North Vietnam.

In reporting this Thursday night, administration officials said this "illustrative" figure was given for a five-year U.S. economic-assistance program for South Vietnam, North Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos, once a peace settlement stops the fighting.

The aid concept was said to have been put forward by presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger last summer after North Vietnamese negotiators presented a nine-point war-settlement plan, one point of which called for reparations to North Vietnam.

Kissinger, who met secretly in Paris with Hanoi envoys, told a news conference Wednesday that the United States felt it could not in honor agree to a peace settlement which includes reparations. Payment of reparations, in the U.S. view, would imply an admission of guilt.

Kissinger went on to say:

"We did, however, tell the other side that while we would not include the reparations as part of the peace settlement, we could give and undertake a voluntary undertaking by the President, that there would be a massive reconstruction program for all of Indochina in which North Vietnam could share to the extent of several billion dollars."

Potential Berrigan Jurors Selected

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP)-Eight persons were selected as potential jurors Thursday for the conspiracy trial of the Rev. Philip Berrigan and six other antiwar activists.

The eight, who were questioned individually by the judge and opposing lawyers, join nine persons selected as possible jurors after questioning Wednesday.

Many of those in the original group called for possible jury duty in the trial have been dismissed for cause by U.S. District Court Judge R. Dixon Herman since the process of jury selection started Monday. No potential jurors were selected Monday or Tuesday.

Father Berrigan and the others are charged with conspiring to kidnap presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger in an effort to force an end to the war in Indochina. They also are accused of plotting to blow up heating tunnels under some buildings in Washington, D.C., and raid draft board offices in various cities.

The jury selection process is expected to take several more days.

Defendants in addition to Berrigan include a nun, two priests, a former priest and his wife, who is a former nun, and a Pakistani scholar.

Davis Firing Illegal

LOS ANGELES (AP)-The state Court of Appeals has declared unconstitutional the firing of Angela Davis from the UCLA faculty because of her membership in the Communist party.

Miss Davis is awaiting trial on charges of murder, kidnapping and conspiracy arising from a shootout Aug. 7, 1970, at the Marin County Courthouse.

In a decision Wednesday, two of the three justices upheld a summary judgment by Superior Court Judge Jerry Pacht in 1969.

The opinion cited previous U.S. Supreme Court and California Supreme Court decisions holding that mere membership in the Communist party cannot bar employment as a teacher.

The University of California board of regents discharged Miss Davis on Sept. 19, 1969, as an acting assistant professor of philosophy, in line with previous board resolutions that Communists were not to be employed.

After Pacht's ruling in October 1969, Miss Davis resumed teaching, but in June 1970 the regents refused to renew her teaching appointment on grounds she made "extreme" speeches which were "antithetical to the protections of academic freedom."

Of Friends And Lovers

I'm leaving the University. And today is my last day as the Editor-in-Chief of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, a position I took over just a year ago as a sophomore.

Now I'm traveling 10,000 miles to work on a newspaper in Tokyo, Japan. If things go well for me, I will spend a good part of my life writing from Japan. Its a fascinating country and I hope to provide some understanding to the American people about these critical times that the Japanese find themselves in.

For the past year I've found myself in about the most interesting position that I can ever imagine a kid, not yet 21 years old, could be in. I've had charge of a large daily newspaper, with a staff of about 70 people, and responsibility to a readership that numbers around 25,000. A person never knows what it's like until he's been through it, and if the person is as young as me, he will probably not know what was learned, what was the value, and what it all means, until he is far enough away to get his personal bearings straight again.

I can't, in this space, write anything that is personal enough and long enough to tell you, the reader, what the experience has been. This is the first time, I've set out in print to tell you even briefly something about myself and my times with the newspaper. Those of you who have followed the paper for the last 2-1/2 years, know something about the many things I have been involved in. The first story I wrote for the paper ended up on the front page. It was about the absolutely deplorable conditions in the Northeast area dorms. From that followed protests and heated arguments and eventually the improvement of conditions. I'm ending my career at UMass after riding out some of the continuing process of building up a new kind of University. The characters are different on top, an awful lot has happened in just the 2-1/2 years I've been here, but UMass is still basically the same place; a place of perpetual change that will always be the same.

When I was a freshmen, I found out that the newspaper here has a unique role. It is the only thing that continually tells the University what it is doing, what it is like, and it's the only medium for publicly discussing and influencing the workings of our community. Some freak of constitutional insight has given the responsibility for this paper to students who spend enough time here to understand things, and then graduate (or flunk out) leaving someone new to learn everything from scratch.

The newspaper can be anything that we crazy students want it to be. During my reign as editor, I have been threatened with at least four libel suits, none of which ever materialized. The newspaper has drawn the wrath of the local District Attorney (who isn't a bad guy, but is very sensitive to criticism). The first front page that I was accountable for depicted a Cambodian soldier carrying two severed Viet Cong heads. That young Cambodian's broad smile made many a breakfast sit uneasily. That was the way I had of saying, this is our world. I have written editorials about a hundred different things, each time trying to tell you want I was concerned about, and maybe what you should be concerned about.

But, all that is part of putting out a newspaper. And I have enjoyed it all, though sometimes it was tough putting in the long hours and hasseling with everyone who thought I shouldn't be doing what I was doing. Newspapers are conglomerates of lots of different people and I would say that the most rewarding part of my year as Editor was working with the people here in the newspaper office. They have made possible some of the best things that the Daily Collegian has ever done. I am proud of the people like Bob Nesti and Dave Williams who managed to put together a weekly magazine. I always wanted to see the paper do things like Poor Richard's (Richard is my first name, too!) and I take some satisfaction in being the first Editor ever to give fine arts a permanent and functioning role in the paper. My hopes for the future of the paper are for the people who take over after I leave. They will have to struggle to keep coming out every day. I hope they never compromise their values or the values that our society should have. There will be times when the printing of certain stories will make a big difference for everyone in this community. They will have to work hard to maintain your trust, the campus always being embroiled in some kind of controversy. My view has always been to give the reader everything that I as a journalist am able, to suffer the consequences, and learn with the rest of the community.

I leave the University, as I mentioned, to go to Tokyo. All the time I was here at UMass, I have studied Japanese and have developed an "individual concentration" major in Japanese and journalism. The government gave me a fellowship two years ago to study Japanese at Columbia University for a summer and I was at Middlebury College's School of Japanese this past summer. All of that studying has given me a slight edge in being able to use the Japanese language in my future work.

I got interested in Japan as an exchange student four years ago and I got involved in journalism in high school putting out an underground paper. Now I've put them together and will be working for the Mainichi Daily News, an English language daily in Tokyo. I'll also be writing a series on life in Japan for five New England newspapers. It is quite a curious feeling to leave the cacoon-like security of a University and start a whole new life in a country like Japan, even though I will probably return to UMass for a semester some time in the future.

I owe much to many people who I have known and almost known during my life at UMass. I have a great deal of respect for many here at UMass, people who have always shown themselves to be good people. I have learned much from knowing all of you, mostly about myself.

I can't say, as Oswald Tippo did last year at Convocation, that "I am a man without ambition." I am struggling with my life to find meaning in a topsy turvy world that offers little security beyond the confines of friends and lovers. I have chosen certain paths and shall make the best of what I am, but I will always be awed by all of the life that passes before my eyes.

In The Plague by Albert Camus there is a young journalist who finds himself caught in a hellish world, quite un-wittingly. He confides to the Doctor:

"It's so damn silly, Doctor, isn't it? The truth is I wasn't brought into this world to write newspaper articles. But its quite likely I was brought into the world to live with a woman. That's reasonable enough isn't it."

I always like that journalist.

I would hope that everyone pay attention to the lives of those around you. Somehow we all depend upon each other for everything.

Partridge Stands By The People

WASHINGTON--"Ladies and gentlemen:

"This is John Chancellor of NBC News and I am standing at the entrance of the Democratic National Headquarters here in Washington, D.C., with Larry O'Brien, chairman of the Democratic Party, as well as many other political dignitaries on what indeed is an historic occasion. We are gathered to honor the one millionth person to announce his candidacy for President of the United States on the Democratic ticket.

"The excitement has been building all morning. As you can see by the computer behind me, the Democratic candidates have been announcing on the average of 45 an hour.

"In just a few minutes the millionth candidate will walk through this door, and he will be in for many surprises.

"There goes the computer--999,996....999,997....999,998...999,999....ONE MILLION! And here he comes--the man who is the one millionth candidate to announce he will run for President of the United States on the Democratic ticket!

"There is bedlam here in the lobby. That cheer you just heard came from volunteer workers. And now, as you can see, the millionth candidate is being surrounded by the Democratic Party dignitaries, who are congratulating him and slapping him on the back. Let me see if I can get my microphone in here and talk to him. Excuse me, please. Excuse me, please. Can the TV cameras get in, please? Thank you, thank you...sir, what is your name?"

"Archibald Partridge IV, of Cranberry Falls, Kan."

"How does it feel to be the one millionth Democratic candidate to announce for the Presidency of the United States?"

"Well, it certainly came as a surprise to me. When I left Cranberry Falls two days ago there were only 897,564 announced candidates and I really didn't think I was near it. But my wife Elsbeth said, 'If we drive by way of New Jersey you could have a chance.'"

"Sir, could you tell us why you have announced for the highest office of this land?"

"I want to give the people of this country a choice. The other 999,999 Democratic candidates are all saying the same thing. I feel the people want new ideas, new innovations and new leadership. They are sick and tired of the rhetoric and old formulas. Patridge stands for the people."

"Are you going to run in the primaries?"

"All of them. The polls indicate I have a very good chance to take New Hampshire, Florida, Wisconsin, California and Indiana, providing the voters split between the other 999,999 candidates."

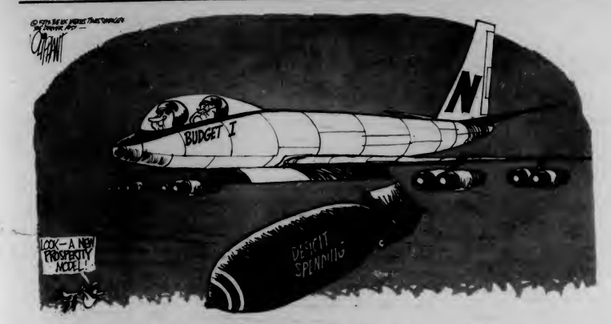
"Thank you, sir. Mr. O'Brien is about to make the presentation. Let's listen."

"Mr. Partridge, on behalf of the Democratic Party it is a great honor for me to welcome you as the one millionth 1972 presidential candidate. To show our appreciation I would like to present you with a $25 check.

"I also am presenting you with this prepaid airline ticket which entitles you to one round-trip flight on the shuttle between Washington and New York.

"Furthermore, to show our gratitude we are giving you this $10 bag of dimes so you can make 100 local telephone calls to launch your nationwide campaign.

"That isn't all, Mr. Patridge--the Democratic Party takes care of its own. Here is a gift certificate which entitles you to one bucket of Kentucky Fried Chicken in any state where you choose to run..."



"Ladies and gentlemen, as you can see Mr. Partridge is speechless. His wife is crying and even Mayor Daley has a tear running down his cheek. This has indeed been a day that will long be remembered in American political history. This is John Chancellor in Washington. Now back to our studios in New York...."

Chairs

Chairs are for more than sitting and thinking.
So much, now, has to go into everything we do.
I sat and thought, in my big, soft, thinking machine.
And they sat in theirs.
But all they thought of was how to make more chairs;
And how to make different chairs.
Some, even, how to teach the art of chairs.
Complications of production - more efficient minds.
And they always need some damned equation - or explanation, and they always find
Some need for a hundred completely unrelated, and useless, facts.
I can't even sit in a chair without causing a thousand Tiny Minds to start ticking like clocks.
I think I'll go to Penny Lane.

Letters To The Editor

Dreary Frozen Wasteland

To the Editor:

Along about this time of year UMass turns into dreary frozen wasteland. If you've ever thought of leaving for a semester or two, there's a program you should be aware of called the Domestic Student Exchange Program. It's designed for people who would like to take courses at universities in other areas of the United States. The Universities of Alabama, New Mexico, Idaho, Hawaii, and about 10 other schools participate. Out of state tuition is waived and credits are transferred without any hassles. Up until recently, few people knew that the program even existed.

This is my second semester at the University of Alabama. Besides warm weather and great football, 'Bama offers a chance to see the new South. New Orleans, Atlanta, and Florida are all relatively close. Contrary to rumors, the South is not a land of shotgun toting rednecks. It is, however, a totally different academic and social environment. I'm writing this letter in the hope that those of you who are dissatisfied with UMass will have the opportunity to see how other people talk and act in other parts of the country.

Anyone interested in going in the fall or spring semesters should get in contact with the coordinator of the program, William Loder, in the Registrar's office. I hope others will take advantage of the

It's Only Right

To the Editor:

I recently found out that the weight room in the Women's Physical Education Building will not be open this semester for student use as it was last semester Monday through Thursday from 7 till 9 p.m. This news angered me to no end. I am a distance runner and used that weight room on the average of twice a week; it is an integral part of my training program. I pay an athletic fee and expect to get something in return. Must every last cent go to support mens' athletics? I'm sick of being ignored and pushed out because I'm a woman. I demand that the weight room be reopened for general use. It is my right and the right of every woman in this school!

Do You Care?

To the Editor:

About five months ago, I sent a letter to this column requesting that people take an interest in their University by participating in the student government here. The response was surprisingly strong; the Student Senate received an interested and hard-working group of new Senators.

It is now second semester, and due to the normal attrition rate and an unusually high number of transfers, the Senate again is in need of new people. There are 42 vacancies-40% of the entire Senate. If you have some free time, why not drop down to the Senate office (first floor of CC). If you have an interest in change, then run for the Senate. We are just beginning budgets, and that is something that affects us all. Again, as in September, all I ask is that you care.

John Hogan, Vice-President
Student Senate

Letters To The Editor

As in previous years the MDC will continue to print letters to the editor. The only requirements are that they be typed at sixty spaces, double-spaced and absolutely no longer than two pages in length. All letters must be signed and the author's address and telephone numbers must be included. No letter will be published without this information. Also, no letters will be printed without the name of the author. Please note this change in policy.

All letters are subject to editing either for content or space according to the judgment of the editors. Also, due to space limitations, we do not guarantee that all letters will be printed.

Thanks From Nam

(Ed. note-The following letter was received from Pfc. Jim Binz who is stationed near Saigon and refers to the Christmas packages sent by the Vietnam Veterans Against the War. Kathy is a resident of Knowlton House who donated some brownies.)

To the Editor:

I wanted to write and say "thank you" for thinking of me. I don't know who Kathy is...but you sure make some great brownies. Just right for curing the "munchies". Anyway, Christmas in Nam is kind of a bummer. I have to work and that's a drag. All in all though, I'm really glad I joined VVAW. It's given me some new outlooks on this place. I've always been pretty down on Nam...but that's because I'm a non-violent pacifist and I'm down on war altogether. Anyway, thanks again for the cards and brownies and I hope to meet all of you someday. I plan to see Boston after E.T.S. if it's the last thing I do. I hope you can read this 'cuz it's 2:00 in the morning and I'm pretty stoned.

Peace,
Jim

Reading Comprehension Test-Part I

By JAN VILLANOVA

I commute fifty miles in the morning three times a week for an eight o'clock class. I don't get home until seven at night because of a three-thirty two hour class. There are some students on campus who live in a dorm, and their first class doesn't start until two in the afternoon.

I park my car in the F lot because anywhere else and I'd get a ticket. It's at least a fifteen minute walk to this eight o'clock class, sometimes twenty, if I have too much to carry. All this and conceivably more, and it isn't even winter yet.

TOPICS TO CONSIDER and THINGS TO DISCUSS

(a) Consider the obvious inequities of student scheduling with the emphasis on those who commute versus those who do not.

(b) Discuss the lack of control on who parks where, and consider the abuse of parking privileges in general.

QUESTIONS TO ASK

Is commuting necessary?

Are there buses running on campus?

Do you think a bicycle would help?

Do the advantages of commuting outweigh the disadvantages? If not, what is your philosophy regarding car pools?

Is getting a ticket really all that bad?

What are the socio-political implications in owning your own car?

Is going to college worth getting a ticket?

And finally, where would you go and who would you see to have the entire matter straightened out?

These questions are to aid you in evaluating your own response to this reading test. I have also included a random sampling of how others have scored nationally. The following results are for Part I only, and they are based on this national average:

SAMPLE TEST RESULTS based on the AVERAGE NATIONAL RESPONSE

Non-Commuting Students: If you think you've got it rough, imagine eating at the Dining Commons like we have to.

Nature: The basic law of social existence is that a lot of people have the same problem, so what's the gripe. The law states if more than one person has the same problem it is no longer a problem, but a fact of life. Learn to live with it. Others do.

Commuting Students: We agree with you one-hundred percent, and we'd like to help, but so far we haven't run into the problem. If you ever need a ride let us know. Besides, it's only for two more years and then you can look back and laugh about it.

Campus Police: Look friend, we're just doing our job.

Politicians: It's quite possible you have a good point there. But are you really in a position to evaluate the current system? After all, you are in college for the purpose of learning our democratic process and the ways to apply it. We feel as a student you are not equipped to handle the complex problems occuring within or without the academic community, at least not until you graduate, which of course lets us know you have been liberally educated and are now ready to be qualified as a citizen. It's simply a matter of priorities.

Counselors: Perhaps if you changed your Major and matriculated in a program that would concentrate on your problem.

Parking Attendants, Janitors and Staff Personnel: As long as you have a sticker, I don't understand the problem; I just work here; and, have you tried down the hall?

Faculty: If you're late for class or can't make it all together, I can understand. However, I must grade accordingly. And you know I'd like to help you, but quite frankly, I can't afford to jeopardize my position. Have you tried a Faculty/Student meeting, where they rap about things like that?

Advisors: Have you talked to anyone else?

Anyone Else: Have you been to so-and-so or talked to what's his face?

Construction Men: Listen buddy, you're the one who wanted an education, so figure it out. Our advice is to take some bad with the good for a change. Otherwise get a job and then your problem is solved.

Friends: It sounds like a rip-off. Hey, how'd you do on your Psyche test? We got an eighty-seven. Question fifteen was a real bummer.

Parents: We told you it wouldn't be easy; now you know what it's like raising kids and working hard. If you had listened to your father and I, you'd be all done with school and married and give us a grandson.

Government: We're doing the best we can-anything else would be Socialism. We had hoped you'd be satisifed with the G.I. Bill. Apparently you're not. After all, you did serve your country and it's only fair. Other than that, we can't see how we can be of any help-it's out of our jurisdiction.

Priests: God understands. He knows how hard it is to live a good and decent life. I'm sure he would want you to continue suffering so that you can say that you, too, have truely sacrificed. Love thine enemy, for it is he who will suffer come judgment day. God Bless.

Sign Language Courses Offered

For the first time in the history of the University, courses in sign language for the deaf will be available to the entire student body on campus. Formerly, such sign language classes were offered only to those students enrolled in the Media Specialists for the Deaf program. The immediate objective of these courses will be to provide an introduction to a system of manual communication frequently used by a majority of the deaf population.

Sign language in its purest form has been in use since Adam and Eve. From obvious gestures and dramatic pantomines to a highly developed system of signs, the language of signs encompasses numerous ways for one to communicate with others. For example, it is well known the American Indians utilize a graceful, beautiful system of signs, as do various Australian Bushmen tribes. But even in our world of modern technology, we still find the need to incorporate signs in our language. There's the football referee who signals a penalty for a player -- or the T.V. crewman who signs that a commercial is forthcoming. Signs, then, are a necessary form of communication.

The deaf, in the U.S., constituting about 5-10 percent of the total population, use the sign language as an expressive art of talking. In daily conversation, the deaf use speech, signs, fingerspelling, and facial expressions--all to convey thoughts and ideas. Since the sign language is the mode of communication frequently used by the deaf themselves, they are highly appreciative of the effort exerted by their hearing friends and relatives to converse with them using the language of signs. Unfortunately, only a small percentage of their normal-hearing peers have undertaken to learn this "foreign language". The University of Massachusetts, then, by offering sign language courses available to everyone for modular credit, hopes to begin in a small way to eliminate this barrier in deaf communication.

These sign language courses will be taught by two very capable instructors employed in the Northeast Regional Media Center for the Deaf program. Mr. Stanley Patrie, a deaf person, has taught deaf children for a combined 32 years. He is a staff assistant involved in the preparation of transparencies to be used by the schools for the deaf. Mrs. Maxine Brown, a recent addition to the staff, is a daughter of deaf parents and is a registered professional interpreter. Her education and past experiences has revolved around working with the deaf.

Numerous methods will be used to instruct the sign language--by the use of videotapes, transparencies, and 8mm cartridge projectors. The classes will probably be available on Wednesdays and Fridays twice a week. The times of each class session will be arranged with the instructors, Mrs. Brown or Mr. Patrie at 545-2455. Registration will take place from now through Feb. 2. Classes will begin February 4.

Undergraduate Course Listings

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The Collegian is listing the following courses as a service to its student readers. For further information contact the department which offers the course, NOT the Collegian.)

Cambridge Waitresses Form Union

CAMBRIDGE, (LNS)--All women have been waitresses at some point in their lives--serving dinner to husbands, parents, brothers and sisters. But the woman who must waitress for a living faces some of the worst working conditions that women workers have. Her salary is kept low by her boss on the grounds that she can live off customers' tips. She is constantly rushed, yelled at, insulted--and she can't talk back--for customers will only tip her if she is smiling and efficient.

Waitresses in the Harvard Square area of Cambridge, Mass. recently began to fight against those conditions by trying to organize an independent, local union. The women are demanding an increase in the minimum wage from $.96 to $1.35 an hour; sick pay; overtime pay; breaks; maternity leave; cab fare for women working past midnight; an end to waitress responsibility for customers who walk out without paying their bills; and an end to harassment by customers and management.

At one restaurant, Cronin's, women picketed from Dec. 9 to Dec. 13. Because most customers didn't cross the picket line the women were able to force the management to recognize them as members of the Harvard Square Organizing Committee. (The official AFL—CIO waiter-bartender union has done virtually nothing to help waitresses, and most women, including the waitresses in Cronin's, don't belong to it.)

The waitresses have been negotiating with Cronin for over a month and although he has let the women have a place to sit in the restaurant, and given them the $1 cab fare for women working past midnight, he refuses to budge on any of the essential contract demands. The women are trying to negotiate again but as this is not expected to work, they will probably be out on strike again.

After the initial success of the Cambridge women, waitresses at Jack and Marion's -- a Boston restaurant -- wore "I Support the Union" buttons to work. Immediately, eight women were fired. After picketing outside the restaurant, five waitresses were reinstated.

The Harvard Square Waitresses Organizing Committee is confident that eventually they will win their contract demands at Cronin's. Their next move will be to fight for recognition and a contract at Jack and Marion's, as well as to get the three waitresses who were fired, reinstated. This will take a court case, to prove that the women were fired for trying to organize a union. The Harvard Square Waitresses Organizing Committee has received calls from waitresses all over who want to join the union or start their own.

Guerrillas Hit CIA Base

(LNS) Radio Pathet Lao announced it with joy. After years of battling the CIA beneath the densest barrage of bombs in history, Laotian liberation forces seized control of the CIA's major base at Long Cheng, 80 miles north of Vientiane, the capital of Laos. The seizure lasted a day or two in mid-January, long enough to provide a graphic example of the new upsurge of revolutionary forces in Indochina that has been nearly blacked out by the American press.

For the Pathet Lao guerrillas, it is a victory without precedent. The Plain of Jars, 30 miles northeast of the base, has changed hands between the Pathet Lao and the CIA's mercenary bands four times in the last two and a half years. But never before has the CIA's nearby headquarters been overrun. So embarrassing is this recent defeat that U.S. spokesmen in Vietiane refuse to admit that it happened, yet D.E. Ronk, reporting for the Washington Post, confirms the Radio Pathet Lao report.

Ground fighting in Laos is seasonal -- liberation forces advance in the dry season and retreat in the rainy season. But all over Laos this year, the Pathet Lao are covering ground faster and getting farther than in the past.

Stiff Security Surrounds Soledads

SAN FRANCISCO (LNS)--it's "acceptable, modern transportation" said Judge S. Lee Vavuris referring to the helicopter that now carries John Clutchette and Fletta Drumgo, the two remaining Soledad Brothers from their cells at San Quentin to trial in San Francisco's Hall of Justice. The two men are kept behind a steel screen with guards all around them. Their wrists, waists, and legs are in irons and although they are provided with parachutes and life preservers, their chains prevent them from ever being able to use them if they had to.

These latest bits on security were gleefully leaked by officials Jan. 19 despite a feeble ruling by Judge Vavuris forbidding the release of any information on security systems since it instilled fear of the Soledad Brothers in the minds of the jurors. So far the prosecution has been unable to present any evidence to link Clutchette and Drumgo with the death of Soledad guard John Mills in Jan. 1970. Recently their tactic has been an allout effort to create a media image of the Brothers as "dangerous murderers" in order to prejudice the jury. The chains and steel screen fit right in with that campaign.

In front of the press Jan. 19, Vavuris commented that the Brothers' conduct in prison warranted the special security procedures. When asked for specifics by the defense, he replied provocatively "Remember December 14" but would not explain what he meant by the remark.

During a heated objection argument from the defense, Vavuris justified the news lead by saying that "you can't keep things like this quiet in an enlightened democracy", and talking about an "open trial".

Floyd Silliman, Clutchette's attorney accused Vavuris of wanting an "open trial" only when it was favorable to the prosecution and was immediately cited in contempt of court--the first since the trial began three weeks ago.

Pianist To Give Concert

Pianist William Masselos will present his first concert as the first pianist to be appointed Florence Purington Visiting Lecturer at Mount Holyoke College on Wednesday, the first day of the College's second semester, at 8:15 p.m. in Chapin Auditorium.

Performing some of the works that have moved NEW YORK TIMES music critic Harold Schonberg to hail him "as good a pianist as this country can show," Mr. Masselos will begin his academic post with a program that includes "Sonata in C Major" by Brahms, Schumann's "Kreisleriana," and "Piano Fantasy" by Aaron Copland.

Masselos comes as no stranger to the College community. His first appearance in 1958 as guest soloist in the Arts in Performance Series attracted the attention of Mrs. John M. Warbeke of South Hadley, and he was invited back to perform in the John Martyn Warbeke Memorial Concert series in 1960. He later returned to Mount Holyoke in 1969 and 1970 under the auspices of the Artist Recital Series. He has scheduled two other recitals during his second-semester visit to Mount Holyoke.

A native of Niagara Falls, N.Y., Masselos is a graduate of the Juilliard School of Music where he studied piano under Carl Friedberg. Since his debut at the age of eighteen in a solo recital at Town Hall in New York City, he has been guest soloist at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the Guggenheim Museum, and Kaufman Auditorium. His recent performance at Carnegie Hall in a marathon 3-1/2 hour solo recital won for him the praise of a NEW YORK TIMES reviewer who acclaimed him "a first rate pianist with control of nuances, singing line, and warm-blooded rhythmic feeling" with "virtuosity to burn," but "always at the service of the music."

Masselos has made orchestral appearances with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra under the baton of Leonard Bernstein, the Montreal Symphony Orchestra with Otto Klemperer, the American Symphony Orchestra with Leopold Stokowski, and the London Philharmonic Orchestra at Carnegie Hall with Haitink.

Pianist-in-residence at the University of Indiana from 1955-56 and at The Catholic University of America from 1965-68, Masselos has been a member of the teaching and performing faculty of the Aspen Music Festival since 1967. Recipient of an honorary Doctor of Music degree from Hamilton College in 1971, he has been awarded a Barth Foundation Fellowship and was commissioned to arrange Ben Weber's "Piano Concert" under the auspices of the Ford Foundation Program for Concert Artists, which he performed in 1960-61 with the New York Philharmonic and with San Antonio and Houston, Texas, orchestras.

The Florence Purington Lectureship has brought many eminent teachers and scholars to the Mount Holyoke campus since it was founded in 1946, including poet W. H. Auden, historian Geoffrey Brunn, philosopher Bertrand Russell, and architect R. Buckminster Fuller. The chair was established by Mount Holyoke alumnae in memory of Florence Purington, a graduate of Mount Holyoke Seminary in 1886.

Masselos' concerts are free of charge, and the public is cordially invited to attend.

Ashbrook Goes To High School

CLAREMONT, N.H. (AP)-Rep. John M. Ashbrook, R-Ohio, said Thursday he believes a general amnesty for military deserters and draft evaders would not meet the test of equal treatment under the law.

Campaigning for the March 7 New Hampshire presidential primary, Ashbrook told a Claremont high school group that if he were president he would not favor "across-the-board amnesty."

Ashbrook, who is leading a challenge to President Nixon, said that after the war a president could consider alternate ways of dealing with deserters and draft evaders.

But, he said, if such people acted on the basis of conscience, they should be "willing to accept the reasonable consequences of their action."

To offer a general amnesty to those persons while others have served, he said, would not meet the test of equal treatment under the law.

Ashbrook commented in reply to a question from a pupil who said draft evaders were avoiding "an unjust war." The congressman said, "Whether or not it's a totally unjust war, I think history will have to decide."

Ashbrook also expressed reservations about the women's liberation movement. He said his observations are based on the belief that an effort to take away all legal distinctions would cost women laws which properly provide for their benefit and protection.

"In the desire to make everything equal," he said, "they may get more than they want." He said he does not think the proposed women's rights amendment to the constitution would accomplish much.

Asked if his campaign might split the Republican party, Ashbrook said, "The question is 'What price unity?' 'Should unity be on principles or on individuals?' "

He said the proper course is for the Republican party to unite on priniciple and then consider individuals for candidates. "If there is divisiveness in the Republican party," he said, "it's because the President has not lived up to his promises made in 1968."

Benefit For Refugees

The Unitarian Society of Amherst, 121 North Pleasant Street, will sponsor a Rice and Tea Luncheon on Saturday, for the benefit of Bengladesh refugees.

The simple meal, symbolic of a refugee diet, will be served continuously from noon to three o'clock. The donation for admission will be $1.00 for adults and 50¢ for students and children. Proceeds will be sent to Bengladesh through Oxfam America, Inc. and a collection box for blankets and children's clothing will be placed in the foyer of the church. Babysitting will be provided in the lower level Sunday School room.

The program will feature Raj Jain who will sing songs of India. Miss Jain, a senior at Smith College, will accompany herself on the tanpura. Also performing will be Mike Gramlich of Greenfield. Recorded music by Ravi Shankar, slides depicting the refugee situation, a film on food distribution, and a photographic exhibit will fill out the program.

Free Concert At Smith

On Tuesday, at 8 p.m., the Smith College Department of Music will sponsor a program of music for chamber orchestra in Sage Hall, at Smith College .

The program will include the following works: The Overture to "Medea" (1797) of Cherubini (1760-1842); Luigi Boccherini's (1743-1805) "Concerto #2 in D for cello and String Orchestra", which will feature John Sessions of Smith College as cello soloist; and "Symphony #92 in G, the 'Oxford'" (1788) of Franz Joseph Haydn (1732-1809). Participants in the concert will be musicians from the five-college area, and the conductor will be Miss Daisietta Kim (Smith '72), a music major from Fresno, California. Miss Kim studies voice with Miss Dorothy Stahl, and conducting with Miss Iva Dee Hiatt, both members of the music faculty at Smith.

The concert will be open to the public free of charge.

Debate Teams Win 4, Lose 8

Two UMass Debate teams had a composite 4-8 win loss record in the Vanderbilt Invitational Debate Tournament in Nashville, Tennessee just before the start of this semester.

One team, consisting of Terry Hofmann, a Sophomore from Rochester New York, and Roger Legendre, a Junior from Leominster, went 3 and 3. They defeated Emory, Ohio State and Vanderbilt.

The other team, Senior Paul Lamarche of Worcester and Junior David McCaffrey of Leominster, defeated Houston Baptist while losing the other five.

The topic debated by both teams was "Resolved: That greater controls should be imposed on the gathering and utilization of information about U.S. citizens by government agencies."

The debate teams will participate in tournaments at Bowdoin, William and Mary and Harvard in the near future.

Oswego Grapples With Red

One probably wouldn't recognize the same wrestlers if he should happen to glance in the Boyden wrestling room. Amato is back, as tough as ever at 118, but has changed his style in the referee's position. Barry Godowsky has recovered from injuries sustained at Harvard and shows a new positiveness at take downs.

Biggest change is Clay Jester. The Dover, Del. veteran is pared down to his best wrestling weight, 142 lbs. and is ready to show what dropping 33 pounds can do for a performance. Chris Cadwallader has dropped from 167 to 158 and claims to feel more active and quicker on his feet.

A new entry to the lineup is Mike Duffy at 167. Mike sat out the first semester recovering from problems with his legs, but now looks very capable of holding down the weight class for UMass. Bruce Buckbee is still rough and ready at 177 and looks to continue to fine performance.

Carl Dambman is still fighting off the weight that he picked up over the break and seems a best bet to wrestle at Heavyweight as Chris Hodson is sidelined with a reoccuring shoulder injury.

Coming in to replace Carl at 190 is senior letterman Tom Callaghan. Tom has wrestled hard this year and is Carl's biggest opposition for the 190 berth and will do a very respectable job.

Many people are asking why UMass doesn't wrestle the more well known New England teams and stop bringing in outsiders? This is all part of Coach Barr's program to make the UMass dual match schedule the best in the East and that means going outside of New England and picking up teams like Oswego State University of the New York State University System. The wrestling world ranked Oswego thirteenth in the NCAA College Division at the beginning of the season and they still are a top rate team despite a shut out at the hands of Clarion State College of Pennsylvania. They have traditionally been the winners of the NYSU team championship and have long wrestled teams like Columbia and Army.

The "second season" opens tomorrow afternoon at 2:00 in Boyden Auxilary gym and it should bear out the real reason that the coach and team consider the first match of the Spring term the beginning of a second season. This is the fact that every year for the past few years the team has gotten tough and has won match after match going into the New Englands and has successively finished higher. The '72 "second season" is just about to begin and will it end with another New England title.? Come out and see how it starts and then decide for yourself.

Littler Leads Williams With 66

AP-Gene Littler birdied seven of eight holes in one stretch, fashioned a 66 and established a two stroke lead Thursday in the first round of the $150,000 Andy Williams-San Diego Open golf tournament. The 41-year-old veteran posted his six-under-par total early in the day before chilling winds sent afternoon scores soaring on the 7,011-yard Terrey Pines Golf Club course.

Among the afternoon victims of wind and cold were pre-tourney favorites Jack Nicklaus and Lee Trevino. Nicklaus, seeking his sixth victory in seven starts, had a 73 and Trevino was two over par at 74.

Littler, who had failed to make the cut in his last two starts, led by two over club pro Paul Harney, Jim Colbert and a 27-year-old Japanese longshot, Takashi Murakami, tied at 68.

A large group followed at 69. It included Tommy Aaron, Tom Weiskopf, Bunky Henry, Homero Blancas, Dale Douglas, Phil Rodgers, Hale Irwin and Bill Brask.

Of the leaders, only Brask, Colbert and Harney played in the afternoon when the winds kicked up and the temperatures dropped.

"It wasn't too bad when we went out," said Littler, a resident of nearby La Jolla.

"It was just too damn cold," said Trevino, a notorious hot-weather player.

"The chill factor made it such that you just didn't have any feel on the greens," said Nicklaus, who missed 10 putts inside 15 feet.

Billy Casper, fighting a heavy cold, had a 73 and Masters champion Charles Coody could only match par 72. Defending champion George Archer, this season's leading money winner, withdrew because of the flu. Arnold Palmer is not competing.

Littler had no complaints about the early morning weather.

"It was just beautiful," he said.

The slightly-built veteran, a former United States Open champion and a two-time winner last season, started on the back nine and took a three-putt bogey on the second hole he played.

Then he started his push, stroking an eight iron to within six feet for the first of five consecutive birdies on the 14th hole.

He ran in 20, 10 and 15-foot putts on the next three holes and just missed an eagle three on the 18th.

He parred the first hold, then birdied the second from seven feet and the third from 12.

"It's easily the best putting I've done in some time," said Littler, who needed only 28 strokes on the greens.

Tarkenton Traded Back To Minnesota

NEW YORK (AP)-The New York Giants of the National Football League traded quarterback Fran Tarkenton to the Minnesota Vikings Thursday for wide receiver Bob Grim, quarterback Norm Snead, running back Vince Clements plus two draft picks.

The Vikings, last season's National Conference Central Division champions, gave up this year's No. 1 draft pick and next year's No. 2 selection.

The trade returns Tarkenton to the Vikings. He was Minnesota's No. 3 draft pick in 1961, when the team began operations in the NFL expansion, then came to the Giants in 1967 in exchange for four draft choices.

The 1971 season was one of Tarkenton's poorest. He completed 226 of 386 passes for 2,567 yards and a 58.5 completion average and connected for 11 touchdowns. But he had 21 passes intercepted.

His career mark is completions on 2,075 of 3,797 passes for 28,599 yards, 216 touchdowns and 167 interceptions.

Gibron To Coach Bears

AP-Abe Gibron, an assistant Chicago Bear Coach since 1965, signed a multi-year contract as now head coach Thursday. He replaces Jim Dooley, who was fired after the Bears lost their five final games of the 1971 National Football league season.

Gibron, 53, a big, boisterous man who mingled freely with Bear players on and off the field, served as both line coach on offense and defense since joining the Bears in 1965 after five years as line coach for the Washington Redskins.

Owner George Halas, clearing the coaching decks before the start of the NFL player draft Tuesday, said that Gibron's contract was for an unannounced duration.

Gibron becomes the sixth head coach in the team's 53-year history.

Dooley, also a Bear organization man, was fired by Halas shortly after the Christmas holidays. The entire coaching staff, except Gibron, was also given its walking papers.

Dooley's dismissal followed a disappointing 6-8 record after the Bears compiled a moderately impressive record at midseason.

Frazier Defends Against Quarry

ALHAMBRA, Calif. (AP)-Heavyweight champion Joe Frazier has accepted a $500,000 offer to fight Jerry Quarry in late April or early May in Houston or Las Vegas, the Alhambra Post-Advocate reported Thursday.

Quarry will receive $250,000 for the fight, reported Dick Mastro, Post-Advocate boxing analyst.

Frank Callinan, a Los Angeles stock broker who also operates a night club in the San Fernando Valley, will finance the promotion, the newspaper reported.

Off-On; Big Ten Puzzle

OFF

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP)-University of Michigan basketball coach John Orr offered Thursday to postpone his team's Big Ten game Saturday with injury-riddled Ohio State.

At least a half dozen buckeyes are injured with Luke Witte and Mark Wager ruled out of action Saturday. The two suffered major concussions as a result of the game-ending brawl with Minnesota players and fans Tuesday night.

Meanwhile, Big Ten Commissioner Wayne Duke, continuing his investigation Thursday, promised newsmen to make "an announcement before Sunday."

Otherwise, Duke would not comment on the game called with 36 seconds to play. Ohio State was declared a 50-44 victory.

If Ohio State plays at Michigan Saturday, the Big Ten lead will be at stake. The Buckeyes lead with a 4-0 record. The Wolveromes are ttied with Minnesota at 4-1 for second place.

Orr told Fred Taylor, Ohio State coach, he would go to Michigan Athletic Director Don Canham and try to have the game rescheduled for one of two Tuesday open dates both teams have left.

Taylor was receptive to the idea, but said he would have to discuss it with Duke and Ohio State Athletic Director Ed Weaver.

Duke and Ohio State athletic director Ed Weaver devoted Thursday afternoon to viewing a video tape at Columbus station WLWC, the only station to televise the contest live.

Witte, 7-foot regular junior center from Alliance, Ohio, suffered a concussion and abrasions and bruises of the head after he was knocked down on a flagrant foul by Minnesota's Clyde Turner.

Wagar, a 6-8 reserve junior forward from Avon, Ohio, also has a concussion, cuts and bruises after being decked and beaten by Gopher fans and players.

Dr. Robert Murphy, an Ohio State team physician, termed the concussions major because of "interference with the normal brain function."

Mark Minor, a regular forward and the third Buckeye taken to the Minnesota University Hospital, resumed practice Wednesday.

ON

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP)-University of Michigan basketball coach John Orr denied Thursday night he had offered to postpone his team's Big Ten game Saturday with injury-riddled Ohio State.

Michigan Athletic Director Don Canham stated that the game between the schools would be played as scheduled.

Orr had been quoted as saying he had offered to postpone the game to an open date on a Tuesday later in the season.

At least half a dozen Buckeyes were injured and Luke Witte and Mark Wagar ruled out of action for Saturday with major concussions as a result of the game-ending brawl at Minnesota Tuesday night.

Officials stopped the game with 36 seconds to play and Ohio State was declared a 50-44 victory when fights between players and fans erupted.

Meanwhile, Big Ten Commissioner Wayne Duke wound up his two-day investigation and flew back to Chicago to make an announcement at 12 noon CST Friday.

Big Red To Roll, Says Coach

Columbus, Ohio (AP)-Sparky Anderson, his Big Red Machine remodeled into a sleeker, swifter Cincinnati baseball model, talks confidently about his club's 1972 pennant chances.

"If we don't win it," Anderson said Thursday, "somebody better be burning the fastest fuel in three years" in the National League's West division.

Pinned down, the Reds skipper flatly will not predict a pennant, saying only, "I promise you we'll make a comeback this year."

Cincinnati dwindled from a club record 102 victories and the 1970 pennant to a 79-83 record in 1971. The Reds won by 14-1/2 games two years ago. Last year they tied for fourth with Houston, 11-1/2 games behind the winning San Francisco Giants.

Injuries were the big reason, said Anderson, who is starting his third season at Cincinnati.

"Bobby Tolan was out for the year. Lee May missed the first three weeks of the season. Jim Merritt and Wayne Simpson were hurt," he said.

"And we kept a hand injury to Tony Perez real quiet. He jammed it in spring training. He just could not bold on to the bat with his right hand," Anderson added.

The Reds' lack of speed caught up with them in their first full season in spacious, artificial-turfed Riverfront Stadium.

"We knew we had to have speed even back in 1970," Anderson said, "but it's difficult to make a change after a pennant."

WMUA Sports Special

Tonight from Orr Rink Dan Kamal and Bill Ballou will cover all the action as the UMass skaters host Division II rival Vermont. Air time is 7:20 p.m.

Tomorrow night Marty Kelley presents "And Then Came The Friars"-a comprehensive look at the rise of the Providence College basketball program and the personalities the Redmen will have to contend with tomorrow night - that has made Providence one of the best programs in the east. This will be at 7:00 p.m. At 7:20 Kent Best and Kelley will begin coverage from the Cage of the UMass-Providence basketball game.

And on Sunday night Kelley will host hockey star Pat Keenan on "Sport Talk" at 10:00 p.m.

A big weekend of sports for WMUA, 91.1 fm, "The Voice of UMass Sports."

A Big Weekend...

Friars, Catamounts In Town

Sizzling P.C. At Cage Tomorrow

By EARLE BARROLL

Maybe Sports Illustrated is not as incompetent in rating collegiate basketball teams as some have come to believe it is. Prior to this season the experts of SI rated Providence College number nine in the country...And right now the Friars are as good as was expected, maybe better.

Tomorrow night, just three short nights after Providence stunned the nation with a big upset over Southern Cal. 70-66, the Friars will be at Curry Hicks Cage to open up the second semester against the Redmen with the tapoff set for 7:30 p.m.

It came as a shock to many, it came as a pleasant surprise to many, but it came in the form of a big "gulp" Thursday morning when the news spread across campus that P.C. had defeated the Trojans.

What made the win most impressive was the convincing manner in which P.C. was able to do the job on national TV, on the road. This increased the Friar winning streak to seven and also continued the P.C. dominance over "big" teams including other wins over Villanova and Niagara.

Providence in a couple of words is deep and awesome. They're big, well-balanced, tenacious on the offensive boards and a very powerful offensive machine.

Over the years Providence has been a team blessed with outstanding guards, Lenny Wilkins, Ray Flynn, the great Jimmy Walker and now the one they call "Ernie D", Ernie DeGregorio. Some polls had him as a third team all-American guard. His stock increased greatly Wednesday night when he controlled the entire show and threw in 28 points to boot.

His supporting case is what really makes P.C. awesome. Up front the Friars have Larry Ketvirtis at 6'11, Fran Costello at 6'7 and the marvelous one, Marvin Barnes, 6'9 and the fourth leading rebounder in the country. He is called by UMass coach Jack Leaman as one of the ten best players to ever play in New England.

Don Lewis, 5'11, is DeGregorio's backcourt mate and a noted defensive specialist. Providence has lost two games this season. St. Joseph's at the Palestra and Fordham at the holiday festival. The latter was due in the main to the absence of Lewis.

Now the problem is what to do with them? Here's what Leaman had to say: "As a team they create more problems because of their great size and depth. To stop them we'll have to use two or three different defenses during the course of the game. We have to stop DeGregorio with the ball and we have to keep Ketvirtis and Barnes off the boards. This will be a difficult task for us, but in no way will it be an impossible one."

Leaman went on to say that this was without a doubt the finest Providence team he's ever played since he's been head coach at UMass...and perhaps one of the finest teams anywhere he's played. "Their win over Southern Cal was a big one for New England basketball, not the East, which gets its share of publicity," he said. "If a New England team wins outside of this region it's a mistake and if they lose it's par for the course.

"But Providence went out and completely dominated one of the three best teams in the west and this says something for their program and basketball in New England."

One query that has popped up since the Southern Cal game is if P.C. will be down to earth by game time. Leaman didn't hesitate to say, "Knowing Dave Gavitt and the Providence basketball tradition, they'll be ready."

Now the Redmen, 9-4, and at home for the first time since December 14 when they nipped UConn. "It will be a great advantage being home," Leaman emphasized. "We're anxious to get home. We forgot what it's like to have the crowd behind you and we have missed the fans a great deal."

As for the team itself, "I'm very happy with the players," he said, "they're playing better defense, showing more poise on offense and selecting the better shots which has made me very optimistic."

Leaman plans to start Tom Austin at center. He'll be guarding Barnes. John Betancourt and Al Skinner will be at the guards. One of them will cover Ernis D. and either Peter Trow or Tom McLaughlin and Rick Vogely or Chris Coffin will be at the forwards.

Over the past two years the teams have split two games. Last season the Friars won at home, 72-71, when the Redmen missed three shots in the last 15 seconds. Two years ago at the Cage UMass triumphed 90-85 in the season opener, when a young sophomore by the name of Erving scored 28 points and grabbed 28 rebounds to lead the upset. Excitement with a capital "E".

It's the same old story once again. You had better get to the Cage early.

Skaters Host Vermont At Orr Rink Tonight

By BILL BALLOU

So you think you've had problems this past week with registration and course changes. So you think the food is lousy and you had to wait in line for 45 minutes to get your meal ticket. So you've got five eight o'clocks.

Well, pal, you're sitting pretty compared to hockey coach Jack Canniff.

What problems could he have you might ask. After all he is the coach of the number 1 team in Division II and still has yet to lose to a Division II opponent.

Just sit back and digest these goodies for awhile.

Item: The right winger who holds the school record for most career assists and is currently the third leading point scorer on your team has been undergoing tests for three days and they still can't find out what's wrong with him. You've got the biggest game of the season coming up and you might have to play it without Jack Edwards.

Item: Up until Tnursday you've had just an hour and a half of practice time and the practice you've called for that day might have to be called off because the zamboni has broken down.

Item: You've just beaten the school who lets you use their rink to play hockey in by a score of 15-1 and their hockey coach wouldn't speak to you after the game. You hope your next home game isn't played on the campus pond.

Yeah, Canniff has a lot of problems, but he's also got one of the best teams in New England so he jsn't about to alibi.

"No excuses. We play 'em one at a time and if we win, great, we can open up some daylight between us and them. If we lose, well, after the game is over you look for the next club and try to do your best against them."

Don't get him wrong, Canniff doesn't like to lose, but he's not one to panic when something unusual comes up.

"Sometimes after a game I'll wake up say three or four in the morning and say to myself- 'Maybe I should change this line around or do this and that' but I don't.

"I believe in making the least amount of moves possible."

Canniff's a man of his word and this philosophy has proven to be successful for him, especially over the past three seasons.

Three out of the four forward lines the Redmen employ have been together for two years and the results are obvious. The same combinations that beat Vermont in Burlington earlier in the season and took Amherst 15-1 will be on the ice when the Cats invade Orr Rink tonight.

The only possible exception to this might be the insertion of Bob Edwards as right wing on the Keenan-Reidy - Edwards line in place of his older brother Jack. Edwards has been with the JV's all season, but played in place of Jack against Amherst. He appears to be a good prospect and rated words of praise from JV coach Russ Kidd.

"Bob's a strong, smart hockey player who won't hurt you defensively either. He rates high as a take-charge type who can quarterback your club in your own zone."

Even if Jack doesn't play one thing is certain, and that's that the Redmen are facing a crucial game. Not only is this probably the toughest home game they've faced this year, but this one could very well determine who is the top seed in the Division II play-offs.

At the moment the Redmen are undefeated in divisional play and the Catamounts have lost but two. So as Canniff puts it: "We could kill 'em. If we beat them that means we've got no losses and they've got three. And with Bowdoin out of the picture (they're boycotting the play-offs) we could be sitting pretty. On the other hand if they beat us we've got a loss and they've got two and things are tight again."

Just then JV coach Russ Kidd yelled over, "Hey, Jack, did you see in the Globe where Jack Kelly says if UMass and Vermont were in Division I they could be fighting for the play-offs right now?"

Canniff kind of smiled.

"We'll see about that Friday night."

Grapplers Open Second Season

By JOHN BOCK

What makes the UMass wrestling team different from most other winter athletic teams? Perhaps it's the fact that the grapplers don't participate as a team in any holiday activities. Or maybe it's because they come back early and spend three days solid on nothing but wrestling. And then again it might be that after all the problems that a holiday break can do to a team, that same team can come back and wrestle one of the top College Division teams in the country.

This isn't to say that the team members were inactive during the holiday and intersession break. To the contrary they all wrestled in their high schools and most participated in a tournament some place. For instance, Dave Amato, 118-pounder, wrestled in the C.W. Post Tournament and took third place, losing only to the Naval Academy's top grappler, NCAA runner-up Tom Schuler.

But does this merit a "second season" for the grapplers? A quick review of the first season is in order. Worcester Poly Tech finished the end of the '71 season by being trounced 36-9. Two forfeits and two falls helped, and these came in the form of Dave Amato's 34-second pin and Carl Dambman's pin in the second period and his fifth of the year.

Freshman Dick Muri came off the bench, in his first varsity appearance of the year, to substitute for Russ Chateauneuf at 134 and turned in a very respectable performance with a 8-0 decision over his WPI opponent. Muri comes from Ashland where he placed second in the Massachusetts State Tournament.

Other wins were registered by regulars Steve Rome (9-2), Chris Cadwallader (7-1) and Bruce Buckbee (13-5) .

The win at least put the team in a hopeful mood for the memories of losses to the Ivy League (Harvard, Yale, and Columbia) Lock Haven and California State, far overshadowed the wins over UConn, MIT and WPI.

But a second season? For Coach Homer Barr and the team, that is exactly what they are preparing for. The losses are to be forgotten and only the rest of the schedule and the New England Tournament will occupy their minds.

"We have practiced hard and we are tough. We are going to show this when Oswego comes," said Coach Barr. "I think the attitude that was fostered during our intersession break will be a real help because we found out who was willing to work and who couldn't keep the pace."

Frosh Hoopsters Return To Court

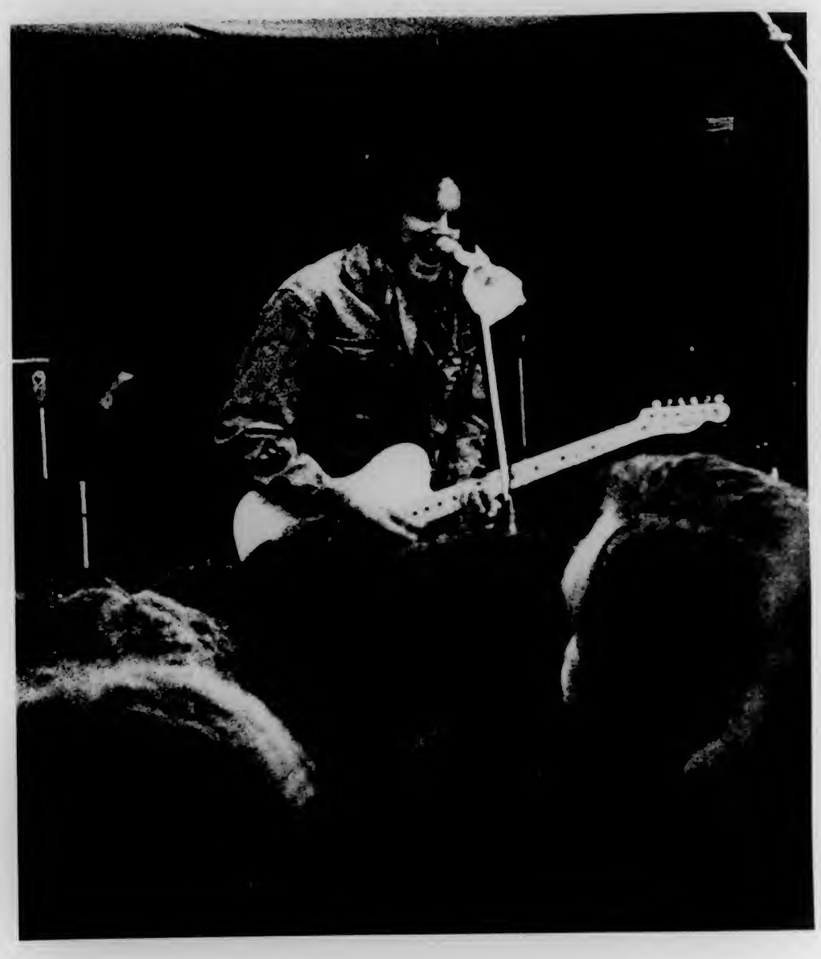
On December fourteenth, 1971, the UMass freshman basketball team defeated the Connecticut frosh 100-85, for their fifth victory against no defeats. Tomorrow night after a layoff of six weeks the frosh will be out to remember their winning ways against Bryant and Stratton. The game will be played at the Cage at 5:30.

The Little Redmen will start the same five players who started in the first five games. One change though is that Jim Burke will be starting in the backcourt and Mike Flanagan will be up front.

Over the first five games five players have averaged in double figures for the Little Redmen.

Center John Murphy leads the way with 26 points per game followed by Bill Endicott (16.6), Tom Gillams (15.8), Burke (13.8) and Flangan (10.6).

Gillams is the leading rebounder averaging 13.6 and Murphy is right behind at 13.4. Endicott although playing in the backcourt has averaged 8.2 rebounds per game. The Little Redmen have been outrebounding their opponents by an average of 19 rebounds per game.



Flanagan is the assist leader with 23 on the year. Endicott has 22 and Burke, playing forward, has 18.

Murphy is shooting 64% from the floor in helping the frosh shot 49% as a team. Gillams is shooting 54% and Endicott is shooting 47%. Burke has hit on 17 of 19 free throws (89% and Endicott has connected on 21 of 24 (87%).

The Continuing Saga of The Spring Concert

BY NATHAN GORENSTEIN

Whether or not to have rock concerts and what form they should take (if and when the powers that be decide in favor of such) is an issue that has been tossed around since the infamous Traffic concert of last year. It was briefly resolved when Seatrain, Boz Scaggs, et al, performed in the fields of Southwest last spring, but has returned again, still awaiting a solution that will put it in its grave once and for all.

Since the beginning of last semester the Concert Committee and the Administration have been meeting in an attempt to resolve their differences so the University will again be able to stage concerts involving high quality, well known groups.

Tuesday, at the next meeting between the Committee and the Administration, the Concert Committee will propose that a concert be held in Alumni stadium with a maximum of 20,000 and a minimum of 15,000 tickets available for purchase. Only members of the Five-College community would be eligible to buy tickets; and only upon the presentation of an ID could they purchase a proposed maximum of four. Once this total number of tickets have been sold, no other tickets will be available at the gate. Ticket price would be between three and five dollars.

At the present time the Committee has not signed any groups, and does not expect to until all plans for the concert are finalized with the Administration. Though various groups have been mentioned no contracts have been finalized nor have any verbal agreements been made. The limited period of time between the finalization of plans for the concert and the concert date inherently inhibits the number of groups the Committee will be able to choose from. The Committee feels some decision much be reached soon in order for them to contract their preferred groups.

As for security, campus police would be used mainly for directing traffic. In addition two police officers would be assigned to each gate along with two student "ushers". No police officers would be inside the stadium, those duties being performed by specially selected student marshals. The Committee also plans to have a staff of Room-To-Move people and trained medics on hand in the case of any medical-drug problems.

The Committee plans on no publicity

The Overthrow

To answer a friend's question: "Yeh. I got all the courses I signed up for." And the inevitable: "Now all I have to do is change about three of the five I got and add two" Bumping into the same long-haired friend later in the day he asked about my success with my schedule (labeling it "that great fascist vaccum-cleaner") and I told him of my problem with English 125, a problem that followed me from the past.

"Slaughter a lamb and read its entrails," my friend said. "Pick the section for the class using that age-old method." I told him what I thought of any age-old method, then decided to let this ages favorite method work its magic.. I let the computer decide, giving it one more chance.

Fall of '71. This is when the problem started. Howard O. Brogan. I slipped into a seat in the second row of Brogan's class. I was late and he leered at me while continuing on with his lecture. I slipped farther down into the seat and started to doze. "I killed them all", Brogan shouted to the blackboard (quoting Oedipus I discovered). As he shouted he wheeled to face an unsuspecting freshman and she cowered before him. Before falling into a deep sleep I reminded myself not to sit in the front row. The reminder was not needed as I dropped the course the following week.

Back in the present again--the "Spring of '72"--I told my greasy little friend that the one eternal verity of all English majors is that you just can't get away from English 125. And I told him about my earlier contact with English 125 and Howard O. Brogan.

"Brogan!", my friend exclaimed. "I read something about him in the newspaper."

"Oh, yeh? Some kind of award for hypnotising ten thousand head of cattle at one time, maybe?"

"No, no", he shouted. "Something about getting up in front of the Faculty Senate and ranting and raving about the University and how fucked up it is. He wanted to completely ignore the Trustees when it came to running the university, and included the students and faculty as a group for academic control."

I jumped up and swore that the computer would have no say in what section I was to be thrown into and ran off in the general direction of Bartlett Hall. On my arrival I discovered that Howard O. Brogan had moved up in the world of Commonwealth Professors of English--he now taught English 126. Well, I didn't give a shit about English 126 because English 126 would not fulfill the English major requirement (thank you Irma for giving me the lowdown on that) and by this time I had worked myself up into such a state over English 125 life would just be meaningless without it. So, I let the computer decide.

I slinked into room 205 of SBA and sat in the back of the room. This was my section of English 125 for this semester and I really looking forward to it, so I kept telling myself. Slinking in behind me was another Commonwealth Professor of English, Vernon P. Hemling. In a voice that sounded like it came from the bottom of a fifty foot pit he mumbled, "My name is Hemling, H-E-M-L-I-N-G. My christian name is Vernon, as in Mount. I have a middle initial that stands for Prentice." He handed out a syllabus that contained, among other things, the Articles of the Geneva Convention for the Treatment of Prisoners of War. It also contained the list of "masterpieces" we were to read.

I struggled through the class repeating to myself over and over, "There's no place like home, there's no place like home..." Right after class (where I come from it is affectionately known as "hard labor") I ran crying to Irma. She said, "Try Mrs. Edwards".

I had to wait until the next day to go to that particular class. On the way back to Southwest I bumped into my friend once again (he has nothing better to do all day but go around bumping into people). He turned around and we both headed back.

"Hey," he said, "You seem a little perturbed."

"Perturbed is a good enough word to describe what I seem", I told him. "I'm sick and tired of goddamn English 125 and the hassles involved."

"I'll tell you what we can do about it," he said with a strange twinkle in his eye. "We undermine the whole English 125 program by breaking into the Book Store and hollowing out all the books for that course and filling up the hollow with you-know-what! I know just the radical who will donate the "skata".

I looked at him and thought about his plan. A hitherto unknown surge of revolutionary blood pulsed though my veins and I shook his hand. We marched off in the direction of "bites and sucks" glancing to one side then another, then whispering to each other, our heads close together.

Vets Meet Vets In Springfield

Ever wonder what would happen when the Veterans of the previous wars were confronted from some veterans of the current war? Well, this happened recently in the lovely principality of Springfield where the local UMass chapter of the Vietnam Vets for Peace attended an American Legion Meeting. The results were, to say the least, sparked with excitement and occasionally heated words did fill the air more often than not. One of the Vets who attended writes his own account of the meeting and it would seem from the resulting article on page four that there is more than just a twenty year gap between the Veterans of the last war and our current police action.

How Can He Follow A Chimp Act?

Who is Captain Beefheart and why is everyone saying all those nice things about him? Well, a pretty good reason seems to have been his concert at the Fenway Theater in Boston last Friday night which Gary Gomes reviews on page 8 of this issue. Beefheart, a disciple of Zappa, put on quite a show and Gary's insightful review may initiate a trip to Springfield tonight to capture this gifted performer in his only local appearance. His touring company even includes a chimpanzee act and I ask you where else could you hear some great rock, see an impressive show, and watch the antics of some cute little chimps for a mere $2.50?

A Primer In Insanity

Remember the Chicago Seven? Remember Woodstock? Remember the Yippie? It all seems nostalgic now doesn't it, those three days of peace and music when all men were brothers, then came the repression when our brothers were arrested and tried for their misdoings in Chicago 1968. Yippie Leader Jerry Rubin was one of them and he has recounted his days in the Cook County Jail with not too lucid opinions of nearly everything in our culture in his most recent book We Are Everywhere. Frank Baglione gives this latest journal of counter-culture thought a sharp going over on page 5 where his review emphatically tells us this cultural revolutionary should limit his writing henceforth to spraypaiting walls.

With Much More In Store Besides

And that's not all. Poor Richard's may have shrunk in half this past week, but he's making the transition in good spirit. Just for starters there's Nathan Gorenstein's front page piece about the proposed Spring concert which is going through some typical administrative hassles. Thumbing forward you'll find our usual eclectic record reviews, this week taking on the latest from It's A Beautiful Day, the Kinks, Mr. Alice Cooper, and the teaming of Paul Kantner and Grace Slick. Films reviewed by Bob Nesti are Desperate Characters and Harold and Maude, the former of which shines with stinging honesty, the latter of which wallows in grisly sentimentality. And we initiate a new feature this week--A Crossword Puzzle designed to trouble your mind with all sorts of trivial details our puzzle-maker revels in. You" find this on page 11. Then way on the back, as always, is Weekend.

The Continuing Saga

outside the University community. While they realize that it is inevitable that word leaks out, they feel that it would be of little consequence and not have an adverse effect upon the concert. Also, there will be a clause in the contract of any group signed they do not advertise their appearance.

No final groups will be chosen until there is complete agreement between the Administration, the President of the Student Senate and the Concert Committee. The Concert Committee also plans to consult the entire University community to present the problems involved and ask for their suggestions and cooperation in solving them.

The main point of opposition from the administration (Director of Student Affairs Gerry Scanlon and Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs Robert Gage in this case) is that if the University holds a concert featuring well known groups, it would attract such a large number of outsiders that the crowd would be uncontrollable, irrelevant of whether or not the concert is free.

Gerry Scanlon, who has done most of the bargaining with the Concert Committee looks to what happened at Altamont and last summer's Newport Folk Festival as examples of what he fears would happen if such a concert was put on here. As he views it, people from outside the Five-College community would be the main source of any possible trouble. "Even if ticket sales were restricted to those with a UMass ID we would have a situation where students would buy them for their friends off-campus, plus the obvious possibility of gate crashers. If some one had nothing better to do for a weekend they may well decide to come up here. If there is the publicity as the Senate wants, you are bound to attract outsiders who have no stake in the University, who won't have tickets and will want to get in."

Scanlon also used the example of what happened at the Traffic concert last fall as a basis of his fears. Even though there were 1,000 tickets left unsold for the first show, "people just thought it would be easier not to pay. The dope and the drinking took effect."

Neither does he feel that the Concerts committee proposal that outside police forces be hired for the day is viable. "The campus police at full strength can raise 25 men, but that is not enough. As for being able to take police from the surrounding communities, that would be unlikely. If you have a group of 20,000 odd people descending on this area the local police forces are first going to be concerned with their own towns. Traffic control and general safety. They would not have the time or men to send police officers to assist us."

As for rent-a-cops that he feels is out of the question. "They don't know and are not trained to handle college crowds. If you put them in Fenway Park with a mixed group of people they are fine...but if you put them in a place like the Cage where they are going to be hit with students swearing and using dope, they are going to decide that these kids are animals. They will be starting with a bad attitude. Also the Campus Police refuse to work with any outside private police agencies."

Nor does he feel student marshals would be a solution. "Some are reliable, some aren't, and you can't expect them to face or cope with any real trouble."

He sees even a free concert as posing problems, though of a different sort. He pointed out that at last summer's concert at the pond everyone was smoking dope, drinking and "screwing in the grass."

Rod Stewart?

Scanlon stressed that he isn't out to stop the concert just to screw the students. "You do what you feel you can handle, and if you can't feel you can handle something you should just stay out of it."

Doctor Gage's reasoning follows much the same line. His objections to a concert the size the Committee is proposing are twofold. One, that big name groups are "ripping-off the students." Dr. Gage sees them as, "capitalizing on the youth culture," and feels they are only in it for the money, and don't care, despite all their proclamations to the contrary care about their audience or the quality of their performance.

His second objection is based on grounds much like Scanlon's. Gage sees the problem behind any concert as the number of outsiders who would be attracted here if well known groups performed. UMass students he feels have a commitment to the University, while outsiders would only be interested in a good time. Or, as Dr. Gage put it, "be on an ego trip," and be less than concerned with the University and the surrounding community.

What he would like to see is a concept that would be "at a scale which would allow "unrestricted admission." A free concert the size of last years one behind Southwest which attracted a relatively low figure of 5,000. He does realize though, that while it is easy for him to propose, it is virtually impossible for the Senate to do.

The money for last springs free concert came from funds left over after the abolishment of class governments, as there are no more class governments to abolish there is no more money.

The Concert Committee realizes this, and some are under the impression that, despite Gage's statements to the contrary, it is only an excuse to have no concert at all. Their reasoning goes that Gage knows what he proposes is impossible, which is why he suggests it.

As for who makes the final decision; Vice-Chancellor Gage will make a recommendation to Acting-Chancellor Bromery, which Gage says expects Bromery would approve. If the Student Senate or the Concert Committee is dissatisfied with the Gages proposal their next course of action would be to appeal directly to Bromery.

What seems to be the underlying cause behind the inability of the Concert Committee and the Administration to reach a compromise is not a disagreement over whether or not a concert is technically feasible. Rather, it is a gap between the hilosophy of two generations.

As Gerry Scanlon said the administration does not want to walk through the crowd and see everyone wiped out on dope or alcohol, or couples balling in the grass. Neither are they willing to take the risks involved in running any concert of that size. While the Concert Committee admits the possibility of gate crashing, they feel that enough tickets could be sold in advance to cover the cost of the concert, if the ticket price is low enough the number of people who would try to crash would be small enough not to pose a major problem. Neither are they worried about dope or sex.

On the other hand the Administration is only interested in ironclad guarantees that there will be no trouble of any sort, a request that is hard to fulfill.

Viet Vets Take On Springfield

By DICK RYAN

"What are you going to do if they say the Pledge of Alligence or something like that?"

"I don't know man. Give it a power salute or something."

"You got no balls if you don't throw the flag on the deck and stomp on it."

"That's a little rash."

"You think so?"

"Yeh, we don't want to lose them right off. Besides, TV might be there."

The brothers were fantasizing what could happen that evening when the UMass Vietnam Veterans Against the War would meet the Springfield Patriotic Observance Committee. The fantasizing was greatly aided by smoking a certain plant the brothers had become acquainted with during their time in Vietnam.

What passes for the hierarchy of the VVAW, had decided that only five brothers would go down to the Springfield VFW hall to debate the Patriotic Observers about why they hadn't let the VVAW march in their Veteran's Day parade. We had made our presence known, and now they wanted to debate the whole thing according to strict parliamentary proceedure. Following rules was not a strong point among the membership, so only the Roy, Brian (the co-coordinators, since the membership has learned the hard way to distrust all authority figures, no one would dare to appropriate an authority laden title like chairman or even co-chairmen; start acting like a leader and you'll want everyone to follow orders, salute, shine their shoes, and that whole can of worms), the other Brian, Joe, and Frank would go. I tagged along as a reporter.

We all straggled down to Frank's house for a ravioli dinner. He had some American Legion magazines which we read, making us alternately laugh and cringe. Roy had earlier tried to buy a new pair of jeans at Zayre's, but couldn't find any in his size. We were all determined to make an impression as mannerly presentable young veterans. Indeed, the five delegates had earned 1 silver and 6 bronze stars, 2 Purple Hearts, 5 Army Commendation medals, 2 Air medals, and various other goodies that proved they had, in military jargon, "seen some shit".

But, if the truth is to be known, we were not the most respectable looking crew. As a guess I would say that some of the brothers hadn't seen the inside of a barber shop since their honorable discharges. Brian, one of our founding fathers, was perhaps the fiercest looking of all. At the VVAW camp-in in Washington D.C. last Spring the New York Daily News sent its photographer down to photograph some of the hairiest, hippiest, scrungiest, most unmilitary looking of the veterans, and Brian was one of the four whose pictures they chose to exhibit. In Vietnam Brian was in a Force Reconnaissance Company, the gung-ho elite of the Marine Corps.

We split into various cars for the drive to Springfield.

"What do you think its going to be like, Frank?"

"God, I don't know. Yesterday when Ray first told me, I was really up for it. But now I'm kind of scared over the whole thing."

Before the parade passes them by, Vets and their prodigy salute the grander which was their's.

It wouldn't have surprised any of us to find buckets of tar and sacks of feathers waiting. We arrived early and decided to have coffee before entering. A drunk was lying in the gutter in front of the hall on Bliss Street.

The hall was in a working class neighborhood, which is fair. Wars are fought by working class men. When a just war calls, as it does for every American sooner or later, it is working class men who leave their jobs, pick up an M1, M14, or M16 (whichever is current) and do their patriotic chore as the Cutting Edge in combat; only to return with fond memories of earning that stripe, and the good time to be had with the female indigenous personnel.

And yet, here they are, their beloved, red-blooded, John Wayne service memories tarnished and trampled on, not by the usual hippie-commie-jew-fags, but by Veterans - a sacred title. During the Veteran's Day negotiations the Patriotic Observers had doubted the authenticity of the Vietnam Veterans, implying that they were all fourflushers, Chaplain's Assistanis, and pansies who couldn't hack it on the line with the men.

We trooped into the hall – the first to arrive – and took seats in the front row, closest to the door. Our paranoia was running full blast.

Some spectators wandered up from the bar downstairs, and a three man committee took seats at the chairman's table. Two were wearing green VFW caps and green VFW jackets with an American flag sewn on the sleeve.

Norman Ginty, the chairman, a lean ex-paratrooper, stated that they were going to start the meeting by saluting the flag "our way". A reference, no doubt, to the clenched fist salute given the National Anthem at the Veteran's Day parade. He called "attention". The brothers moved around in their chairs. "My God," I thought, "they're going to touch off a brawl before the meeting even starts." But they slowly stood at something approaching attention; the committee saluted a little flag on their table and the meeting was underway.

Ginty explained the ground rules, strictly Robert's Rules of Order, and also explained why the VVAW was not permitted to march in the parade. We hadn't submitted a letter on official letterhead stationery (which we don't have anyhow) by the application deadline.

Then speaking as himself, "I'm nothing but a truckdriver." He gave his opinion of the VVAW. "I never want you in. I lost too many buddies in number Two. You shouldn't drape a coffin in there (the flag drapped coffin carried on the sidewalk) and throw that right hand in here (the clenched fist salute at the National Anthem). You aren't good veterans. You got a country to back."

At this point a VVAW member was recognized; Ginty made a point of calling him "sir". The brother stated that the VVAQW was not trying to be disrespectful, and only wanted to memorialize their brothers who had died in an immoral, illegal war.

One of the World War One vintage members in the audience remarked, "We'll never stop it (the war) this way." And the now notorious flag-draped coffin was "the unloyalist thing I ever seen in my life."

A younger member was next, "These people are trying to do the same thing as you are. They're just going about it differently." Ginty interjected that he disagreed, and now occurred one of the wierdest exchanges of the evening.

Mr. Ginty, who was parade marshall, and Mr. Sheffield, who was master of ceremonies at the viewing stand, got into a shouting match, the loudest of the evening, and it ended with Ginty threatening to have Sheffield, who was 72, thrown out. A VFW official threatened to have the police throw them all out if they didn't behave like gentlemen.

Some of the brothers were nonplussed and speechless. At various times throughout the evening they would be confused, speechless, and often outraged. It was wise to have five delegates because at least one, and often two or three, were left inarticulate by the events, but someone was always able to maintain.

After thrashing out the coffin issue, though not really settling it, the meeting turned to unification. An older VFW member thought that we should all come together as veterans. "United we stand, undivided we fall." What? But it passed and there was general agreement that veterans should cooperate with each other.

And here another stumbling block arose. The VFW and American Legion types wanted a tight, well organized and structured organization—have us join them. Frank replied that VVAW types don't want to belong to organizations with a hierarchy. "... don't trust leaders", but he left off "watch your parking meters," probably as being too esoteric.

The discussion got into providing benefits for hospitalized veterans, and both groups stated their programs. It would appear that the VFW's was run by drunkards, and the VVAW's was run by dope addicts. This phase ended with good feeling as we gazed across the generation gap.

When it came to benefits for veterans, the gap widened a bit. "Why they get $175 a month, and I sold apples on a street corner."

Frank was later heard to remark, "You know, I'm going to try selling apples."

The audience was heavily laced with World War One and Two veterans; only a few Vietnam vets. Before making your statement, question, or tirade, it was standard operating procedures to identify yourself as a true veteran, "I fought in two theatres and I don't..." Marines, ultra chauvinists that they are, identified themselves as Marines.

An older member replied, "I think these kids (kids are dissidents; men are patriots) are lost. They're trying to organize the Vietnam vets, but they're not organized." Ignoring the put down, Roy called for all vets to get together and stop bickering.

An elderly woman in the back got the floor. "I'm the daughter of a World War One, wife of a World War Two vet, mother of a Korean vet, and they're not demonstratin'. They're takin' care of their homes."

Ginty slammed his gavel during her applause and the official meeting was over.

The unofficial meeting was perhaps the most effective. After a couple of ultra-Archie Bunkers were shaken off - "I told him to get a haircut, and you get a shave. Look like a white man." - we went downstairs to their bar and talked less heatedly over beer.

When we eventually got out on the street, we caught each other's eye and burst into simultanious laughter. Huddled in a truck passing a jay around, we laughed some more. Down in their bar the Patriotic Observers were probably doing the same over beer.

How Can You Be Two Places At Once...

BY FRANK BAGLIONE

We Are Everywhere, by Jerry Rubin. $1.95 Harper and Row, 256 pp.

There has always been something offensive to me about Jerry Rubin. He was, even in those recent days when I looked favorably upon the movement and causes he espoused, somewhat of an embarrassment–the shrillness of his speech, the exaggeration in his gestures, the consistent banality of his thought.

With his second book, We Are Everywhere, Jerry Rubin has once again substantiated the claim that he is the most crashing bore imaginable. In this book he is..., how shall I put this..., shamelessly ignorant of any type of reality, crass, superficial, vain without cause, insincere, sanctimonious, pompous and, except where he is stupid, silly.

Despite the best efforts of Rubin, Yippie literature is not without some engaging tracts. Abbie Hoffman, who is much more convincing than Rubin and not one-tenth as obnoxious, produced a genuinely funny and vastly interesting piece of social criticism in his first book Revolution For the Hell of It. His second book, Woodstock Nation, was not nearly as good for it showed the strain of the Chicago Trial, reflected the changed mood of movement and nation, and revealed the new generation's desire to take itself seriously.

But while Hoffman later turned from the idealistic hypocrisy movement people were succumbing to (remember his statement about cutting his hair because it no longer signified brethren and his urging young people to take over through the vote), Rubin was drowning in it. His first book Do It!, was a fairly good piece of humor and social comment, although, as the title suggests, it lacked much of the subtlety and delicacy of Hoffman's literary attempts.

Rubin's latest, We Are Everywhere, lacks all delicacy. With the grace of a New York City garbage truck, Rubin launches his work with the following bit of modesty–"After Do It! I vowed never to write another book. Writing just takes too much out of me. The creative expression is fun, but the editing and re-editing is a drag. And even though Do It! was more than a book–it became a political event and myth–I don't see myself as a writer or 'author.'"

Here is Rubin, the ultimate in contradiction, making "vows," using hackneyed phrases like "writing takes too much out of me," and unabashedly describing his expressions as "creative" and his book as "more than a book," a "myth," though he does not conceive of himself as an author. It seems Rubin's views of himself is much loftier.

Rubin's We Are Everywhere is the usual hodge-podge of Yippie chronicles. It covers various events and issues, the main thrust being "we (the movement) are going to ramble on to victory, though not without struggle, because we are, after all, right." The "We" in We Are Everywhere are the politicized freak generation of hip revolutionaries. Ironically, most of Rubin's stories are set in the Chicago jail following the Conspiracy trial. This gives an idea of where "We" really are.

"she or he," in a conscious attempt to be non-sexist. And just to show that this generation has its counterparts to those who look for communists under their beds, Rubin tells us that "the day is not far off when political commissars appointed by Spiro Agnew will censor the

"'Living in a world of constant fear and mistrust can eat your heart out and cut off your life-giving oxygen."

Rubin has filled his book with profound observations--"It's tough being in jail: it's even tougher if you feel you're getting a raw deal." His metaphors are, to be generous, quaint--"Living in a world of constant fear and mistrust can eat your heart out and cut off your life-giving oxygen."

Early in the book Rubin presents a solution to the racial problem with typical movement lucidity--"Interracial humanhood, revolutionary black-white unity, is possible when middle-class whites join black people as enemies of the state behind bars or as fugitives." And then with touching humanity he says, "Millions of freaks the world over mourned and cried the day the assassin missed offing the Pope! What a pure yippie act of creative disruption! Weren't you sorry he missed?"

The affectation in Rubin's book is incredible. He spells American with a "k", to be movingly symbolic, I suppose. He consistently uses the reverse phrase order of "women and men," national TV news and newspapers and magazines, and completely outlaw the underground press."

Rubin is interesting only when he takes an occasional breather to tell us some facts about the Chicago trial. He tells about the ideological rift among the defendants that grew wider as the trial progressed--"We relished our time apart...political differences made it impossible for us to live together...all of us never even got stoned together once."

Rubin tells how Tom Hayden was "pissed off" at being indicted and wanted to win the case; he was against the circus atmosphere Rubin and Hoffman created. John Froines also wished to avoid contempt charges and a guilty verdict. Dellinger sided with the yippies because he wanted to oppose the "tyranny" of the trial. Rennie Davis, politically with the left wing of the defendants but personally closer to Hayden, tried to mediate.

Rubin cannot maintain the intrigue. He elaborates no further. We find ourselves back into the rush of silly stories punctuated with maudlin sentiments--"Our eyes met in revolutionary comradeship." And in another place–"The guard confirmed that a year ago Rap Brown was in this cell...Rap's spirit keeps me vibrant and alive." (The reader will recall that last year Rap Brown, wanted by the FBI, was shot while fleeing from police after he had held up a Harlem bar.)

Like many male revolutionaries Rubin was caught off guard by women's and gay liberation movement. So in We Are Everywhere he does his pennance–"Do It! had a lot of sexism in it but it took women and gay people to help me see that," Rubin says like a nice little lamb. He never lets us forget that his sexist sins of the past will not be repeated. Speaking of his meeting with one of his heroes, Charles Manson, Rubin says, "Phil (ochs) and I were visibly moved by his (Manson's) strength and personal magnetism. He was one of the most poetic and intense people we ever met...About the only thing that angered us was his intense male chauvinism."

Rubin has not only given up the happy difference between the sexes, he has given up his most treasured material possessions. In Do It! Rubin said that if sentenced to death he would request as his last meal a hamburger, french fries and a coke. In We Are Everywhere he says, "Coke is the essence of imperialism." And obviously having recently read Adelle Davis' Let's Eat Right to Keep Fit, Rubin describes his new eating habits–"A good thing to remember is: Eat breakfast like a queen or king, lunch like a princess or prince, supper like a pauper." (The original, "sexist," version by Adelle Davis does not include reference to the eating habits of female royalty.) Let us hope Mr. Rubin's last meal is before a dawn execution.

The portrait Mr. Rubin paints of himself in this book is a pathetic one. He is a ridiculous caricature of the nearly forty man who believes that one remains young by remaining immature and ignorant. As such he cannot fully appreciate the magnitude of his ludicrous product. His book is puerile, his ideas farcical, his world-view and philosophy grotesquely distorted...he has made himself ugly. His emotions are all one-sided now, he can feel for only one type of human being–that like himself. He is mad.

I think we will all miss the fun and the humor that once was native to the yippie movement. Indeed, the yippies alone of all their revolutionary comrades possessed a sense of humor. Now, the more dour and intensely serious liberation fighters have made the yippies come to terms with the dictates of the super conscious movement groups.

The reason for reading something like a yippie book is for fun and enjoyment. We do not find this in We Are Everywhere. Jerry Rubin has become unreasonable and he senses his demise at the hands of an eminently more reasonable society--"They (the enemy?) are trying to rip off our culture. They are smoking our dope, wearing our clothes and talking like us. They are selling us our culture...making it a style."

One sentence is needed to close the book on Mr. Gerald Rubin--"They are succeeding."

Jefferson Starship Revisited

By STEVE FELD

Sunfighter-Paul Kantner/Grace Slick (Grunt Records)

For all its lyrical imagination and musical credibility, Blows Against The Empire, the first Jefferson Airplane offspring album, was still a dream, a mere science-fiction fantasy. It was a good record to get stoned to, something to put on when you felt like going "to Jupiter and beyond." It drew very distinct anti-establishment lines between "us" and "them" ("Hey Dick, whatever you think of us is totally irrelevant"). And, more than anything else, it accented the positive feeling of hope, to the extreme point of ultimate idealism.

If the ideology of Sunfight is any different from that of Blows Against The Empire, it is because Grace Slick and Paul Kantner are now parents–a very real situation. A pregnant Grace Slick could, as every mother does, have big dreams for her child. Paul Kantner's would-be son ("god") was going to "hijack the starship, carry 7000 people past the sun."

But with the reality of a baby girl named China, comes the reality of Sunfighter. There is still talk of starships and the magical land of Andromeda, but only this time "you can feel the universe inside of you." The infinite boundaries of outer space are transformed into the unknown depths of the human soul. And for all their differences, they are very much alike, it not the exact same.

Musically, this is the Jefferson Starship again. The personnel includes the rest of the Airplanes, David Crosby, Graham Nash, Jerry Garcia, et al. A fine album for sure.

Jerry Garcia, trying to explain the phenomena of the San Francisco bands, ran across a seeming contradiction. "The reason that there isn't one huge band which, in fact there is...We're all expressing different parts of it, just for the sake of being different from each other. Just to be able to express a little individualization in the universe, and just for the hell of it. I expect everyone to keep on changing, all the groups to keep on creating new stuff, because that's all there fuckin' is to do, man."

Sunfighter is similar to Blows Against The Empire because it deals with survival. Grace's "Silver Spoon" treats the problem uniquely: "What if you were starving to death and the only food you had was me–what would you say to the cannibal question? Would your answer be perfectly free?" Her performance on the song is stunning and remarkably professional. Grace has mastered the essential techniques of dynamic singing: phrasing, pausing, accentuation and breath control. She can do a song a thousand times (and has with "Somebody to Love"), and there will be something different every time.

She once said that she never gets tired of singing the same song repeatedly because she always finds something new, some interesting variation.

"Silver Spoon" fits in nicely with previous songs of Grace's. Her anomalic domination of her songs become complemented by her defiant ideas and poetic impulses, creating a quasi-genre of fascinating repertory. The Airplanes' Volunteers was the real origin of the genre ("Eskimo Blue Day", "Hey, Frederick"), and since then has continued, and built, with Blows Against The Empire ("Sunrise"), Bark ("Crazy Miranda", "Law Man", "Never Argue With a German")and now, Sunfighter.

Grace Slick

Grace's characters are a definite extension of her own self, her dignified craziness and her undefineable beauty. This is even more true with "China", a song on Sunfighter. It is about her newborn daughter–a literal extension of her, no less. "China" is a touching song of promise and bright hope. "I hope she sees some things that will make her time happy. It all comes in, so fast, it all comes in." It also contains a fascinating thought: "She knows who she is without looking." "China" is enough to win Gracie the Mother of the Year award, in my book.

Paul Kantner, meanwhile, seems to be fixated on the idea of cosmic consciencess, as is Garcia, but even more. The title song, "Sunfighter" is dedicated to ex-Airplane Marty Balin, and contains references to Mick Jagger in one of the verses. The theme of this grandiloquent production is expressed in the line "Mount the Earth and learn to ride her". Once again, a slightly more practical solution when taken figuratively, though almost just as idealistic, as in Blows Against The Empire and hijacking a starship.

Every San Francisco rock band, having been through the phenomenal Flower Power days in a highly involved way, still yearns for the time when everyone can be totally submerged in a magical euphoria such as San Francisco was in 1967 or so. Paul Kantner, then, is off on a tangent where he either praises the past or tries to find ways to recreate it, or something like it. His songs on Sunfighter, such as "Million" and "Holding Together", the finale, thus are explained.

A short, but potent song is "Diana". It sings the praises of Diana Oughton, the Weatherwoman who was killed, while making bombs in New York. It is the only song that really touches on political grounds, and is exceptionally beautiful, especially the second rendition (there are two), where David Crosby and Graham Nash can be heard harmonizing with Kantner and Slick.

All together, I think it's a pretty nice package, and very easy and rewarding to get into.Similar to Blows Against The Empire, yet totally distinct.

'It's A Beautiful Day' Peaking

BY KENNETH SULIN

San Francisco has released some fine talent, Quicksilver, the Airplane, Santana, the Dead just to name a few. They gained their peak, but slowly began to disintegrate, diverge and lose individual members. They remain popular, but can't locate the popularity and distinction one time they possessed. It's A Beautiful Day are nearing their peak or perhaps have already met it and possibly they may feel the downgrade approaching.

With the third album entitled Choice Quality Stuff Beautiful Day have, as many groups, started to dart and sped up their original tunes becoming nothing more than another pleasant rock and roll band. The first "Whitebird" sound weighted their instrumental intentions which are difficult to find here on Choice Quality Stuff. Now we have an alteration from the smooth, slow rolling, somber music for which they are so well noted to a bursting loudness and holocaust of previous styles.

The members are still in tack however; Patti Santos swimming around stage wearing next to nothing, David LaFlamme screeching his violin to no end, etc. The only new addition is guitarist Billy Gregory who probably is responsible for the rock sound we've now been presented with.

You'll be happy to note however, that a few members of Santana have joined Beautiful Day in the studio, the only trouble being some selections are incredibly similar to those of Santana. Choice Quality Stuff takes some getting used to, but it is an overall interesting album due to the fact that LaFlamme has held the group together. He does almost all the vocal work and treats his electric violin as if it were a guitar, literally beating, shaving it to death yet producing unbelievable leads that seem impossible. Santos and LaFlamme must be praised as well for their ability to harmonize together almost fluently--their voices being nearly the only reminiscent aspect of the original group. Besides guitar and violin, the studio work has been done with a crowd of horns, trumpets, saxophones, etc. which in actuality, add to the slightly cluttered tones and rhythms.

Inappropriately titled Choice Quality Stuff Beautiful Day has maintained a few morsels of what came from ago, and this occurs on side two. Oddly enough the album has two titles--side one being Choice Quality Stuff while side two is called Anytime supposedly the music is listenable anytime, but usually they get carried away and fall into a troth of rock. The switch on Anytime is to a more acoustical rather than electrical mode, but acoustics can prove to be as destructive as electrics when pick-ups are used--as they are here.

On New Year's Eve Beautiful Day was in concert in Boston and they were extremely loud--playing almost a complete entourage of rock and roll--even performing older songs with a strike too much of enthusiasm. The audience was appreciative, but as stated before, they've become a pop group and their once unique style is unfortunately fading.

The use of too many instruments and musicians can hurt any group and that factor is not far from Beautiful Day music. We'll only have to wait and see if they've joined the rock march with a follow up record. Garcia left because possibly he noticed the decay. The original guitarist saw it also; however, LaFlamme and company are still holding on.

Possibly the change has been for the better, but the commonplace rock and roll is something bred by all; whereas, Beautiful Day really had a good thing going--hopefully they won't lose their grip.

A Haunting Alice Cooper

By KENNETH SULIN

Alice Cooper-- Killer, Warner Bros.

As Mr. Alice Cooper prances onto the stage one can be sure from his mere appearance that a haunting night of music and festivity will most certainly result. Dressed in blood-red pants with a lacy stained yellow blouse Alice can be seen beginning nightmarish acts using his pet boa constrictor Kachina. Alice's frenzied hair more or less glistens in the light, but amidst his death white face, decorated with drippy tear-drop eye make-up, he peers at the audience who by this time have little in the way of prediction as to what will come next. The remaining members of the band compliment Alice's appearance and are styled in relatively the same fashion–waist length hair, sparkling attire, etc.

Their music is appropriately a secondary thing according to Alice who thinks the onstage antics are the more important. He has thrown live chickens into the audience, hammers, clothing and carries on his little sideshow as the guitarists pounce tennis balls at each others instruments creating an eerie complex of tangled feedback. They are here describably scary and even gruesome at times, but the secondary factor, their musicianship, speaks for itself.

Killer is Alice Cooper's latest and probably finest album corresponding to the hilt with the goings on of the group both lyrically and musically.

Hopefully Alice Cooper is not destined to half-bit rock and roll, but the track they're now on apparently leads in this direction--not that the music is poor, but rather not of the highest degree. Qualitatively speaking, Killer provokes one to believe that they are capable of nothing but their present style of truly hard-pressing rock and roll; however, this seems to be the only kind of music they fully enjoy. Each cut, each individual selection, is strictly representative of the pop scene today, not actually memorable or classic tunes; but, in a weaker sense, rock on a median scale. The vocals, all by Alice himself, are sung in a craggy, staggered type voice backed by two penetrating electrics carrying on their various simple riffs. The sound is especially driving and is sure to have you tapping your foot to the beat; however, the talent displayed here is far from the best on record. The guitar playing is adequate, but not spectacular, and the vocal work runs along the same lines.

Each individual song on Killer, being unlike any others, is basically short-lived and won't bore anyone with overdone drum solos or stretched out guitar leads. However, the lyrics are often and probably purposely vulgar. For instance a typical Alice Cooper track included here entitled "Dead Babies" refers to the chorus: "Dead Babies can't take care of themselves, dead babies can't take things off the shelf." Not exactly the most aesthetic lines, but you'll more than likely find yourself singing along midway through the tune.

Without a doubt you won't be surprised to learn Alice Cooper is a Mother's shoot-off group, finding an opening with Zappa, and progressively singing along midway through the tune.

Without a doubt you won't be surprised to learn Alice Cooper is a Mother's shoot-off group, finding an opening wity Zappa, and progressively making it on their own. They've now comprised a total of four albums with Warner Brothers and with each have become increasingly offensive; nevertheless, this is what many people involved with the music industry today get a kick of. The records, on the other hand, are quite unlike Zappa music by sticking to drilling and jabbing rock with absolutely nil in quiet, solemn sounds.

If perchance you enjoy the music I suggest seeing Alice Cooper in concert since their appearance and stage-handled maneuvers make up at least fifty percent of the show. Their drag-like apparel is purely for effect and can only add to each performance -- by the time you've finished gapping over them in concert you'll not know what to think about the future for rock and roll.

All groups have their gimmicks today for attracting attention, and Alice Cooper is certainly heading the list.

'Muswell Hillbillies' Is A Disappointment

BY STEVE FELD

Muswell Hillbillies-The Kinks; RCA Records

Like many of the better groups around today, the Kinks can always be counted on for one new album a year. One that will provide many hours of enthusiastic listening and pure enjoyment. Ray Davies, the group's leader, singer and songwriter, has proven to us that he is one of the top talents in rock, assuming the role of a modern day Shakespeare, bitterly commenting on life and society, and their foibles. His band is made up of four other musicians which, thankfully, have a flair for bringing out the best in Ray Davies.

Muswell Hillbillies is the third album of a trilogy which started in 1969 with ARTHUR (or The Decline and Fall of The British Empire) and followed in 1970 with Lola Versus Powerman and the Moneygoround. Muswell Hillbillies is, unfortunately, my least favorite of the three, and clearly, the least ambitious.

Next to Arthur, which was the surprise album of its year, and Lola, which is undoubtedly the best Kinks' album to date, Muswell Hillbillies is a disappointment, devoid of the substance that made the others, especially Lola, so great.

Taken by itself, Muswell Hillbillies isn't half as bad as when it is compared to the others. At worst, many of the melodies are predictable. "Holiday" and "Skin and Bone" are entertaining, but by the time they are halfway over, you know you've heard something like it before. "Complicated Life" and "Uncle Son" sound like each other too much to warrant the inclusion of the latter. They emerge as two-bit ditties, lacking the depth and innovativeness that we have come to expect from the Kinks.

"20th Century Man" is the best song on the album, painting a savage picture of a man on the brink of insanity, a stranger in a strange world. The song starts off lackadaisical, you could swear that they were all going to fall asleep any second. It constantly builds, revealing more and more defiance, to a final maddening scream, "I'm a 20th century man but I don't wanna be here." It is a song of truculent alienation and pungent disillusionment.

"Acute Schizophrenia Paranoia Blues" follows, carrying with it the same theme. It is nowhere as fierce as "20th Century Man" and has, instead, a bouncy beat. Our unfortunate anti-hero is left to languish, and realizes that "there ain't no cure for acute schizophrenia disease."

Two songs which are similar in musical structure and lyrical mood are "Alcohol" and "Holloway Jail". They are both tales of ruin. "Alcohol" has a rather dubious melody, and predictable chord changes, but it is notable for its lyrics, which tell of one man's downfall, "Who thought I would fall a slave to demon alcohol." "Holloway Jail" is a more likable song with some good electric guitar work, "They took my baby to Holloway jail, Now she looks so old and pale."

"Oklahoma U.S.A." is a nice ballad, and one of the highlights of the album. "If life's for living what's living for?" It is rich in sentiment, telling of a woman's fancy to lead a glamorous life, "She's Rita Hayworth or Doris Day, And Errol Flynn's gonna take her away, To Oklahoma U.S.A."

The remainder of the album consists of "Here Come the People in Grey", which is merely a slowed-down "Denmark Street' from Lola, and "Have a Cuppa Tea" which is just a little too ridiculous for my tastes. It drowns in its bathos. It is, however, a pointed put-down on the English people, and quite effective.

The final song on the album is "Muswell Hillbilly" and with it our hero finds his identity. It is similar to the title song of Arthur, both being jubilant and optomistic.

It would be fallacious to say that this is a bad album, because it's got too much going for it, collated with the previous works of the neo-Kinks, it is their worst album in three years, and that makes it a disappointment.

A Genius For $2.50?

By GARY GOMES

Captain Beefheart & his Magic Band Face the Cold Realities of "Live"-Come out Blues

Picture this, if you can–you have just seen Sabo and his International Chimps perform (a rollicking fifteen minutes-they were booed off the stage by an outstandingly rude audience, which I hope is not typical of the Fenway Theatre in Boston), the only logical choice to precede the outlandish Magic Band. After a few minutes of Capitalistic promotion (Badfinger in a few weeks–I hope these people don't think that their booking procedures follow a logical pattern), the MC says "...Here they are: Captain Beefheart and his Magic Band..". The curtain still down, you hear what sounds like three guitars, all playing against each other, clashing rhythms, clusters, etc. The curtain rolls up and – alone stands Rockette Morton, the bass player of the group! (Hell, I knew he was good, but I never imagined...). Morton plays on and on, bobbying and weaving, lunging at the audience to complement and choreograph his own massively powerful bass extravaganza.

Then, one by one, the other members of the group join Morton. Drumbo, the most imaginative drummer I have ever had the pleasure of seeing, starts flipping (I can think of no better word), his sticks at the drums, counterpointing the bass with bouncy patterns. Winged Eel Fingerling, second lead guitarist, begins plucking notes to contrast both the timing and chord clusters of resplendent-inred Rockette. Zoot Horn Rollo then appears, tall and gangling, making his Gibson Stereo work with the other two. (Rockette still hasn't stopped or modified his bass-playing to satisfy any audience need for the commonplace.) The four of them appeared to be on separate trips, if one were to look and not listen, but when one does listen to the clashing sounds, they make sense, and if you fall in line with Drumbo's almost boogie-like rhythms, you'll find yourself moving with the group, interacting, and playing with them yourself. And although perhaps you yourself don't realize it, as a member of an audience, you give of yourself to the musicians on stage-this encourages the performer and he brings both you and himself to higher levels of emotion and experience.

Finally, the man otherwise known as Don Van Vliet sauntered onto the stage, dressed in black leather and flat rimmed hat. The Captain then began to bawl his enigmatic poetry at the audience, backed by the still ever-fluctuating music of the Magic Band. He has a voice that can screech, growl, moan, and cry in the best traditions of the blues (or, as the purists might say "da blooze"). However, Beefheart is not limited by his voice to becoming just another Howlin' Wolf imitator (though that is the artist that he most closely resembles-a growler, in other words). Rather, he makes his voice resemble some sort of a human moog, with incredible fluctuations in range, style, and texture-a most remarkable instrument. This, combined with his incredibly free-form lyrics and power would make him the most incredible and sincere white blues artist I have ever seen or heard (I will not honour other white blues musicians with the appelation "artist". Names need not be mentioned, but it is a pleasure to hear a man who doesn't use secondhand Muddy Waters licks and call them his own.)

The Magic Band was originally formed about seven years ago; the "Mirror Man" LP on Buddah amply shows where the band was at that time-long improvised jams with heavy group interaction.

Prior to the Magic Band, Beefheart was in a group called Captain Glasspack. Another member of the group was Frank Zappa. Zappa and Beefheart had been friends in high school because of Beefheart's artistic talent. It seems that the young Van Vliet was a talented sculptor but his parents decided to move because they thought artists were wierd people. So they moved to California–where Beefheart met Zappa.

Well, Beefheart and Zappa parted, Zappa to notoriety, and Beefheart to obscurity. However, this obscurity helped Beefheart musically, since it allowed he and his group to evolve musically without the pressures of touring. This was particularly important to Beefheart, since he doesn't believe in any members of his group reading music for he feels it wrecks their spontaneity, and he has claimed that it takes over a year for a person to understand his music sufficiently to play it. (Having heard it, I can say that Beefheart's claims about his music are true). Beefheart then managed to record a few albums for Buddha, among them "Safe As Milk" on which Ry Cooder, an outstanding guitarist who is now solo and once helped the Rolling Stones on one of their recent albums played. Incidentally, Cooder claims that the Stones underpaid him for his work, and stole some of his riffs to write their songs.).

Slowly but surely, Beefheart kept progressing, to the point that his music began to incorporate avant garde jazz into its setup, along with instruments such as the bass clarinet (at the time played by a musician known only as the Mascara Snake). Beefheart himself began to play soprano saxophone (with admirable dexterity), along with harmonica and musette (an instrument that, as far as I can tell, he has stopped playing). These excursions can be heard on "Trout Mask Replica" a brilliant two-record set, Beefheart's first recording on Zappa's Straight label, which Zappa produced. (Blue Thumb later released another album, "Strictly Personal" which I have yet to hear.)

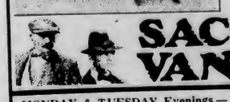
All the while this was going on, Beefheart increased his considerable underground following, despite rumours that he had sold out by not continuing to play blues (Selling out? By switching to this when blues was becoming more and more popular at the time???—Not bloody likely!).

In late '69, Beefheart released "Lick My Decals Off, Baby", an incredibly forceful album with Art Tripp III, late of the Mothers of Invention and the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, disguised as Ed Marimba, and playing marimba (wooden vibes) and drums with the Magic Band. On songs such as "Woe-is-a-me-bop" and "I want to find me a woman that'll hold my big toe, till I have to go", Beefheart demonstrated the flexibility of his voice and his inventiveness in lyrics, while the band demonstrated its musical direction on such songs as "Peon" and "Japan in a Dish-pan". What it turned out to be was a thick, solid, but swinging "cluster of sound" approach. Those years of experimentation had paid off and Beefheart had a group that was as musically competent as any, but extremely unique at the same time. The person missing when I saw Beefheart in Boston was Ed Marimba, but the band did well enough to amaze me, and my three friends who had followed Beefheart's musical direction.

Beefheart went one step towards greater recognition when he recorded "Willie the Pimp" on Frank Zappa's "Hot Rats". He does not do this song in person however, since he is playing with his own group, not Zappa's.

The Concert itself was continually amazing, with Beefheart using his electronic voice and harmonica on the first song, a track from his new album. Further on in his show he did several tracks from his new album, and all were astounding, although I can't remember their names. He interspersed the new material with material from "Decals", among them "Woe-is-a-me-bop", "Japan in a Dish-pan" (which featured the Captain on some incredibly inventive saxophone work) and "Peon", a duo number with Rockette Morton and Zoot Horn Rollo. The work on this number was remarkable, since the cut on the album sounds like a spontaneously improvised number, but Morton and Rollo did it exactly the same as the album. Hat's off to the gentlemen.

Later yet in the show Beefheart did a solo number, accompanying himself on the harmonica (Comment made to people who were at the side of the stage trying to sing along: "Shut up...or at least sing in time"). After this the Magic Band joined the Captain again and they broke into "Abba Zabba" from the "Safe as Milk" LP. The tightness of the group on this song (as through the entire show, was readily audible). The stage presence of the Magic Band was remarkable, with each member of the grouping choreographing every sound they made, with the lone exception of Captain Beefheart, who stood still. They wound it up with another selection from the new album, and that was it for the main show.



The encore was something else again. Instead of the entire Magic Band coming out, only Beefheart and Drumbo appeared. These two, who have been together since the beginning of the Magic Band, communicated superbly. Drumbo started things off flying with a drum extravaganza that showed his amazing dexterity on the kit, wiping out every rock drum soloist I have ever seen. Beefheart then picked up the soprano sax and began playing it, using the feedback as a complement to his own playing. They continued play-until Beefheart got tired of it and he placed the sax back on the amplifier. When Drumbo finished, they shook hands and left. No fanfare. Finis.

Captain Beefheart is one of the greatest inventors of our time. His music is so unique that it defies classification, but I think a close enough categorization would be avant garde blues. But don't let me decide for you. He's playing at the Paramount Theatre in Springfield this Friday. If the show is half as good as the one I saw, you'll have a stimulating evening ahead of you. After all, how often have you ever seen a genius for $2.50, plus a chimpanzee act?

An Unusually Dintinguished Drama

BY BOB NESTI

Desperate Characters
a film; produced, adapted, and directed by Frank J. Gilroy; from the novel by Paula Fox; featuring Shirley MacLaine, Kenneth Mars, and Sada Thompson.

Towards the end of Desperate Characters, Frank Gilroy's amazingly literate dissection of urban blight, there is one of many memorable sequences. The married couple Otto and Sophie, whose plight we've followed throughout the film, sit rather nervously in a public hospital out-patient clinic. Not familiar with the surroundings, they argue and wait as they wait to have Sophie's possiblied rabied cat bite looked at. She seems at a point of acute paranoia when finally her husband tersely patronizes her saying "Cope with it. Everyone else does."

Sopie is forced to cope, as is everyone else in this uncomfortably real vision Frank Gilroy has drawn from Paula Fox's novel. These "desperate characters" live in a world of understated brutality and isolation which is made frightenly painful through the film's unusually detailed realism. The city, New York, is immediately the villian. culture which breeds its inhabitants' inhumanity and leads to the neurosis of intelligent and subtlety aware people like Sophie. The vision is uncompromisingly bleak, there isn't even the deft use of sound track music which the similar Sunday, Bloody, Sunday used to insulate the viewer. There is no music, only long silences after pregnant or terse remarks.

Early on the film introduces the rather dreary existence of Sophie and Otto, one of humorless suppers in their richly furnished Brooklyn Heights' apartment. He is a successful lawyer, she a translator of books; both are intelligent, witty, urbane, and probably once very attractive. Now they sit in feigned comfort as Otto callously explains how he broke off his long-term law partnership earlier in the day. Sophie ignores him for the company of a stray cat that comes by looking for food and, despite her husband's warnings, pets it. The cat bites her as we witness the first of many similar incidents which plague Sophie over the duration of the film. That evening they go out to a party where Sophie finds herself harassed by a group of self-righteous freaks and ignored by a man she had recently had a casual affair. Later she finds some relief in the sullen drunk anger of her husband's dejected law partner, but finds his wife's casual ignorance of her the next day another slight, but crippling, blow. Sophie seems to be at a point of breakdown yet none of her friends, even her husband, are aware anything is seriously wrong. They seem more locked in their own bubbles of self pity or glorification to be conscious of another person's problems.

In this sense the film bears a striking resemblance to Sherwood Anderson's Winesburg, Ohio. The characters here are the same sort of interesting "grotesques" that filled Anderson's equally pitiful view of the dying American town at mid-century. Desperate Characters extends that logic to our own urban horror. A horror where Sophie and Otto live in fear for their property and own safety. A world where getting by means being victimized by con men or rationalizing the vandalism of a group of thugs. In short a completely amoral and apathetic world. Desperate Characters shows us this, but only as a foundation for a more intricate framework, these are only symptoms of the general malaise; urban life is harried, is frustrating, can even be frightening, but still is bearable. What eventually is more crippling is the internalization and acceptance of these values that leads to a casual disintegration of any emotional commitment. Sophie and Otto are emotionally dead.

This comes together in the film's perfectly tuned climax. Sophie and Otto escape the city to visit their summer house and finally relax as they ride through the welcome change of scenery. Happiness ends quickly when they arrive at their house to find it senselessly vandalized. They are further humiliated and angered by the jocular attitude local law officials give their problem and when finally left alone, fume in frustration. Sophie half-heartedly begins to rationalize the vandals which Otto brutally shouts down. She finally breaks and turns to her husband. In perfect key with the opportunist philosophy inherent to city living and the film's argument, Otto uses the moment to overpower the passive Sophie. In this perverted sort of Social Darwinism, passivity is equated with weakness and the weak are to be plundered. The moment accentuates the spiralling hopelessness and inhumanity we first witnessed in the metaphorical cat bite. We perceive Sophie's suffering as not specifically caused by external forces, but rather an internal paralysis of the spirit. She cannot strike, she cannot shout, she must as Otto told her "Cope with it", no matter how unpleasant.

The vision is bleak, but never for a moment does the film propagandize or slip into a pseudo-Freudian personality study. Rather Gilroy has made a stark and sharp analysis of the disintegration of a young woman's life. His script is filled with the bitter bitchy banter long associated with the chic, cocktail party intelligensia. Yet the dialogue is double-edged; the characters do not come across as simple wisecracking paste-ups, as say in the plays of Neil Simon (the latest of which bears a striking similarity in plot and theme to this film. Desperate Characters articulates frustration with an unnerving honesty, perhaps too honest for its own good and will never be a great crowd-pleaser. This is unfortunate, for not only is Gilroy's script exceptional, his debut as director is also impressive. His taut construction keeps the film from being either too wordy or episodic, and all the elements, from split-second cutting to the superlative acting, cohere superbly.

Shirley MacLaine has been in a self-imposed retirement the past few years. Her career seemed to have collapsed with the overwhelming number of clinkers she starred in during the last decade. From What A Way To Go! through Women Times Seven (which is generally regarded as Victoria DeStea's cinema low) Miss MacLaine played a wide-eyed, witless heroine, a sort of sophisticated Doris Day. She wisely retired and waited for a complete character reversal such as the role of Sophie.

Shirley MacLaine captures the constant ache of Sophie's alienation with compassion and clarity. Her performance is in every way marvelous, glowing in comparison to harried women in similar films. Diary of a Mad Housewife, for instance, dealt with a similar theme in such a patronizing manner that all the depth was lost to surface laughs. The performances there were little more than cartoons. Richard Benjamin completely lacked the control Kenneth Mars exhibits in Desperate Characters. His boorish Otto is performed with such restraint as to accent the ambiguity of the character, making him seem more than the one-dimensional villian he easily could have become. My favorite moments in the film were those Sophie spent in the apartment of her witty, lonely friend perfectly drawn by Sada Thompson. Miss Thompson litterally sings her part and near single-handedly makes this cold, wordy film likable. In fact she doesn't even look like a woman at all sitting pasted and frumpy on her couch telling Sophie home truths, but rather a not too wise owl. She appears in the middle of the film in a lengthy scene that works like a fugue for voices and she is simply incandescent.

Living in the city for any length of time makes one aware of many of Gilroy's truths. To some of the film may seem overbearing, for me though it seems a far more lucid view of our current urban crisis. A number of scenes reflect reality with astounding accuracy. The man babbling to himself on the subway almost seems shocking in the film, but is commonplace to anyone who rides trains. On Boylston Street recently I heard an obviously bedraggled peer, perhaps a junkie, shout "plastic" at some people who refused to give him any money. The most startling incident right out of Desperate Characters happened to a friend of mine recently in Park Street terminal. He was descending the stairs when a man not too sure of his footing plummated down the steps mashing his head in cement. As a crowd gathered about the many, my friend ran for help. He excitedly told a station worker and policeman that a man had fallen and was pretty well smashed, to which the former coolly asked, "Well, where's the guy on duty down there?" Hearing the story, Mr. Gilroy's vision came to mind and his accuracy again shone through. In many small ways Desperate Characters is an unusual and remarkable film we shouldn't lose to oblivion.

Kenneth Mars and Shirley MacLaine in Desparate Characters. An unusually vivid look into our urban blight.

Hapless Harold and Maudlin Maude

Harold and Maude
a film written for the screen by Colin Higgens; directed by Hal Ashby; featuring Ruth Gordon, Bud Cort, and Vivian Pickles.

The principal running gag of Harold and Maude is young Harold's feigned suicides. He acts them with a sordid accuracy as numerous forms of self–destruction, from hanging to self–immolation, are employed to harass his carnivorous mother. Interspersed with these scenes is Harold's friendship with Maude, a seventy-nine year old life force who comes our way like Aunti Mame by way of The Sound of Music. This fusing of black comedy and sentimental romance is flat, conventional, and occasionally offensive as it managed to collide the worst of both genres: the banality of sophomoric satire and the saccharine flavor of the wholesome family film.

Harold's a poor little rich young man who finds his only pleasurable outlet is an obsession with death. Maude's nearing the end of a long life and is acutely aware of her end. They meet at one of the numerous funerals they attend and become friends. Harold moves from the stiffling conventionality of his mother and home to the supposed joy–filled antics of Maude. The theme of living life to its fullest is now about as cliche as the character of Maude and about as insufferable as the performance of Ruth Gordon who, this time around, does a pretty poor imitation of herself.

The story seems a fair premise for a small, off-beat film, but falters measurably when drenched with appalling sentimentality and simply tasteless routines satirizing some already well-worn targets. Again the aim is set on materialism, the military, the American Mother, and the vacuous nature of American life. These are done with about as much insight and style as to make Mad Magazine seem like Voltaire, and even worse Harold's entire situation seems to be misplaced from James Purdy's classic blank fairy tale Malcolm. There was only one genuinely funny gag involving Harold and the various computer dates his mother secures for him. In each of these Harold employs various forms of self-destruction to scare the girls away and even this grew tired by the final date. Nearly every other gag was tiring from the start; from ridiculing Harold's fascist uncle to his possessive mother we have shallow characterizations used by scriptwriter Colin Higgens as simple brunts for his insipid satire. The most tasteless routine involved a priest berating Harold for his carnal relationship with Maude. The scene seemed not a satire of the church because most priests would not speak with such obvious carnal knowledge. The scene, as a good deal of the humor, exploits the audience to indulge in the trendy vulgarity infecting most recent satirical films.

Beyond the appalling script is the flat direction of Hal Ashby who directed in the best of mindless television situation-comedy tradition. Even worse is the music score by Cat Stevens filled with repititous melodies and banal lyrics; and the lowest ebb the film reaches are in the lead performances of the titled duo. Bud Cort walks around with such an inane expression as to probably deserve the obnoxious Maude. The only decent performance is Vivian Pickles as Harold's distasteful Mum. Harold and Maude is a dichotomy of distinct comic genres that not only doesn't work, it's hardly even worth watching. The film's distinctive offensive nature and its overpressing conventionality make for a genuinely appalling entertainment.

The UMass Fine Arts Council events for second semester will begin with the Chamber Music Series.

The second of five internationally known chamber groups to appear in this series will be The Berlin Philharmonic Octet. Composed of members of the famous Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, the Octet has made several highly successful tours of the United States, Europe, South and Central America, and the Orient.

The Octet was formed during the musical tenure of the late Wilhelm Furtwangler, who felt that this ensemble would be qualified to extend the tradition of this famous orchestra in Germany and abroad. The Octet has appeared throughout Europe including performances at leading music festivals in Lucerne, Vienna, Edinburgh and Salzburg. Its repertoire includes the compositions of great German masters of this century including Hindemith, Henze and Blacher, as well as the classics for this combination of instruments.

The concert will take place on Thursday, Feb. 3 at 8:00 P.M. in Bowker. On Wednesday Feb. 16, at 8:00 in Bowker, The Tokyo String Quartet will perform. The Tokyo String Quartet was formed in 1969 by four brilliant, young Japanese musicians. All four are graduates of the Toho School of Music, where their first studies of chamber music repertoire began with the distinguished Hideo Saito.

The very popular Juilliard String Quartet will perform on Fri. March 17. This marks the sixth consecutive season the Juilliard String Quartet has appeared at the University. During these years the ensemble has developed a large and enthusiastic following in the area.

The Juilliard Quartet remains the world's ranking string quartet to many people the world over. Well known are its formidable level of artistry and its devotion to performing works by contemporary composers as well as the classic literature.

The 1971/72 Chamber Music Series concludes with a concert by the famed Amadeus String Quartet from England. The reputation of the ensemble was firmly established in America long before its 1952 debut as a result of the large number of recordings made by the Quartet on the Deutsche Grammophon, Angel, Westminister and HMV labels.

Although the Amadeus Quartet is based in London, only one of its members is a native Englishman, cellist Martin Lovett. The other three are Austrian-born and received their earliest musical training in Vienna. They left Austria as a result of the Nazi regime and settled in London, where all four became friends while studying together under Max Rostal. Their first performance in 1948 was a huge success, resulting in many concerts and radio broadcasts. In response to the great public acclaim for this Quartet, Queen Elizabeth II awarded its leader, Norbert Brainin, the Order of the British Empire in 1960, and in 1968 all four members received honorary Doctorates from the University of York. In addition to Mr. Brainin and Mr. Lovett, the Quartet members are Siegmund Nissel, violinist and Peter Schidlof, violist.

This concert will take place in Bowker Auditorium at 8:00 P.M. on Patriots Day, April 19, The Kuentz Chamber Orchestra of Paris will be in residence at the University from Feb. 28-29 and will give two performances at 8:00 P.M. in Bowker.

The Paul Kuentz Chamber Orchestra of Paris is an ensemble of fourteen prize-winning instrumentalists. The ensemble has given over one thousand concerts throughout Europe, United States, Canada and South Africa. The repertoire of the Paul Kuentz Chamber Orchestra of Paris spans three centuries, from 17th Century to 20th Century, but particularly praised by many critics are the ensemble's renditions of Bach. Joining the current North American tour is the distinguished German trumpet virtuoso, Adolf Scherbaum and soprano Barbara Schlick. Mr. Scherbaum, internationally recognized as one of the greatest trumpet soloists performing today, has joined the Paul Kuentz Chamber Orchestra for recording sessions with Deutsche Grammophon. The Paul Kuentz Chamber Orchestra of Paris will offer two different programs.

The Celebrity series will end with a concert in Curry Hicks Cage March 6 with a concert by the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra.

its Celebrity Series in many years. Recognizing that a taste for symphonic music should be developed on this campus before the opening of the Fine Arts Center in 1974, the Council has invited one of the nation's finest orchestras to perform here in 1972. The St. Louis Symphony Orchestra is the nation's second oldest symphony orchestra, predating even our own Boston Symphony Orchestra. Throughout the years, Easterners have been aware of the good music being made in St. Louis by its' resident symphony orchestra particularly during the quarter century under the direction of Vladimir Golschmann, and most recently during the tenure of the distinguished Czech-born Music Director and Conductor, Walter Susskind.

National critical acclaim for the Orchestra has risen greatly over the years, and today it is considered one of the nation's top ten major orchestras. Maestro Susskind makes his second appearance at the University, having appeared here some years ago as conductor of the visiting Toronto Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Susskind has regularly conducted the Scottish National Orchestra and has made numerous recordings in England with the Philharmonia Orchestra. For this engagement, the Orchestra has programed Mozart's Symphony No. 40 in G Minor and Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 9 in D.

Special events sponsored by the Council include an appearance by the Ridiculous Theatrical Company, Thur.-Sat. Feb. 10-12.

In an effort to acquaint the University community with the theatre extant in Greenwich Village today and other off-Broadway movements, the Fine Arts Council has invited Charles Ludlam's Ridiculous Theatrical Co. to perform during a half-week residency in February. During this engagement, The Ridiculous Theatrical Company will perform its noted productions, "Bluebeard", "The Grand Tarot" and "Eunuchs of the Forbidden City".

Mel Gussow wrote in The New York Times: "Charles Ludlam has apparently seen, adored, laughed at, been scared to death by and memorized every mad-doctor movie ever made. 'Bluebeard,' which he wrote, directed and starred in, is a distillation of that ghoulish genre, and serves successfully as both a loving paean and a lunatic parody. Ludlam's performance is deliciously rococo, and obviously he has infected everyone in his Ridiculous Theatrical Company. For one thing, the mask-like make-up, which is credited to the entire company, is near-miraculous (a knobby-faced slavery, a gilt-skinned angel)." As a result of the overwhelming response of the capacity audiences attending last season's Alvin Ailey American Dance Theatre performances at the University, the Fine Arts Council has invited this company to spend an entire week on this campus during our 1971/72 season.

The Ailey company will perform four evening concerts in Bowker Auditorium and will be featured in several Master Classes/Lecture Demonstrations on campus and in neighboring public schools.

The Alvin Ailey American Dance Theatre, a company of fifteen exciting young dancers, has electrified audiences and critics since its origination in New York in 1958. On round-the-world tours in America, Europe, Africa the Far and Middle East, and the Soviet Union, the company has presented the heritage of the American Negro...his legacy of music and dance, his moods of sorrow, joy and hope...through the medium of modern dance. The music is jazz, blues and spirituals. The dancing is ecstatis, dramatic and vital. The experience is total "dance theatre." In addition to his own choreography, Alvin Ailey presents works by other major artists including Talley Beatty, Pauline Koner and Louis Johnson.

The Company will be in residence from March 20-15. The third of what will eventually total five special events in this Fine Arts council series will be the Fine Arts Council has not presented a full symphony orchestra in Louis Symphony Orchestra will perform a single concert in Curry Hicks Cage and every effort will be made to create the best concert-hall environment possible, realizing, of course, that an ideal situation cannot be fully realized owing to the character and main function of this facility.

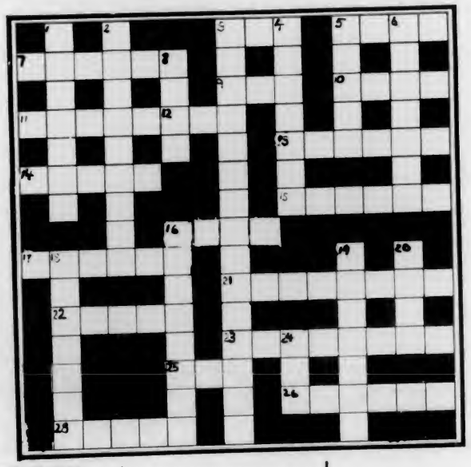
Bela Bartok Choir from Eotvos Lorand University, Budapest, Hungry. In early April, 1972, fifteen choruses from throughout the world will meet at Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts to participate in the Third International University Choral Festival. The Festival is under the direction of the noted conductor Robert Shaw, with Leonard de Paur serving as Associate Director. As in previous Festival months, one location in the United States has been selected as the site of a "mini-festival" within the larger Festival. For 1972, the "five-college area" has been selected as the site for the mini-festival and four of the choruses will come to this area for individual concerts on the campuses of Amherst, Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges and the University. They will join together with the choruses of the host schools in a large program at John M. Greene Hall on the Smith College campus, Wednesday evening, April 12, 1972.

The UMass Fine Arts Council, as the host on this campus, with the cooperation of the University Chorale, will welcome the Bela Bartok Choir of Eotvos Lorand University, Budapest, Hungary. This noted choir will reside at the University April 11-13 and will offer a concert on Tuesday afternoon, April 11 at 4 P.M. in Memorial Hall. Tickets to this concert will be available without charge by contacting the Fine Arts Council office, 125 Herter Hall. It is hoped that a mutually rewarding experience between the students of the Bela Bartok Choir and those of the University will occur during this brief visit.

The legendary Preservation Hall Jazz Band of New Orleans will give its first regular academic year performance on April 13. The band has appeared on campus for three consecutive summers and its popularity warranted an appearance before those unfortunate students who do not have to attend the summer session. The Preservation Hall Jazz Bands (actually there are three touring groups now) present the very best Dixieland music. The members of the band have been touring in the United States and throughout the world playing true New Orleans Brand Jazz as they have played it for the Parishes around New Orleans. The final event of the season will be the appearance of the David Amram Jazz Quartet on May 4. The Fine Arts Council has received a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts in order to defray some of the expenses of a one-week residency by the noted musician, David Amram.

David Amram has composed over one hundred orchestral and chamber works, written two operas, plays French horn, guitar, piano, Pakistani flute, and bazookie, has conducted over one hundred symphony concerts, has published his autobiography, Vibrations (recently reissued in Viking/Compss paperback), was Leonard Bernstein's choice to be first composer-in-residence with the New York Philharmonic, has appeared on numerable television shows, plays jazz with his own group at the Village Gate and Fillmore East, loves to meet and rap with young people on musical subjects, will be recording his works for RCA this Fall, has been a newsboy, amateur boxer, soda-jerk, carpenter, busboy, sod-buster, gym instructor and soldier. He is alive and well, irrepressibly informal, and was our overwhelming choice for this special residency.



The Ridiculous Theatrical Company

If it seems that Mr. Amram has been characterized as a rennaisance man, this is an apt characterization. He is surely one of the most vital musicians on the current scene, and we are pleased to present him and his friends in the concluding event of the 1971/72 Fine Arts Council series. During his visit, Mr. Amram will be involved with many student musical groups and will perform a concert with his own jazz quartet on Thursday evening, May 4 in Bowker Auditorium at 8:00 p.m.

Tickets for all events go on sale two weeks before the event at the Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, 545-0202. Ticket prices: Umass undergraduates, $1.00-1.50; Other full-time students $2.00-2.50; UMass Faculty/staff $3.00; General public $3.50.

Poor Richard's Crossword makes its debut here with this tricky little number about Rock and Roll. The puzzle will appear each week with the solution from the previous issue. Each week our wily puzzle team will assemble and compile probably the most esoteric puzzle you may ever see. Still don't let their trivia-bloated minds (or trivially bloated minds) fool you. At last count some of them were still learning to count and a still larger group moved their lips when they read. Their puzzle, though, will make use of some positively obscure facts (they watch lots of television) which you just may take to your grave. Be Adept! Be Resourceful! Impress your friends with how much useless garbage you know! Fill in the blocks!

Films

The Big Sleep (Wednesday, Jerry Lewis Cinemas, Northampton)
An admirable detective film thanks mainly to the strong directing of Howard Hawkes and the exciting and delightful performances of Humphrey Bogart and Lauren Bacall. In this one Bogart plays a detective hired to protect two rich, spoiled heiresses. Bacall turns out ot be the more tolerable of the two sisters and as romance beckons the plot thickens to unbelievable lengths. Hawkes was quoted as saying he still can't figure it out, but no matter for this often confusing melodrama makes for a wonderful film by a fine American director. The script's by Hawkes and William Faulkner, adapted from the Raymond Chandler novel and the cast features Dorothy Malone who, in a bit part, has with Bogart one of the shortest trysts in the history of films.

Cisco Pike (Palace Theater, West Springfield)
A somewhat uneven contemporary drama about an ex-recording star and his dealing with a crooked policeman and drugs. The film has a fine cast; Gene Hackman in a role similar to his award-winning Popeye in The French Connection, Karen Walsh, the fine actress in Five Easy Pieces and Kris Kristofferson, the Rhodes Scholar country singer who is being tauted as the screen's latest matinee idol. Unfortunately his debut film never quite gets off the ground.

Cry Uncle! (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
A film which merits a much stronger epithet. One of the more obnoxious films of recent memories which purports to be a satire of sex films but falls victim to what it hoped to ridicule. The humor comes from watching a grossly overweight man, supposedly a police detective, humping all sorts of fleshy young ladies. Fun, fun indeed brought to you by the man who directed Joe. Replace the violence of that film with sex and you have a reasonably good indication of where this little epic is at.

Darling (The Talkie, Northampton)
John Schlesinger's uncompromisingly bleak account of a social climbing bitch graphically portrayed by Julie Christie in her Oscar-winning role. This is without a doubt one of Schlesinger's better films whose direction manages to keep this otherwise bitter account of a bed-hopping wench interesting. The performances are unusually fine with Miss Christie in firm control and ably supported by Dirk Bogarde. In the end, though, the film may prove to be too scathing for its own good as the distinct social millieu attacked really wasn't worth all the bother.

Diamonds Are Forever (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
Bond is back, or so the ads tell us; but this latest adaption of one of the many Ian Fleming novels is a rather undistinguished facsimile. The film lacks the style and humor which made the earlier films the best of the Sixties spy films; it isn't even good James Bond with Sean Connery looking too paunchy and old for 007. This film does have the distinction of being the quickest grossing films in history having made over $30 million dollars, only proving the Bond fad hardly has diminished since the heyday of Goldfinger.

Diary of a Mad Housewife (Sunday, SU Ballroom, 7, 7:30)
The harried urban housewife becomes the brunt of Frank Perry's sarcastic attack on the fashionable Upper West Side millieu. It is occasionally droll and funny with a sympathetic performance from Carrie Snodgrass in the title role, but the tone is patronizing and completely elusive of any depth or compassion. The film finally is unconvincing having sacrificed any value for a number of cheap jokes. This sorely shows in the supporting performances, mainly Richard Benjamin's nasty husband who is played in such a strident tone as to be completely unbelievable. Frank Langella fares better as the young woman's lover, but finally he becomes too vaguely drawn in the unbelievable conclusion. The script by Eleanor Perry proved to be the last collaboration of this husband and wife team. (Note: the band in the discotheque sequence is Alice Cooper).

Dirty Harry (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield; Wednesday, Calvin Theater, Northampton)
A stunning police drama tautly directed by Don Siegel. Clint Eastwood is excellent as a San Franciscan policeman who is assigned to catch a vicious and sadistic sniper. The film may be too violent for some and does have a major flaw in its encroaching fascist tone; Liberals it seems, are to be blamed for all the wrongs of America and their pussy-footing with criminals allows abhorent villains to harass little children. On its own terms though, the film is an exceptional example of the genre.

$ (Jerry Lewis Cinemas, Northampton; Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
A reversal of the typical theft story, this time featuring Warren Beatty and Goldie Hawn as heisters who use their knowhow to rob safe deposit boxes kept by criminals in a German bank. The action is plentiful, unfortunately it seems hardly worth the bother with a drawn-out chase scene and silly humor. Recommended for only the die-hard Goldie Hawn fans.

The French Connection (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield; Campus Cinemas, Hadley' Calvin Theater, Northampton.)
A fact-based account of how police trackdown a shipment of heroin in New York City which is a fast, flashy, and fascinating thriller. The grittiness and chaos of New York City is captured at breakneck speed and brutality by director William Friedkin who has fashioned perhaps the stylish and finest thriller in some time. Gene Hackman plays a boorish detective who, as the antisocial, antihuman, detective, somewhere between Bullitt and Joe, the latest film cliche.

The Gang That Couldn't Shoot Straight (Amherst Cinemas, Amherst)
Jimmy Breslin amazingly readable and funny novel has been made into a surprizingly flat and dull film. The joke about two two-bit gangs is bungled and the humor moves from occasionally funny to boring repetition all too quickly, and some of the ethnic humor and various routines are tasteless. Satire is a difficult art and its obvious that director James Goldstone and scriptwriter Hugo Walt are novices at its execution. The cast, comprised mostly of Mafia caricatures, is headed by Jerry Orbach and Jo Van Fleet.

The Go-Between (Jerry Lewis Cinema, Northampton)
British director Joseph Losey had wanted to film L.P. Hartley's novel after he first read it, in fact he even employed Harold Pinter to write the script back in 1964 but had to scrap it due to legal problems. Finally, though, the two got together, made The Go-Between, and the result is one of the best films to come out of Britain this past year. Hartley's novel was a stinging indictment of a class hypocrisy in Victorian England in which a young boy vacationing at a posh summer house is forced into becoming a post man between the heiress of the hall and a tenant farmer who lives nearby. The result of the affair is disastrous for all three and the film is devastating in its own coldhearted way. Nearly everything about this film works as a cohesive whole; Pinter's script uses the elegant story as contrast to the hypocrisy that lies beneath and Losey accentuates this with direction that lovingly evokes the period while making ironic comment on its sordidness.

House of Wax (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
Originally released in 1964 as one of the first three-dimensional films, this little macarbe drama about the revenge of a mad wax museum curator is a cut above the average. Never mind its coming on a bit too heavy, enjoy the three-dimensional effects (which include many perspective shots and one unnecessarily prolonged sequence when a barker bangs his paddle ball down your throat.) Vincent Price is appropriately diabolical as the vengeance-seeking madman.

Patton (Thursday, SU Ballroom, 6:45 and 10)
Last year's big winner at the Oscars is a fine example of exciting, professional filmmaking. The extremely perceptive and literate script interprets the controversial life of World War Two's most individualistic and interesting generals. Franklin Schaffner's direction is competent and occasionally visually exciting, but the film's principal virtue is the absolutely knock-out performance of George C. Scott in the title role. Scott literally lives and breathes this difficult role with an electrifying excitement. Where the film may slip is in its schizoid viewpoint towards the war which seems s purposively vague enough to please both doves and hawks.

Sacco and Vanzetti (Academy of Music, Northampton)
A rather pedestrian and overtly opinionated look at the infamous American injustice which casts a not too accurate eye on today's judicial conditions. The film suffers from stuffing its political theme down the audience's throat instead of telling the story of how the U.S. government abused the rights of two Italian anarchist accused of murder in the political hysteria of the early Twenties. The focus, on the political conditions now existing today, only makes the film that much worse.

Satyricon (Tuesday, Gamble Aud., Mount Holyoke College, 8)
Fellini's searing, highly individualistic vision of pagan Rome at the time prior to Christ. The story chronicles the adventures of three young bisexual boys in the often grotesque and horrifying culture. The film may seem a bit long, but manages to graphically portray this positively decadent period with a shattering effect.

Straw Dogs (Campus Cinemas, Hadley; Showcase Cinemas, W Springfield)
Sam Peckinpah is back and once again showing us the bleaker side of man's nature in this near repellent study of contemporary violence. Dustin Hoffman plays a milktoast math professor who finds himself fed up with the violence of our culture and seeks refuge in his wife's little Cornish village. His running away does little good as the film moves to an effectively revolting conclusion, showing us, once again, the evil which lurks in the hearts of all men. Hoffman suffers appropriately in a respectable film of a somewhat dubious value.

Sunday, Bloody, Sunday (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
John Schlesinger has had a career distinguished by fine films with remarkable performances. His latest film is remarkable in every way possible as it not only contains three of the finest performances of the year, but also the year's best script and the most successful directorial job. Schlesinger has captured every nuance of Penelope Gillait wordy and wonderfully entertaining script; Sunday explores human relationships to such a fine degree that it makes all other films look childish by comparison. The relationship explored is one between three people, two men and a woman. Bob Elkins, a young artist is having affairs with Alex, a young businesswoman, and Dr. Daniel Hirsh, a middle-aged physician.
Peter Finch is finally given a role of deep complexities and handles it more than ably. Glenda Jackson plays Alex with a humorous mad restraint, finally escaping from being type cast as another loon, and Murray Head has the pivotal role of Bobby and makes quite an impressive debut with it.

West Side Story (Tuesday, Wednesday; Campus Center Auditorium)
When this film was originally released it won nearly every conceivable award and was heralded as the greatest film musical ever produced. This praise seems ludicrous upon reseeing as the original Sondheim- Bernstein- Laurents-Robbins stage musical seems woefully haggard. The only distinguishing asset is the breathtaking choregraphy and the well-performed score, otherwise the musical seems stagey and pretentiously arty. The Romeo and Juliet story is retold in the streets of New York and the backlots of Hollywood and nearly every sociological cliche is employed in a shamelessly vacuous script. Robert Wise's direction is plodding and the only time the film moves is when the Jerome Robbins choregraphy moves dancers like George Chakaris, Russ Tamblyn, and Tucker Smith into a frenzy.

Salzman Offered Job; Meeting Ends In Chaos

By MDC STAFF

In a tumultous Board of Trustees meeting Friday in Boston UMass Boston Chancellor Francis Broderick offered, in a letter read by President Wood, to reappoint Freda Salzman to the position she had been fired from two years ago, but was not able to quell protest over Mrs. Salzman's being refused tenure and back pay.

Before the meeting was adjourned the hall in the Statler Hilton Hotel had erupted with chants from the audience supporting Mrs. Salzman. Reportedly a table was thrown against a door in an attempt to block the Trustees exit from the hall, and police were used to clear the aisles.

After the meeting was adjourned, the crowd quieted and discussion took place between the audience and a few of the Trustees, particularly Trustees Shailer and Sandwen. Most of the Board of Trustees left immediately after the adjournment.

Mrs. Salzman, of Brookline, said after the meeting she had not yet seen the letter, adding, "I would like to wait to see the actual offer and what the department of physics thinks" before she commented further.

She was dropped from the faculty in 1969 on grounds that her husband, Dr. George Salzman, held a tenured appointment in the same department.

Mrs. Salzman claims she was a victim of discrimination against women and has filed complaints with the Mass. Commission Against Discrimination and the U.S. Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare.

Last month, trustees announced they had rewritten their hiring and promotion policies to enable husbands and wives to serve on the same staff, but they did not reappoint Dr. (Mrs.) Salzman.

President Wood, at the time, said the ruling would not be retroactive.

Mrs. Salzman's case was not on the trustees' agenda yesterday, but her husband was allowed to address the board.

He criticized the board, saying, "You want a subservient faculty. You want us to crawl...The board has raised hell with my life and with my wife's life and if I have to, I'm going to raise hell with yours."

He asked the board to answer questions concerning tenure, one of them being, "Why was tenure offered to me and not my wife?"

The board sat in silence, refusing to answer any questions as 30 Salzman supporters, composed of students and teachers, chanted, "We want an answer now."

Dennis Crowley, acting chairman of the board, said there would be no immediate action on the matter and ended the meeting.

Afterwards, Dr. Salzman said, the main question he wanted answered was whether or not his wife would be reappointed with tenure.

Earlier, Dr. Wood announced the appointment of Peter Edelman of Newton as university vice president for policy and plans. His duties will involve advising the president and trustees on "changing national patterns in higher education, on proposed institutional innovations, and on new university public service."

Background To Davis Case

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The following background of Angela Davis' case is being presented in connection with the rally to be held at 7 p.m. tonight in the Student Union Ballroom. The rally tonight is calling for support of Angela Davis and all political prisoners, and for Miss Davis' release on reasonable bail pending trial.)

Angela Y. Davis, a Black woman Communist is going on trial for her life in California. The State of California has charged her with murder, kidnap, and conspiracy. It bases its case on three points. The first is that Angela Davis' political ties with the Soledad Brothers Defense Committee. The second is Jonathon Jackson's connection with Miss Davis through their political affiliations. The third is that guns allegedly bought by Miss Davis were allegedly used in the August 7 escape attempt led by Mr. Jackson.

In the spring of 1969, Angela Davis had just declared membership in the Communist Party of the United States following F.B.I. exposure. The University of California Board of Regents fired her on September 19,1969 because of her political beliefs. The faculty of UCLA, where Miss Davis was teaching, voted 539-12 to condemn the ruling and 551-4 to rescind their own 1950 resolution barring Communists from teaching at the university. 2,000 students then attended her course on: "Recurring Philosophical Themes in Black Literature". During this time a Superior Court judge ruled that the firing was unconstitutional and ordered Miss Davis reinstated. For the rest of the year she became the target of harassment by right-wingers, racists, and kooks.

Due to the numerous threats against her life, bodyguards were with her constantly. Jonathon Jackson, at the time working for the defense of his brother George Jackson and other prisoners, became one of her bodyguards. The two were often seen together at rallies.

Following the end of the school year, the Regents refused to rehire Miss Davis for the next year citing her "extramural activities" (political work) were taking up too much of her time. The faculty again voted to support Miss Davis, this time from their own salaries.

During the summer Miss Davis intensified her work in building a mass movement for political prisoners. Jonathon Jackson became increasingly appalled at the conditions inmates were being subjected to. He decided to free some of the inmates who could then publicize the plight of prison life. On August 7, 1970 he entered the Marin County Court room, allegedly gave weapons to a defendant and two other inmates, then they left the room with five hostages and entered a van. The police opened fire on the van and Jackson, the defendant, one of the inmates and the judge were killed.

Within a few days the police alleged the guns used were bought by Angela Y. Davis over a three year period. Fearing for her life she went underground. Her claim of innocence is based on the fact the Communist Party rejects individual acts of terrorism as politically viable-calling instead for mass movement. Political Prisoners are usually ill treated (Henry Winston another Black Communist lost his eyesight in 1960 while in a U.S. prison). Following two months of one of the most massive manhunts in our nation's history, she was captured in Manhattan.

For 16 months since October 1970 Miss Davis has been in prison, most of that time has been in solitary confinement. There is documentary evidence that Angela Davis' health is deteriorating due to imprisonment. Over 35,000 signatures have been gathered and sent to both the court and Gov. Reagan asking that Angela be let out on bail. The judge has refused to grant her bail although she was recommended for it by the State Parole board. In doing so the judge dropped customary legal procedure and failed to give evidence where bail had been denied in a similar case. The decision is being appealed. Her trial was moved to an almost all white community, Palo Alto, where she is now waiting trial.

Angela Y. Davis In Court Today

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP)-Black revolutionary Angela Davis will appear in court here today for arguments on four defense motions attacking jury selection, asking the state to pay defense costs and permit another move of her murder-kidnap trial.

The 28-year-old Communist and former UCLA philosophy instructor was scheduled to go on trial Jan. 31 on murder, kidnapping and conspiracy charges from the Aug. 7, 1970 shootout at the Marin County Civic Center in which four persons died.

But the trial has been delayed to hear the motions. The prosecution estimates arguments will take two weeks, but the defense says they may take up to a month.

The trial was moved here from San Rafael-scene of the shootout. The defense now says widespread publicity about the cost of the trial and security expenses will prevent a fair trial. So, they have asked that it be moved again.

Chief defense attorney Howard Moore, Jr. said he also has asked the court to order payment of "reasonable" expenses from public funds for Miss Davis' defense.

The defense also has filed two motions attacking selection of a jury panel. Moore has expressed concern about possible discrimination on the basis of race, financial condition, sex or ethics.

Miss Davis has been jailed in the county's Palo Alto facilities while workmen remodeled a section of the main Santa Clara County Jail here for her, and other women.

Officials say the new living quarters are just about ready.

Miss Davis will have her own cell with a single bunk facing the frosted windows of the exercise yard. Two other cells in the section can accommodate two women each. The women will be the first female inmates there in nine years.

She will also have a separate work cell-10 by 14 feet-where her private television will be installed. Another television set will be installed on the wall of the corridor for use by all the women inmates.

Senior Committee Plans Activities

By JEANNETTE MARTINEAU

The Senior Committee, chaired by Margie Davis, was divided into three sub-committees last night in order to organize its members to fulfill the Committee's duties.

The Constitutional committee was formed "to revise membership requirements and the 1% stipulation," and set guidelines for future Senior Committees. According to the Student Senate who proposed the Committee, in order to function legally, a minimum attendance of one per cent of the Senior class, (i.e. 34 seniors) is required.

The Senior Day committee was established in response to a Senior poll taken at Registration. According to this poll 62% favored the traditional Senior Day"...with "no barbecue"..."no mugs".

The Class Gift Committee also benefited from the pole, as a majority of seniors preferred a scholarship or loan fund.

Each committee elected its own chairman and was left to further deliberate related issues.

Also discussed was the attendance of juniors at Senior Committee meetings, and their number and selection process for the Committee and the University Task Force.

The University Task Force, according to Dan Melley, "has five Senior representatives and one junior representative. The Force is responsible for various areas involved in the actual Commencement Day. Decisions to be made soon include ordering Caps and Gowns, diplomas and invitations, and whether or not raincoats should be provided.

It was also explained in the minutes of the preceding meeting, "that while the Trustees have the final decision on the Commencement Speakers and Honorary Degree Recipients, an Advisory Committee of two faculty members, an alumni, and two students and the Chancellor, is appointed. It was strongly recommended that the committee have a student appointed to the Trustees' Committee for Honorary Degrees in the future."

It was also decided that the distribution of plastic raingear at Commencement ceremonies be restricted to the graduating seniors.

The scheduling of the next Senior Committee meeting was postponed pending the results of the sub-committee meetings.

Birds Killed By Chemicals

HOMESTEAD, Fla. (AP)-Thousands of dead birds, many of them robins, have been found in a field here. Conservationists believe they were poisoned by chemical spraying.

Willard Dilley, president of the South Dade Audubon Society, said the birds flew into South Florida about a week ago on their annual southerly migration.

Callahan Says No Drug Raids Planned

District Attorney John Callahan, makes a point at a lecture he gave late last year. In an MDC interview Callahan defined his role in handling the drug situation at UMass and Hampshire County. (Photo by Alan Chapman)

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

"I have no reason at this time to believe that there will be a mass drug raid (at UMass)," said Northampton District Attorney John Callahan in accessing the drug situation on campus during an MDC interview last Wednesday.

Callahan also explained his limited influence in the mass drug raids last spring which resulted in the arrest of over 50 students. He said his office did not have a direct influence in the arrests, the State Police conducted the investigation. In fact, the D.A. office did not have any control over their investigation, he said.

Callahan said the State Police in their investigation last spring on campus used one undercover police officer to make quantity buys of "harmful and addicted drugs". The main target of these raids was the dealer, he said.

Asked for the reasoning behind the raid, Callahan replied that his reports indicated that the UMass campus was a center of heavy drug traffic which was beginning to expand to the outside community. He said the local high schools and junior high schools were "beginning to panic."

Callahan explained that his limited influence on the raids included providing the State Police with the necessary money for the investigation. He also said he informed the police of his reports which indicated that the UMass campus was a center for drug traffic.

On the question of did he notice an increase or decrease in the drug traffic in the Amherst area since the raid, he said there is no way of comparing the amount of drug traffic. Asked for one positive result of the raid, Callahan replied, "The number of people who were selling harmful drugs were arrested and prosecuted."

Room To Move is now sponsoring a poll which would determine if the student body as a whole endorses the use of "undercover agents" on campus. On campus there is some question as to what constitutes an undercover agent. In the spring investigation there was only one undercover man used, a State Police Officer.

As far as informers go, they do exist on campus. Any person can go to a police station and inform on a friend or an acquaintance. Callahan said there are all kinds of informers. They run from the "high calibre person in the community to the junkie," he said.

Callahan said the money coming from his office to the best of his knowledge has never been spent on paid informers.

Callahan said he has received fair coverage from the local newspapers except for one: the Collegian. He termed the editorials of the Collegian as being "dishonest" and said the paper has editorialized against him in pictures by its selection of certain pictures.

Concerning his involvement in local politics, he has never been active in the local democratic party, he said. Asked if he has fulfilled the campaign promises which he made last year, Callahan replied, "I think we've done many of the things we said we would do."

He does not know if he will run for re-election when his term of office expires in three years, he said. Callahan replied in the affirmative when asked if he would expect to receive the 18-21 vote in the next election.

On the Massachusetts drinking age, Callahan told the MDC: "I think it should be reduced to 18."

Concerning the advantages of the D.A. job, Callahan stated, "The job enables one to practice law and to participate in a significant manner in the problems of one's community."

Sex Craft Shop Opens In Toronto

TORONTO (AP)-Generations of Canadians have regarded this Ontario metropolis as "Toronto the good," a city of piety and propriety. Now it has its first European-style sex shop.

"The community is becoming more mature," says the proprietor, Mary Sutherland. She is 36, the mother of three, and reports a happy marriage of 15 years.

Her shop, called Lovecraft, Ltd., may grow into a Canadian chain. She declares it's "filling a very definite need in the community."

Hundreds of people, with men predominating 2 to 1, have been passing through Lovecraft in waves that has left Mrs. Sutherland astounded.

"It's like Grand Central Station around here," she sighed. "On Saturdays the customers line up down the steps and out onto the sidewalks waiting to get in to see what we're selling." Most of the offerings are designed to deal with specific sexual problems or purposes.

There are an array of male contraceptives, erotic posters, erotic books and magazines, do-it-yourself pregnancy testing kits and transistorized gadgets that do not lend themselves easily to description.

"I was in Europe last spring looking at teaching aids for emotionally disturbed children," Mrs. Sutherland says. She kept noticing sex shops, and decided Toronto was ready for one.

"I did a lot of research on who the customers were and what the European stores were offering, and when I got back to Canada I started tracking down suppliers. Getting the suppliers lined up was the most difficult aspect of it from a business standpoint."

Mrs. Sutherland took on a partner, Anne Amitay, 25, who says her job "is quite a change from my last job-I used to teach nursery school."

They spent several weeks scouting for the right location. They finally picked a vacant boutique in the Yorkville district, once known as the Flower Power capital.

Both women have had experience in counseling.

SUG Board Might Dissolve By Constitutional Amendment

By JOHN DONNELLY

The Student Union Governing (SUG) Board will neet next Thursday to vote on a bill proposed by Phil Cohen, an ex-SUG Board member, "to amend the constitution of the Campus Center Student Union Governing Board by deletion."

The bill was raised for various reasons. Rocky Hodgeson, SUG Board Vice President, has said, "The bill will be used to raise (student's) interest so the University will know they have to deal with us in a better way." Others feel the bill will open discussion about the true purpose of SUG Board so that it may become stronger; some feel it is an effective organization, and some don't care. Phil Cohen doubts the bill will get the necessary two thirds vote to pass and whimsically added, "If it does pass the Chancellor may still veto it."

The SUG Board is comprised of 25 to 28 students with alumnae representative. It governs the Student Union and the Campus Center. The purpose of the Campus Center was to gain a conference center for continued education, which the state would not finance. The SUG Board acts as a buffer between the students, who pay for the use of the Campus Center through a yearly $60.00 fee, and the Administration.

SUG Board's function is to establish policy by voting on bills initiated by the Management. A new constitution was drafted and passed in 1971 giving the SUG Board more administrative power and leaving veto power only to the Acting Chancellor of the university, Randolph Bromery.

The results of the new constitution have been expressed as "disappointing" by some SUG Board members and they believe, as Phil Cohen stated, "SUG Board can do anything they want as long as the Administration wants them to do it."

"Disaster" Strikes Conn.

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP)-Hurricane Giner, the "worst storm in Connecticut history, "hit" the state Sunday, but only about 400 people knew about it.

It was a mock disaster, the first state-wide exercise of its kind in the country, designed to test the ability of the Office of Civil Defense, the National Guard, police and the public utilities to deal with natural disasters.

The training exercise took place at the National Guard Armory in Hartford and involved 250 simulated problems set up by the Guard.

Among the "disasters":

The Bulkeley Bridge in Hartford, the Gold Star Bridge in New London and the Housatonic bridge in Stratford collapsed, snipers were loose in the streets, two criminals escaped, a reservoir came close to collapsing, power and telephone lines were destroyed and general alarm fires raged in several cities.

"I hope we never see this," said Col. John Level of the National Guard.

Berrigan Trial Jurors Sought

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — Jury selection moves into the second week today in the trial of antiwar priest Philip Berrigan and six others accused of conspiracy including an alleged plot to kidnap presidential adviser Henry Kissinger.

No one has been seated yet in the U.S. District Court Jury box, and it may take another week or two before a jury is selected.

Opposing attorneys, joined by Judge R. Dixon Herman, are questioning prospective jurors to determine if they can render a verdict strictly on the evidence they hear in court, and not on what they may have read or heard in news accounts. Questions also have dealt with beliefs about the Vietnam war and Catholicism.

"The jury must be as impartial and as free of prejudice as we can possibly find," insists Leonard Boudin, one of the eight defense lawyers. He is also counsel for Daniel Ellsberg, accused by the government, in another antiwar case, of exposing the secret Pentagon Papers.

The defendants are charged with conspiring to kidnap Kissinger, bomb heating tunnels under federal buildings in Washington, D.C., and destroy draft files in Selective Service offices around the country.

The original panel of 175 veniremen is nearly exhausted. Only 25 have survived the individual questioning, and 19 others are waiting to be interrogated separately.

Because this group of 44 likely will not be enough to choose a jury of 12 plus six alternates-because of preemptory challenges available to opposing counsel-Herman has ordered an additional 65 men and women to report Monday to the guarded ninth-floor courtroom.

In Brief...

U.S. Troops Will Not Be Sent Back to Vietnam

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Melvin R. Laird said Sunday the United States would not send American troops back to Vietnam in case of a new, unforeseen emergency.

"I'd certainly rule that out," he said when questioned on the ABC-TV program "Issues and Answers."

Laird said success of President Nixon's Vietnamization program-turning the combat role over to the South Vietnamese-would make such a move unnecessary.

Guerrillas Pull Off Argentina's Biggest Bank Robbery

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Fourteen leftist guerrillas pulled the biggest bank robbery in Argentina's history early Sunday, holding a dozen persons hostage for eight hours while they bored a hole into the vault of the state-owned National Development Bank.

No official estimate of the loss was given, but various sources said it could be as high as $800,000.

Israel Unsure Whether To Accept U.S. Proposal

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israel announced Sunday it still is unsure whether to accept an American bid to resume negotiations with Egypt on reopening the Suez Canal.

Foreign Minister Abba Eban told the cabinet that Israel and the United States have progressed in their attempt to define what role Washington would play if the talks start up again.

Russian Consumer Called Neglected

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet leaders said Sunday life must be improved for the neglected Russian consumer. They called for more goods, packaged foods, self-service stores and polite clerks.

The plan was spelled out in a resolution of the Communist party Central Committee and the Council of Ministers that was front-paged in Sunday's party organ, Pravda.

Two Brothers Shot, Victims Of Feud

PRIZREN, Yugoslavia (AP) - Two young brothers shot to death as they tended cattle by a mountain stream in the rural province of Kosovo were the latest victims of a blood feud among the region's Albanian minority authorities said.

Prisoners On Trial For Growing Grass In Pots

LOURENCO MARQUES, Mozambique (AP) — Four prisoners jailed for other crimes now face trial on charges of cultivating marijuana in their tin chamber pots. Authorities said they placed the crop in the jail yard each day for a dose of sun.

Hijacker Captured Alive

NEW YORK (AP) — A former mental patient who capped a bizarre career of crime and confinement by hijacking a jetliner was reported recovering at Bellevue hospital Sunday from bullet wounds in the shoulder and hand. His condition was described as "alert and stable."

FBI agents stood guard over Garrett Brock Trapnell, 33, whose history was said to include psychiatric treatment in nine hospitals, three escapes, piloting a stolen plane from California to the Bahamas, and six bank robberies in Canada.

At various times authorities have described him as "a James Bond type," "extremely dangerous," and "a real ladies' man."

He was shot Saturday by an FBI agent who boarded the hijacked Trans World Airlines plane at Kennedy Airport disguised as a relief crew member. The 93 other passengers and seven crew members were unharmed.

The shooting ended a 7-1/2 hour drama, which started when Trapnell pulled a gun from a fake plaster arm cast midway on a flight from Los Angeles to New York.

With a fully loaded automatic pistol pointed at a stewardess, he made a series of wild demands and threats over the plane's radio. He demanded freedeom for Angela Davis and to speak with President Nixon. He wanted to be flown to Europe and to Texas.

He made so many demands, a TWA vice president, J. Edward Frankum, said, that "we were unable to determine which one had priority."

The airline hooked his radio up with a telephone circuit and Trapnell talked with his former psychiatrist in Dallas and a friend whose release from the Dallas jail he demanded.

Trapnell was scheduled to be arraigned in a federal court Monday on air piracy charges. Upon conviction, the maximum penalty is death. The minmum is 20 years in prison.

Thirteen Killed In Londonderry

LONDONDERRY, Northern Ireland (AP) — Thirteen civilians were shot and killed Sunday in gunfire that erupted when British paratroopers stormed a Roman Catholic protest rally in order to grab rock-throwing youths, authorities reported.

The deaths touched off outraged protest from some Northern Irish leaders, who called the shootings an "awful slaughter," and "mass murder."

The death toll was Londonderry's worst in more than three years of communal strife pitting Roman Catholic militants against Protestants and the British soldiers sent to restore order.

The British said they knew of at least five dead, described as three snipers and two throwers of gasoline bombs. But hospital authorities reported 13 civilians killed and 16 others-including two women-treated for gunshot wounds.

"We'll never forget it," vowed Bernadette Devlin, the 24-year-old civil rights leader and member of the British Parliament. "We'll just have to continue the struggle to end this savagery."

The gunfire erupted as about 3,000 marchers from Roman Catholic districts gathered to hear an address by Miss Devlin at a protest rally held in defiance of a government ban.

The army said paratroopers moved into the crowd to snatch youngsters who were hurling rocks and bottles. The soldiers came under guerrilla sniper fire from a high apartment block, officers reported, and the exchange began.

"At no time did any of our units open fire on the British army prior to the army's opening fire," countered a leader of the Irish Republican Army, the illegal guerrilla group.

"The British army murdered innocent civilians in Derry today," he added. "We leave the world to judge who are the real terrorists."

The extremist Provisional wing of the IRA swore to avenge the deaths.

Witnesses said most victims were shot during gunfire near the scene of the rally, in Londonderry's Roman Catholic Bogside district-long a hotbed of Catholic activism.

William Cardinal Conway, Roman Catholic primate of all Ireland, said he was "deeply shocked at the news of the awful slaughter in Derry this afternoon."

Validity Of Hughes Book Still In Limbo

NEW YORK (AP) — Two new reports arose Sunday in the Clifford Irving-Howard Hughes autobiography case: that Irving spent some of the $650,000 intended for Hughes and that he also obtained material for his book from a computerized summary of the billionaire's press clippings.

Meanwhile, federal authorities in Florida confirmed they were checking subpoenaed hotel records in connection with Irving's reported rendezvous with Hughes.

Irving, who claimed the material for the book came from a series of interviews with the billionaire recluse, admitted through his attorney last week that $650,000 in checks paid by the McGraw-Hill Publishing Co., and intended for Hughes, was deposited in a Swiss bank by Irving's wife, Edith, posing as "Helga R. Hughes."

Irving's attorney, Maurice Nessen, said Mrs. Irving later withdrew the money and redeposited it in another Swiss bank, where it remained intact.

However, CBS and Time magazine said Sunday that Mrs. Irving had deposited only $450,000 in the second bank. The network said on its "60 Minutes" program that Irving had spent $50,000 of the remainder and the other $150,000 "is somewhere on the sunny Mediterranean isle of Ibiza," the Spanish island where the Irvings live.

Time's version was that "Irving is now frantically trying to raise $200,000" in case he has to pay it back to McGraw-Hill.

CBS also reported that at the second bank Mrs. Irving used the name "Hannah Rozencrantz" to open the account, with a West German I.D. card in that name. The real Hannah Rozencrantz, CBS said, is married to Mrs. Irving's former husband.

Meanwhile, various news reports indicated a possible source of Irving's material was a printout of a computerized collection of news stories and memoranda about Hughes compiled with the aid of a computer expert, Dr. John Pettit.

Although the information was reportedly compiled for the use of the Hughes organization, there was speculation that all or part of it was supplied to Irving by a disgruntled former or present Hughes employe.

Richard Hannah, the Hughes public relations man who arranged the Jan. 7 telephone conference call in which a man identified as Hughes talked to newsmen, said Sunday there was a "book" of biographical data on Hughes but it wouldn't have been enough material for Irvings's 999 pages of text.

Hannah also said the book contained no "secret or confidential memos," and that it was compiled by computer in a project directed by a senior vice president of the Hughes organization, Frank W. "Bill" Gay, with the help of Dr. Pettit, computer expert in charge of statistical matters for the organization.

The book was completed four years ago, Hannah said, and turned over to Robert Maheu, then a close Hughes associate who was later fired and who has engaged in a long legal fight with the Hughes interests.

Maheu has denied being the source of any of the material used in the Irving book.

Irving is scheduled to appear Monday before a Manhattan grand jury and also reportedly has been asked to appear before a federal grand jury in New York.

One version of the computer printout theory is contained in the current issue of Newsweek, which says that both Maheu and a onetime Hughes protege, John Meier, had access to the computer copy.

Meier, now running in New Mexico for the Democratic senatorial nomination, was quoted by Newsweek as denying any contact with Irving, saying: "That's ridiculous. I never met the man."

Black Caucus Held

BALTIMORE, Md. (AP) — Some 400 delegates to the National Black Enterprise Conference have unanimously approved plans for a nationwide black enterprise consortium.

At the close Saturday of the three-day meeting at Morgan State College, the delegates, mostly black businessmen and representatives of civil rights groups, established a task force to implement a "10-year plan" for the opening stages of the consortium.

"This national black conference will review, assess and lobby for and against those pieces of legislation relevant to black economic development," explained Rep. Parren J. Mitchell, D-Md., who presided over the conference sponsored by the congressional black caucus.

Recommendations drawn from the conference for the 10-year plan will form the basis of a report to be released to black businesses within a few weeks, said Wayman Wright, a conference spokesman.

Mitchell described the proposed consortium as "roughly comparable" to a national black chamber of commerce free to lobby and originate its own plans for black economic development.

Rep. Charles C. Diggs, Jr., D-Mich., chairman of the congressional black caucus, told the final conference session that their work "is a component in a series of conferences sponsored by the black caucus to develop the national black agenda."

Pollution Causing Acidic Rain

Rainfall in New England appears to have turned "surprisingly acid," a situation that could cause considerable damage to man-made structures and the area's land and water resources.

The finding is contained in a scientific report, which blames increasing air pollution for the trend. Although the increased acidity poses no threat to health, it has serious implications for this part of the country, the report said.

According to the report by scientists at Cornell, Yale and Dartmouth, precipitation studies in New England and New York have shown acidity to be between 10 and 100 times greater than might be expected.

The scientists said they were "very concerned" that the magnitude of the problem in the northeastern United States may have already reached the high proportions observed in Scandinavia.

Studies conducted in Sweden have shown that acidity in precipitation in that area has increased about 200 times since 1956. The shift has resulted in greater loss of nutritents from soil, acidification of lakes and streams which caused the deaths of salmon and trout, decreased growth of forests and corrosion of buildings and other structures.

In Sweden, corrosion of buildings and structures alone caused damage amounting to one percent of that country's gross national product.

Warning about the potential seriousness of the problem in the northeast, the scientists urged that there be no loosening of present air quality control standards as is being suggested in some quarters. They also urged that a massive study be made to determine what effect this acidity has on life in land and water eco-systems.

"THE TREND toward increasing acidity in rainfall," reported Dr. Gene E. Likens, associate professor of ecology at Cornell, "appears linked to mounting levels of certain gaseous pollutants such as sulfur and nitrogen oxides that can be converted chemically in the atmosphere to strong acids."

Likens came to his conclusions during studies he conducted with F. Herbert Bormann, professor of forest ecology at Yale, and Noye M. Johnson, professor of geology at Dartmouth.

IN A RELATED project, Robert H. Whittaker, professor of biology at Cornell, said there was a rapid decline in productivity in a 7,500-acre forest in the Hubbard Brook area of New Hampshire during the 1961-1965 period. A somewhat slower decrease was reported in the preceding decade, he said.

Since the 1961-1965 period was one of dry weather, Whittaker said, it cannot be accurately determined what part of the lack of growth is due to acidity and what part to lack of water. He described the forest as representatives of New England forests as a whole.

Dock Strikers Return To Negotiations

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — With West Coast docks virtually sealed to commercial shipping negotiators go back to the bargaining table Monday for the first time since longshoremen renewed the strike Jan. 17.

The International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union negotiating committee scheduled at 10 a.m. meeting before going into session four hours later with the employers' Pacific Maritime Association. Federal mediators also will be there.

Although spokesman would not comment officially, union sources indicated they felt their position has been strengthened by Saturday's extension of the dock tieup to Canada's West Coast. Another factor was the picketing that began Frdiay at the Mexican border and halted trucks bringing cargo to California from ships diverted to Ensenada, Mexico.

On Trial

It has been over thirteen months since Angela Davis has left the confines of the Marin County Civic Center. Since December 23, 1970 she has been incarcerated for her accused part in the August, 1970 courtroom liberation of James McClain, Ruchell Magee and William Christmas in which a judge, McClain, Christmas and Jackson, the actual instigator, were killed. Miss Davis was indicted in her absence and has been refused bail. She is still awaiting trial.

Considering the circumstances, it must at least be open to question whether Angela Davis can get a fair trial. Consider these facts. She was indicted by a grand jury composed of bankers, lawyers and businessmen-hardly a group of her peers. In fact, they are more likely to be the people she is attacking. The possibility of political discrimination can not be disregarded, especially since these people are white.

Secondly, she has been denied bail even though the Chief Deputy Probation Officer of Marin County stated in his report on Angela Davis' suitability for bail that she would "not flee the juridiction of the court." Apparently this was not enough for Judge Richard Arnason who ruled that bail would not be granted "solely and exclusively upon the legal issue." We are certainly not in a position to argue the legal issue with Judge Arnason yet we feel there are compelling reasons why Angela Davis should be released on bail.

First of all, one must consider the stigma attached to an accused person who must be escorted into the courtroom each day by the sheriff rather than appear on her own. Also, her incarceration has not allowed her to raise money for her own defense as the defendants in the Chicago conspiracy case were able to do.

Finally, there is strong evidence to support the claim that her health is declining rapidly and that she is gradually losing her eyesight. All of this and we must remember that she has not been convicted of any crime.

Not since Chicago has the court system been so much on trial. If Judge Arnason turns into another Hoffman, the basis for serious doubts about the equitability of the system will have been laid. The law, after all, can not exist as an independent body removed from society. It must be tempered with the humanity of the times.

Angela Davis may or may not be guilty. Yet if she is to be considered innocent until proven guilty, she should not be forced to endure her present situation any longer.

Horse Talk

WASHINGTON--Now that the football season is over, President Nixon is starting to talk to horses. The other day he congratulated Black Jack, the riderless horse in President Kennedy's funeral entourage, on his 25th birthday.

Knowing the President's penchant for sports, it wouldn't surprise me if Mr. Nixon telephones Ack-Ack, who was just chosen Horse of the Year by the American Turf Writers.

The call could go like this:

"Hello, Ack-Ack. This is President Nixon calling. I wanted to congratulate you on being named Horse of the Year. I think I can speak for every American in this country when I say how proud we all are of you."

"Neighhhhhhhhhhhhhhh."

"As President of all the people, as well as all the horses in our great country, I can tell you that I have been watching you for a long time, and I admire you not only for being Number 1, but for the way you have run in the face of great adversity. I've been in a few horse races myself and I know what it is like to finish out of the money. You, of course, remember what happened to me in California?"

"Neighhhhhhhhhhhhhhh."

"But the laurel wreaths go to those who say, 'Just because I lost is no reason to give up horse racing.' It's that will-to-win that has made American Presidents and American horses admired throughout the world. Are you still there?"

"Neighhhhhhhhhhhhhhh."

"I'm not sure if you're aware of this or not, but I used to do some horseback riding when I was in the Navy. Not at sea, of course, but when I got shore leave. And I believe I have some ideas for you that could help you win the Santa Anita Handicap. Would you care to hear them?"

"Neighhhhhhhhhhhhhhh."

"Good. Now here's my game plan. The race is a mile and a quarter, so you don't want to go out in front or some sprinter will try to tire you out. I'd say you lay back about third or fourth, five lengths behind the second horse. When you get to the three-quarter post, start perking up. Try to get to the outside by the time you reach the mile post. Lay back about second or third, no more than four lengths off the leader. Are you with me?"

"Neighhhhhhhhhhhhhhh."

"Now you start picking up four lengths, three lengths and at the final eighth pole you make your big move. The beauty of my plan is that if you follow this strategy you can win by a length and your jockey won't have to lay a whip on you. What you you think of it?"

"Neigh."

"Oh, I know what you're going to say. You're going to say I gave the Redskins a play and they lost 13 yards, and I gave Don Shula a play and Miami lost the Super Bowl, and I gave Pakistan a play and they lost half their country.

"But this time I'm sure my plan will work. Will you at least give it a try?"

"Neigh."

"Oh, by the way, Ack-Ack. Mrs. Nixon and I would like to ask you to a special prayer breakfast for horses at the White House next Sunday. I've invited Black Jack, Tom Fool, Native Dancer, Canonero II and all the U.S. park police horses in the Washington area.

"Billy Graham will conduct the service and his sermon is titled, 'What Good Is It to Win the Kentucky Derby if the Devil Is Waiting for You in the Paddock?'"

"Free Angela?"

The current campaign of protest against the imprisonment of Angela Y. Davis has become the "Cause Celebre" in a year characteristically lacking in emotion packed issues. American radicals, desperately searching for a rallying cry with which to mobilize their apathetic masses, feel that they have found it in "Free Angela". To them, Angela is a symbolic victim of racism, sexism, and fascism all rolled up into one big package deal.

It is interesting to note that the vanguard of the "Free Angela" crusade, locally and nationally (and internationally, for that matter) are individuals associated with the Communist party, of which Angela is a member. Although it must be pointed out that the majority of those who support the crusade have little or no sympathy for Communism, knowledge of the crusade's leaders and sponsors can be instrumental in analyzing the true nature of the cause.

The Angela Davis case has been like a revitalization tonic for the Communist party, which up until recently had been suffering from inner decay and lack of credibility. By elevating a fellow party member to a position of "martyrdom", the party has been able to restore some of its once shattered credibility in the eyes of youthful idealists. An interesting example of this "new respectability" that the party is taking on is Dr. Herbert Aptheker. Dr. Aptheker, who some acknowledge to be the party's leading "theoretician", had lost as America's leading apologist for Soviet totalitarianism, including Stalinism, Soviet anti-semitism, and the brutal annihilation of the national liberation movements in Hungary and Czechoslovakia. Presently, however, Dr. Aptheker can avoid being placed in the position of revealing his true allegiance to the cause of helping to defend and perpetuate Soviet totalitarianism, by means of his posturing as a defender of the underdog. Today, he is rarely introduced as a leading member of the Communist party, but rather as a friend of Angela or the late W.E.B. DuBois, who did a pretty generous amount of apologizing for Joseph Stalin back in the 1940's.

It is my personal opinion that the leadership in the "Free Angela" crusade will be an obstacle to the widespread promulgation of Angela's predicament. Most people still see an enormous hypocrisy in the fact that professional apologists for totalitarianism are posturing as civil libertarians. The situation is somewhat synonomous to the lack of widespread following which Dr. DuBois had, despite the fact that he was one of the most erudite scholars this country ever had.

A Question Of Form

(Ed. note: The following is the first in a series of five articles on Teacher-Course Evaluation.)

By NICK APOSTOLA

To the surprise of many, and to the jubilation of some, the Student Senate Academic Affairs Committee announced this week that it has decided to discontinue the Teacher-Course Evaluation service that it has been providing. The Office of Teacher-Course Evaluation has been in existence since the Fall of 1970, when the then Chairman of Academic Affairs, Thomas Filmore, among others, started the program.

The fact that the majority of the staff had resigned due to graduation, and the other ills that befall students, was just a catalyst in, not the major reason for the decision to close up shop. When Academic Affairs started this experiment, it was supposed to remain just that, an experiment. Money came in from both the Student Senate and the Provost's Office to start a systematic and reliable method of evaluating the faculty. Not only that, but it had to be in a form which lent itself to being published. That way the information could not only be used for tenure decisions, but also to warn students away from the poor and direct them to the good. At least this could be a touch more dependable than the grapevine.

The trouble with a teacher evaluation program run by students is that it has absolutely no clout. Students cannot force faculty members to evaluate their courses, much less force them to publish the results. Last spring the Teacher-Course Evaluation Office ran evaluations in 1,500 sections out of 4,000 sections taught at the University. And of those the results from only 650 sections could be published. In the others, the faculty had said no.

The excuses for not using the evaluation forms were too numerous to count. They ranged from "the forms are poorly constructed" to "the forms don't fit my courses." Some of these criticisms are valid. The form which was used is called the Illinois form because it was developed at the University of Illinois. The Illinois form is not the best ever devised, but its reliability has been tested. It does not give the professor detailed answers as to what he is doing right or wrong, but it is able to be transferred into a language that makes it easily publishable. It is not my intention to enter into a debate about the pros and cons of the Illinois form. To do so would be to hide the real issue, that of whether evaluation is to be published for everyone to see.

It would be impossible to discuss Teacher Evaluation without bringing up that old-time favorite, grading. It simply amazes me to hear the same faculty who defend grading as a necessary form of evaluation, denounce computerized forms. When a student walks into a class, he knows little, if anything, about what is expected of him. If an IBM evaluation form were used, the faculty member would know what he had to do to receive a good grade for the course.

The early universities had an interesting custom. After the lectures, as the professor was leaving the classroom, the students would place the amount they thought the professor deserved in his hood (one of the more practical applications of the PhD. hood). A primitive, but effective method of Teacher Evaluation.

Letters To The Editor

Minor Inaccuracies

To the Editor:

Mr. Steve Fine's front page article in the January 27, 1972, edition of the Collegian contains a few minor inaccuracies which I wish to correct. In the first place, Mr. Fine reports that Professor Joseph Burroughs, Faculty Senate Delegate to the Trustees, was disturbed because the Chairman of the Board, Joseph Healey, had not supplied copies of the responses of the Board to two requests from the Faculty Senate and to "six members of the Faculty Senate's Committee of Concern...." This is incorrect; Professor Burroughs disturbance was due to the fact that he, as Delegate to the Board of Trustees, had not received copies of the responses, nor was the substance of the responses reported during the Trustees' meeting. The Trustees had decided not to release the substance of the responses until they were delivered to the appropriate parties, namely, Dean Bruce Morris, Chairman of the Committee of Concern, and myself as Secretary of the Senate. Hence two further minor inaccuracies in Mr. Fine's article: Chairman Healey did not unilaterally decide to withhold the responses, as implied; and Dean Morris, not Professor Burroughs, was the recipient of the response to the Committee of Concern. Finally, President Wood was not unaware of the decision to withhold the responses, as stated in the article; he was simply not at liberty to release the responses at the request of Professor Burroughs since the Chairman had left the meeting earlier and the President was the Acting Chairman.

Listen And Learn

To the Editor:

During the next few weeks, you will be asked to make a decision on your priorities. The Western Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (WMPIRG) will ask for your support and your money to establish a PIRG in Western Mass. modeled after Ralph Nader's PIRG in Washington. You will be asked to endorse WMPIRG. You will be petitioned to establish a refundable $2 per semester tax to finance WMPIRG's operations.

You will have to decide whether the two dollars tax and WMPIRG are necessary and if your two dollar investment is worthwhile. You will be hearing quite a bit about the concept of PIRG--listen and make an informed decision.

Be Far Away

I may not still.
And yet I may
I heard them outside coming in.
I heard them fade away.
Surely, friend, you haven't helped.
Of that I was afraid.
I can't ignore them, though I try.
I could use a small vacation.
I could also use the pay.
I want just to dream, and to return again to far away.

I'll go, and never to return.
I'll travel, possibly to learn.
I'll talk with friends who know,
and sure to be most far enough away.
Be far enough away with them to show.
Be far away with them and hope to stay.

When I'm with you, I'm far away alone.
Stories, letters, magazines,
Poetry without a scene,
Books upon a shelf, an endless row.
It's near that time for far away to go.
Philosophise a way of life, far away to throw.

After all this time I thought I'd care about the things I'd like to share
With the friends I'd like to know about, who have been everywhere, and

Find it just as difficult to show they care about the things they know will really Matter to the lost and lonely people who discover every day
That to be free and happy is to be much more far away.
To be far away with them,
and to be there to stay.

I'd like to search me out a place that puts the backward straight.
and leaves right things alone when things like love come first because they're far away in the minds of those who put their lives and love ahead of hate, in hopes of finding peace of mind, knowing far away that peace of heart will bring to them the company of them to stay

Dissatisfied I was with what I thought I'd not become,
Though now I am what I have become,
and with that, too, I'm dissatisfied,
Because with what I have
I could have more than I now do,
And with that little extra

I could sharing be with you,
The evening, and the day...
the close, and far away.
Far enough away with them...
far away with them with you.

Winter Quiz

By JAN VILLANOVA

Select as many answers as you feel will best describe the disposition of a snowflake.

1. The weight of one snowflake
a) cannot be determined, because there is no way of picking a snowflake up without damaging it
b) depends entirely on its geometric design
c) is more accurately measured during the second snowfall of winter
d) varies within each of the standard time zones
e) is usually measured in micrograms
f) observed in mutual attraction to another snowflake is commonly called a binary snowflake
g) is influenced by atmospheric pressure
h) should be measured on location, to reflect its true weight at a given temperature
i) is equivalent to one carbon filing from a graphite pencil
j) is theoretically a volume of frozen water
k) has never been measured quickly enough to compensate for its melting factor
l) is greater at the bottom of a snowfall than at the top
m) does not include the presence of any bacteria or foreign matter
n) is influenced by gravity
o) is actually an average weight based on the sampling of many snowflakes per cubic centimeter
p) is the primary feature for identifying one snowflake from another
q) was lyrically described in the song "Pennies from Heaven"
r) has no effect in a body of water simply because the snowflake's level of displacement is in direct proportion to the body's rate of evaporation
s) is recorded in the World Almanac on page 238
t) gets heavier each year because of the water and air pollution
u) falls at 32 feet per second in any vacuum
v) cannot be measured using the Avoirdupois System
w) has been studied by the military to record and evaluate the friction caused on bombs dropped during a snowstorm
x) is concentrated towards its center
y) compared to the weight of the Milky Way is conceivably in ratio to the weight of all galaxies compared to the Infinite
z) none of the above

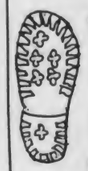
Youth Caucus Forms



There will be a meeting tomorrow night of all persons interested in forming a Western Regional Organization of the Massachusetts Youth Caucus. The Mass. Youth Caucus has been in operation since the first of the year and has been active in promoting greater youth involvement in the campaigns of liberal candidates throughout the state. Some of its most important work has been in placing young people on delegate slates and helping prepare their candidacies for state and town committees.

Tomorrow night's meeting was announced by Ellen Vollinger, who hopes a strong local organization among the 20 local colleges and other youth groups will raise issues in a meaningful manner this election year.

"In a year when conservative candidates (such as Pres. Nixon) are well organized and financed, organized youth can act as a powerful countervailing force," said Miss Vollinger. "Unorganized and unregistered youth will guarantee 1972 will be the year of Nixon's re-election," she said.

The meeting is to be held Tuesday, Feb. 1, at 7:30 PM in Davis Center at Smith College. For more information call Ellen Vollinger at 584-5262 or 584-2700 x295.

IRS Refunds Excise Taxes

WASHINGTON (AP)-Auto buyers and manufacturers have received about $557 million in auto excise tax refunds from the government since mid-December, the Internal Revenue Service said Sunday.

The IRS said the figure represents nearly half the total of about $1.2 billion expected to be refunded because of legislation passed Dec. 10 repealing the tax.

Of the total, the IRS said $1.1 billion will go to consumers and the remaining $100 million will be distributed to dealers as repayment for excise taxes on floor stock.

Nader To Speak On Consumer Abuse

Ralph Nader will speak at the Cage, Feb. 7, on consumer abuses and the current projects Nader and his Washington-based Public Interest Research Group (PIRG) have undertaken. Nader is being brought here by WMPIRG, the Western Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group. WMPIRG is part of a network of student run, directed and funded, local PIRGs being established across the country.

The first student PIRG was formed a year ago in Orgeon when Nader and PIRG attorneys Donald Ross and James Welch spoke at Oregon's seven state-supported colleges on behalf of an Oregon Student Public Inerest Research Group. They convinced students on those campuses that student interests needed representation and protection in the decision-making processes that create their physical, social, economic, and phychological environments. Shortly afterwards, 55% of Oregon's students signed a petition calling for the creation of OSPIRG to be funded by a refundable tax of $3 dollars a year. With the money they hired professional lawyers, scientists, social workers, etc., to work full-time with students on problems in the students' interests.

With this success, Nader and his crew started a campaign on 18 campuses in Minnesota which culminated in a petition drive that achieved 70% signatures. The students of Minnesota approved a $4 a year refundable tax to go to support the operations of MPIRG.

The student PIRG movement has started to spread across the country. Currently, 14 states are in the process of organizing PIRG's to be active and funded by the end of this year. They include Rhode Island, New Jersey, Illinois, Nebraska, Indiana, Eastern and Western Massachusetts. Conceivably, there could be 16 functioning groups by the end of this school year.

The most recent PIRG success (and the most resounding) was in Vermont where a petition drive was started in early November and was finished in a week with the Necessary majority. They have already hired their staff and are now interviewing for a Director of Staff. By mid-February they will be completely setup and ready to do projects.

At Nader's speech the Western Massachusetts PIRG will start a petition drive at UMass asking the students here to support a refundable $4 a year student tax proposal to go towards WMPIRG. WMPIRG is composed of twenty colleges in Western Mass. The money will be used to hire a full-time interdisciplinary staff of lawyers, scientists, urban specialists, etc., to work with students on consumer, environmental and other public interest issues effecting students and other citizens in the Western Massachusetts area.

BOSTON (AP)-Massachusetts General Hospital is experimenting with adding color pictures to medical records to overcome several problems of written communication, including sloppy handwriting by doctors.

Under the direction of Dr. Kenneth T. Bird at the hospital's Logan Airport Medical Station, the staff is snapping pictures of everything from infected toes to severly cut heads and placing these photos into the records.

"The records system of America today is largely word oriented, and, unfortunately it's in the worst mode-hand-writing," Dr. Bird says, "Vision is not properly utilized in records.

"Doctors up to now tend to communicate with so many people in handwriting that it gets sloppy in a hurry," Dr. Bird says. "The handwriting of the physician is notoriously poor."

A clinician can find in the records a color photo of a swollen arm which makes it present size and color more meaningful in judging the treatment. Dr. Bird sees photography as only the first step in the medical record of the future, which could eventually include sound recording, sketches and special typewriters.

"I'm certain the medical record of the future will be a type of video recording," Dr. Bird says. For example, he says, a patient who has a heart attach and respiratory complications would be recorded as soon as he entered the hospital.

Then, even years later, a doctor treating the patient will be able to see the symptoms of the attack as they happened and not have to read "breathing heavy, facial discoloration" on an obscure medical form.

African Art Exhibit Opens

The W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies announces the opening of an African Art Exhibit. The exhibited pieces are from the collection of Fode' Muhammed Doumbouya, originally from Guinee, West Africa. Monsieur Doumbouya, sells African art in his galleries in Dakai, Senegal and New York City. They are from several areas in West Africa and of varied mediums.

Included among the works are a Yoruba door, Bambara headress, Senufo mask and Baule figures. Each of twenty-two pieces exhibited is of considerable age.

The exhibit is open to the public from Thursday, February 3 through Thursday, February 10, from 10:00-4:00 P.M. in the Gallery of New Africa House (formerly Mills House).

UMass Gives 1080 Pints Of Blood

Career Seminar Offered At AIC

William W. Turner, director of placement and employment at American International College, will co-ordinate a career planning seminar to be offered on 10 consecutive Tuesday afternoons starting Feb. 22. The program, under the auspices of the AIC School of Business Administration, is "especially designed for members of the senior classes in colleges in this area," according to Dean Clinton M. Bowen.

Mr. Turner, said that all facets of career planning will be covered during the 10 weeks with several guest speakers taking part to fit the needs of the class.

Dr. Austin W. Flint, associate professor of psychology at AIC and an expert in the field of industrial psychology, will personally test each member of the class. The testing will include the intelligence, vocation, apptitude, and field of interest and each test will be interpreted and the student counseled by Dr. Flint.

In outlining the seminar, Mr. Turner said the topics to be covered will include: self-analysis, career analysis, development of a personal fact file, potential employers, research, job-finding methods, job interviews and performance on the job.

"Because of the serious shortage of positions available for college graduates today," Mr. Turner stated, "we believe this non-credit course should prove exceptionally beneficial. We have already experienced mush on-campus interest in career planning especially from members of Alpha Kappa Psi, the business fraternity."

Additional information is available from the placement office at AIC.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

I believe astrology's greatest contribution is a greater understanding of the dynamic element of time. Truly, "To everything there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven..."

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Emotions tend now to dominate logic. Correct this-be analytical. You will receive offer. But be sure you are getting fair exchange. If you give in too quickly, others may feel you are less worthy.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): New approach to old dilemma is necessary. Break out of rut. Defeat destructive habit pattern. You can do it-and know you can do it. You get backing from older individual. You will be more secure.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Ideas Ideas bear fruit. You are better able to communicate. Efforts receive recognition. You can find creative outlets. Opportunities multiply. Key is to be alert, optimistic. You're going places.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Emphasis in on money, personal possessions, ability to put together what is needed. New contact aids. Stress confidence, independence. Leo figures prominently. Give full play now to creative process.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Lend helping hand to Cancer born person. Cycle is high; you get what you want. But be sure you know what it is you really desire. Purchase apparel. You may be making surprise, personal appearance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You could receive special invitation. Clandestine meeting brings positive results. Maintain humor-be versatile. Work behind scenes. Keep confidential matters confidential. A secret will be revealed.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Problem of friend may temporarily delay progress. Realize that if you give of yourself, you also will receive. Make decision based on study of factual information. Discard mere rumors. Get to heart of matter.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Obtain hint from Libra message. Don't be in too much of a hurry. Accent now is on how and where to achieve goal. Unorthodox procedure brings results. Means changes are in order. Opposite sex is involved.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Lunar aspect spotlights long-range views, goals. Write, publish and advertise. You get surprise call from relative in transit. Maintain balance. Harmonize home surroundings. Be receptive, but practical.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You come to terms-with yourself. You find out where you stand--and how to stand taller. Setbacks are minor and should not be blown out of proportion. Money of mate, partner is involved. Be perceptive.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Lie low. Take time where important decisions are concerned. Guard reputation; accent public relations. Question of who owes who could be in picture. Let others know you are aware of legal rights.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Dependents are very much in picture. You may feel that too much is being asked. Key is to fulfill obligations. But don't give in to one who demands something for nothing. You will understand.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you can combine practicality with imagination. You can be a tough customer and also one who is gentle and persuasive. And, during this year, there will be a meaningful domestic change.

Frosh Hoopsters Waltz To Win

By FRED ROSENTHAL

Led by the scoring and rebounding of centers John Murphy and Bruce Guzowski the UMass freshman basketball team easily outclassed Bryant and Stratton by a score of 98-33 Saturday night at the Cage. The win upped UMass' record to 6-0.

The Little Redmen ran off the first nine points of the game and went on to build an insurmountable lead which just got bigger and bigger as the game went on.

After the UMass starting five built up a large lead, Coach Dan Gaudette substituted freely and got a stellar performance from reserve center, Bruce Guzowski. Guzowski (6'7) came up with 18 points and 17 rebounds as the frosh continued to run up the score.

The amazing thing about Guzowski's performance is that over the first five games he hadn't scored. When asked about the change he commented, "I was never a big star in high school and then I came here and played with guys who were all-state. It just took time to get my confidence." He added that he had worked read hard on his shooting over vacation.

Guzowski led UMass in scoring along with Murphy and forward, Tom Gilliams. Each had 18 points. Murphy had 22 rebounds and Gillams had 12. Endicott had 10 points and five assists. Jim Burke and Mike Flanagan scored 9 points apiece, and Flanagan had four assists.

The UMass freshmen now look forward to playing the Springfield College frosh tonight at 6:00 at the Cage.

Winter Games Hurting

SAPPORO, Japan (AP)-Avery Brundage, president of the International Olympic Committee, raised doubts Sunday that the Winter Olympics will survive much longer in their present form.

The 84-year-old president, speaking at the opening of the 72nd session of the IOC, lamented the rising costs and growing commercialism of skiing and figure-skating.

He said of the Winter Games: "They have accomplished a tremendous humanitarian service by popularizing healthy winter sport and recreation, but they seem to have their purpose and will find it hard to continue as an amateur event."

The IOC session opened amid the controversy surrounding the skiers who had been accused by Brundage of violating the Olympic code by carrying commercial names on their clothing and equipment. The committee is expected to decide Monday whether they will be allowed to compete in the eleventh Winter Olympics scheduled to start here next Thursday.

Crown Prince Akihito of Japan opened the session to fanfares of trumpets in the Hokkaido Welfare Hall in Sapporo. But Brundage, while paying tribute to the Japanese for their planning of the Games, was in no mood to skate over the problems which threaten to undermine the Winter Olympics.

He said the Winter Games, which started at Chamonix, France, in 1924, had lost their intimate charm.

He even hinted that Olympic officials in Denver, Col, who are planning the 1976 Winter Olympics in the face of fierce opposition from taxpayers, might be fighting a tough battle.

"The expenditure of a million dollars or more for a bob run, when there are only a few hundred competitors in the entire world, is difficult to defend," Brundage said.

Brundage May Retire

SAPPORO, Japan (AP)-A lean, dark-haired French nobleman, Count Jean de Beaumont, will be the next president of the International Olympic Committee if Avery Brundage retires this year-as he says-after 20 years.

The Associated Press learned this from good sources in the councils of the IOC, meeting here early this week before the opening of the XI Winter Games.

The suave Frenchman, according to best information, has moved ahead of bouncy, outgoing Lord Killanin of Ireland in the back room jockeying for position in the Olympic hierarchy.

There remains another contingency. A strong suspicion exists in the IOC-and in knowledgeable circles outside it-that Brundage, although 84, wearied and bruised by a succession of international disputes, many of which he has lost, might yet be persuaded to carry on.

JV Skaters Bow To BU; Connors Scores Two In Loss

By TOM PLANT

On Saturday afternoon the UMass JV hockey team had the pleasure of playing at Boston University's new Walter Brown Memorial Arena. That was the extent of their pleasure, however, as they were defeated by the Boston University frosh 7-4.

The Redman JV's were easily the best team that BU has played thus far in their undefeated season. Kevin Connors scored twice for the Redmen in the loss to raise his team leading scoring total to 16 points on 11 goals and 5 assists.

BU scored first at 5:10 of the first period on a goal by Paul O'Neill and exhibited some fast skating and sharp passing as they dominated the action throughout the period. The Terriors hit again with a minute remaining in the period on a delayed penalty and the help of an extra skater as Rick Glover got the goal.

UMass started their catch-up game early in the second period on an unassisted goal by Tim Murphy to cut the lead to one. But, BU's Glover came back with his second goal on a breakaway, just 18 seconds before Kevin Connors slapped in his first goal of the game to cut the lead to one again. The JV Redmen shoed a rather weak power-play in contrast to BU's well-tailored one, which was stifled for the most part by some fine work on the parts of goalie Chick Rhealt, and defensemen Bob Edwards, Tom Casey, Mike Ellis and Brian Mulcahey.

BU's Bill Burlington, who had two goals and three assists, all in the third period, scored his first at :58 of the final period, but again, the Redmen came right back 13 seconds later on a goal by Jim Lynch, with an assist from Jim Coleman. Lynch and Coleman, along with Edwards, played with the JV's at the request of Varsity Coach Jack Canniff since they didn't see much action against Vermont on Friday night. They'll most likely be with the Varsity for Thursday night's game versus Merrimack.

At 5:18 Connors scored his second goal on some good hustle by he and his brother, Jay, who assisted along with Ellis, to tie the game at 4-4. Then came the BU power-play and with just over five minutes remaining, Burlington, of BU, poked the puck through a crowd around the Redman net for the winning tally. They added two more scores to widen the final margin to 7-4. Rhealt had 31 saves in the game and the BU goal-tenders had 21.

The Redmen displayed some strong checking as Coach Russ Kidd made frequent changes of his four lines; short ice intervals for each line rather than the usual 2 to 3 minutes. Coach Kidd is in the process of reorganizing his lines after Tony Lyons and Jay Connors joined the team just before the Dartmouth game Friday night.

In that game Dartmouth won 5-2, as Kevin Connors scored two goals, one assisted by Kevin Thompson, and John Kiah played a fine game in the nets with 44 saves. Coach Kidd had a legitimate complaint about the late scheduling of the game because "if you want to play them, you play when they want to, and that's the only date we could get." The JV's had only two practices for the game, which was the first for them after the semester-break lay-off.

The JV's, now 2-4-1, will play Merrimack at Orr Rink Thursday night at 6:15 p.m., preceding the Varsity game at 8:30.

Three Elected To Hall

NEW YORK (AP)-Vernon "Lefty" Gomez, the New York Yankees' ace southpaw of the 1930s who pitched best in clutch moments, pinch-hitting outfielder Ross Youngs of the New York Giants and former American League President Will Harridge were elected to baseball's Hall of Fame Sunday by the Veterans Committee.

The three luminareies out of the sport's past, considered among several applicants, were unanimously selected by a 10-man committee.

Gomez, the only one of the three alive, had his best years from 1931 to 1939. He pitched in five World Series games and never lost one.

His reputation as a dry wit often obscured his excellent 189-102 lifetime record. Once, when asked the secret of his success, Gomez replied: "Clean living, a fast outfield and Johnny Murphy."

Gomez referred to the Yankee relief pitcher who bailed him out of many games over a 14-year career, all but one season with New York. He finished his career with the Washington Senators in 1943.

Gomez had four 20-game-winning seasons, led the American League in winning percentage twice, was tops in earned run average two times, led in strikeouts three years and in shutouts once. He was, in addition, an effective pitcher in All-Star games.

He is, perhaps, best known, though, for his penchant of watching airplanes from the mound. Gomez used to stop games and gaze at aircraft until they left the Yankee Stadium vicinity.

Youngs, described by his managers as a mini version of Ty Cobb, had a .322 lifetime average and was considered one of the game's most aggressive base-runners until his untimely death at the age of 30.

Youngs died of Bright's Disease in 1927, a hear after he completed his 10th season in 1926 with a .306 batting average. He scored 100 or more runs in three straight years and twice was in the 200-hit class.

Harridge, who died last year, was league president for almost 28 years from 1931 to 1959, a record.

"My life in baseball has been 99 per cent luck," he once commented with typical modesty.

Harridge guided the league through the trying depression and eventually into the 1950s, through a series of franchise shifts and expansion.

The trio will be inducted into the shrine at Cooperstown, N.Y.

"Togetherness" Wins It For East

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP)-Togetherness is a sometime thing on the professional basketball court, says Kentucky Colonels Coach Joe Mullaney.

"The fact that we had it," he said after his East squad whipped the West 142-115 in Saturday night's fifth annual American Basketball Association All-Star game, "could have been the key factor."

"That's right," chimed in New York Nets forward Rick Barry, who had 12 rebounds and handed out eight assists for the East.

"We rebounded well-especially in the third and fourth periods-ran well, and played unselfish basketball. It was a great game to play in," he said.

The contest was close through three periods, a surprise to those who foresaw the shooter-rich East as heavy favorites. But with the score at 106-102 in the final quarter, the East ran off a string of eight points, including two spectacular stuff shots by Carolina's Jim McDaniels and one by Pittsburgh's George Thompson.

"That series of scores was the key to the game," said West forward Willie Wise of Utah. "We had them close up to that point, but they really started moving. Their fast break was beautiful."

McDaniels, a 7-foot rookie, broke a game record with 18 points in that final period and finished with 24, high for the game. Most valuable player honors, however, went to Kentucky's Dan Issel, who scored 21 points on nine of 13 shots from the field, grabbed nine rebounds and had five assists in 23 minutes.

Indiana's Mel Daniels paced the West with 21 points.

"I think we kind of broke their morale with that last quarter binge," said Issel.

UVM Topples Redmen, 5-3

By BILL BALLOU

Shock--a momentary reaction to a strong, unexpected stimulus.

Eckerson--20-year-old goaltender who wears glasses. Has quick legs and is seemingly impregnable to UMass forwards, especially Pat Keenan. Currently attending the University of Vermont.

On Friday night, January 28, 1972, the Catamounts from the University of Vermont came into Orr Rink and defeated the Redmen of Massachusetts by a score of 5-3.

The Daily Collegian SPORTS

The above definitions describe the state approximately 3500 UMass hockey fans were in when they left Orr Rink and the reason why they were in this condition.

They were in shock because although everyone knew Vermont was a good team, the Redmen had not lost a home game since way back two seasons ago, and there seemed to be no good reason why they should start now. The defeat was a strong, unexpected stimulus.

There were two good reasons to start now, one of which was Eckerson.

Steve Eckerson came into the game boasting a fairly good record, but nothing spectacular. His problem all season long had been inconsistency, and a bad habit of being shaky with his glove hand.

Steve Eckerson left the game amid a pig pile of ecstatic Vermont Catamounts and after he had done a job for the Cats by stopping 41 UMass shots, many of which appeared to be certain goals.

The Junior goaltender was superb all night, but on three particular occasion he played some goal that turned the game around for the Cats.

The first time was in the opening five minutes of the game when play was practically entirely in the Vermont end of the rink with UMass dominating completely. In this five minute span he made several big stops, keeping the Redmen off the board and setting the stage for the first goal of the game, a tally by Vermont defenseman Ted Yeates at the 6:48 mark.

That goal marked the biggest reversal in momentum since Meade stopped Lee at Gettysburg. Whereas the first five minutes the play had been all UMass, by the time the 16:00 mark rolled around the Catamounts had a surprising 3-0 lead.

Those two Vermont goals belonged to Sophomore Chris Miller and stellar center Pat Wright, the latter score coming at 15:10.

When Charlie Donovan got the puck from Pat Keenan off a draw to Eckerson's left and fired it home to cut the gap to 3-1, it appeared that UMass would have a decent chance to come back and cut it even further. But with just 51 seconds left in the period and Eric Scrafield off for UMass, the Cats' Fred Hunt hit for a power play goal that eventually proved to be the game winner. The period ended at 4-1 for Vermont and there were already a lot of shocked people at Orr Rink.

Eckerson's second moment of glory came in the second period when, with the Redmen down by just 4-2, thanks to Pat Keenan's unassisted goal at 9:47, he made a slew of great saves during a two-minute span when the Catamounts were forced to play two men short. That two man short situation was the last good opportunity for the Redmen to close the gap to one goal and their failure to do so was a real back-breaker.

When Ted Castle beat P. J. Flaherty at 15:05 the score stood 5-2 Vermont and both teams were right back where they started.

UMass played its best hockey of the game in the period, but Eckerson also saved his best for last.

Donnie Riley had slapped home a 55-footer to give the Redmen hope with just 4:27 gone in the final stanza and UMass had definitely picked up momentum heading into the final minutes of action.

UMass forced Vermont into making mistakes in their own zone, with resulting scoring chances. The two best came off the sticks of Pat Keenan and Chico Shea, but Eckerson turned in brilliant stops on both. The first, off Keenan, was probably his best save of the night as he stopped a breakaway with a stick hand made on Keenan's 10-footer. Shea was also stopped on a breakaway, but Eckerson added a different twist when he also was able to block and hold on to Shea's rebound.

As far as the game went, that was it.

The score was 5-3 and the win by Vermont ranked as a definite upset. There was no question the Cats were up for this hockey game. Their natural skating advantage served them well, as did their ability to take advantage of numerous UMass lapses in their own defensive zone. Their defensive corps consisting of Ted Yeates, Ted Child, John Murphy and Brad Cooke was, at times, spectacular, especially Yeates.

This loss for UMass is the first in Division II, and leaves them with a 10-1 record. Vermont's record is now 7-2 in divisional play.

February should be a very interesting month.

BLUELINE BATTLE: Dennis Grabowski, UMass forward, battles Vermont forward, Willie MacKinnon (16) in action last Friday. The Redmen dropped a tough 5-3 decision to the Catamounts, tightening up the Division II race considerably. UMass now has one loss in division play, while UVM has two. (MDC Photo by Barbara Brecher)

UMass Falls To Friars; Faces Springfield Tonight

By EARLE BARROLL

It was only moments after his Redmen had been defeated by Providence College, 64-55, Saturday night at Curry Hicks Cage that coach Jack Leaman made his way to the press room, a can of coke in one hand, the easily removable tab-top in the other.

Ten feet or so from where he was to sit was a wastepaper basket. And it was ironic that his toss of the tab into the basket was perfect as during the preceding two hours, his Redmen could not buy a basket and un-shot themselves out of a game with the highly-touted Friars.

This was all that separated the Redmen from Providence on Saturday night before the largest crowd of the season, 4200 plus; a paltry 32 percent from the floor, including a grave-digging 27 percent in the first half. The shots were there, you couldn't ask for more from the offense, but on a night when P.C. could have been had, the basket was a seeming enigma hanging from a support in the Cage.

From all that transpired during the course of the game, two questions immediately popped up. (1) Was Providence ready to play after its big win over Southern Cal? (2) Was it the Friars defense or the Redmen's off night that kept the UMass offense in silence during most of the game.

Both coaches agreed on the first to varying degrees, but had opposite opinions on the second.

Here's what Leaman had to say: "To be honest Providence didn't play well tonight, they were ready to be had, but we didn't go after them. I couldn't ask any more from our offense and this is why I can say that we may have been awed by P.C.

"I'd like to say they defended us, but we shot very poorly on open shots. I have no complaints, they worked their butts off and the mistakes they made were honest ones."

Providence coach Dave Gavitt's version of what he saw went like this: "I don't think we looked ahead of the game. We were ready, but it was tough to prepare due to the excitement in the city of Providence over our win at Southern Cal. The people wouldn't leave the players alone wherever they were.

"We were impatient tonight. UMass played us tough and worked hard against us. Their press was effective when they used it. They missed a lot from the field and I'd like to think we had something to do with it. We played some kind of defense."

Whatever the reasons were, the game unveiled itself in the first few minutes with more or less of what was to come throughout the evening. Providence controlled the board (for the game they dominated in rebounds 46-30). UMass was unable to contend with Marvin Barnes, the 6'9 super sophomore (he had 27 points and 18 rebounds). And a combination of Don Lewis and Ernie DeGregorio kept John Betancourt off the scoreboard. (He hit three for 15 for the game, well below a normal big game for him.)

And probably the most important trend in the game was the inability of UMass to score from the field which left their full-court press on the clipped board with the exception of two instances when it brought them back in the second half to within reaching distance of Providence.

The Friars opened the game up midway into the first half when they outscored the Redmen, 15-1, in a stretch of basketball that had the Cage in frustration more than anything else. The Redmen had as many, if not more, shots than P.C. did during this six-minute draught, but they could only answer the Friars with an Al Skinner free throw. (Playing in the backcourt, Skinner's totals read 16 points, to tie for UMass honors with Peter Trow, seven rebounds and five assists.

The second half was more of the same frustration, an agonizing frustration to say the least. Twice the Redmen came rushing back into the game (the closest was six points) but on both times, the spurts sputtered when missed free throws gave Providence possession of the ball uncontested by the press.

TONIGHT Springfield College comes to Curry Hicks Cage to due battle with the Redmen at 8. Last year the Chiefs derailed UMass at Springfield and to date have upset Dartmouth and taken Holy Cross to the wire.

Grapplers Upset Oswego

There comes a time when every team has to prove something to someone. For some teams it may be that they can carry a ball with a degree of competency, for others it means proving they are the fastest. But for the UMass wrestling team the time had come when they had to prove that they are up to defending their New England title. With a 3-5-1 record and the thirteenth ranked College Division team coming to wrestle it looked like proof would come hard. It didn't as Coach Homer Barr's Redmen grapplers sent Oswego State home stinging with a 27-11 defeat.

"It was a good win" said Coach Barr as he characterized his team's victory over Oswego. What the coach meant by good was that the mistakes made by UMass were not bad enough to cause Oswego to cash in and pull ahead.

Dave Amato started things off with a big 16-0 decision and four team points for UMass. Dave wasted no time, going in right away for the takedown and putting the man on his back for two more points and a 4-0 lead at the end of the first period. Dave showed his skill at pinning combinations at the same rate that the Oswego man showed that he would not put the other shoulder down.

Barry Godowsky continued the first period dominance as he worked his man into position for a high crotch takedown right at the end of the first period to gain the psychological advantage. Barry gave up an escape and riding time point but showed that takedowns will win it and walked away with a 6-3 decision and kept the Redmen ahead 7-0.

Oswego won the 134-pound bout and came on the score card with three points as Clay Jester came on. Clay wrestled a defensive first period and with five seconds left relaxed close to the edge of the mat and got taken down, and was behind 2-0. Clay had the advantage in the second period and rode his opponent out and came close to turning him over for some more points but had to be satisfied with a point riding time and a quick escape point to tie the match.

Captain Shelly Goldberg came on strong right off the bat as he took his opponent down in the first five seconds of the bout and then did it again three more times plus an escape to win 9-1. Shell showed that there is not much one can do to keep him from getting a leg if he wants it!

The 158 and 167 pound bouts went to Oswego but both provided the fans with some thrills. Mike Duffy, in his first appearance of the season had a real come back match for the crowd to watch. His Oswego opponent had him down by four points and Mike came back with five of his own (a reversal, takedown and escape) in the second period. The third period saw the worst call of the match and Coach Barr's moment of anger as the referee blithely denied Duffy two points that were definitely his, and this cost him the match, 9-8.

Bruce Buckbee showed how to be East Greenbush tough as he worked his man to the point that the referee was awarding stalling points against Oswego like he was giving away candy. It was touch and go at first, though, as Bruce was taken down and ridden out. Oswego ran out of steam after Buckbee's 9-2 decision, however, as the 190 and heavyweight matches were won by pins.

Freshman John Connolly evidenced power to spare as he reversed his man in the second period and worked him over so that by the time the third period rolled around the Oswego wrestler happily fell into a pin just so he could get away from Dynamo Connolly.

Carl Dambman, sporting a slight mustache, showed that after all this time off from wrestling heavyweight (he has been the regular 190 pounder) he can still beat guys that outweigh him 50 pounds. It was a typical performance from the Upper Darby junior as he took his man down, displayed his skills at riding and finally pinned his man with 17 seconds left in the match.

If seeing was believing then those who saw UMass rip Oswego can believe that the Redmen are very capable of defending their title and that losses in the past won't keep them from doing it any more than a top ranked opponent.

Seven Hundred Attend Free Angela Rally

By HUGH OWEN

Jeanette Cole of the W.E.B. DuBois Dept. of Black Studies led off the Rally to free Angela Davis in the Student Union Ballroom last night.

"I am firmly convinced that she is guilty," said Miss Cole. "Guilty of being black in white America. Of daring to defy the Capitalist system, and of being herself."

Miss Cole continued in saying that Angela Davis is on trial because she did not adhere to the policy that "if you're white you're allright, if you're black get back."

"America is the one that should be on trial," stated Miss Cole. "On trial for kidnapping black people from Africa, for the theft of land from the Indians, and for the murders carried out at Attica, Kent and Jackson."

Jules Chemetsky, a professor in the English Department, spoke on the urgency of freeing Angela Davis "before she is murdered by the state of California". He said her life is in danger because she is "black, a woman, an intellectual, and a Communist, and people such as Angela are vulnerable in America".

Professor Chemetsky said Angela is a colleague he greatly admires, and one whose contributions to the people are invaluable. He said she should be freed so that she may continue with her work.

Acklyn Lynch, also of the W.E.B. DuBois Dept. of black studies, expressed the need for "dedication to the total destruction of this oppressive state.

"Do not focus only upon the freeing of Angela Dvis, but also on the destruction of the state machinery that put her there," he said.

"We said free Huey Newton and he was freed. But they destroyed the Black Panther Party as a result. They freed Erica and Bobby, but killed Mark Clark and Fred Hampton. If they free Angela will they kill Rap Brown?"

Lynch also pointed out that Angela Davis is not the only person who is being victimized by the capitalist system. Thousands of people living in the ghettos with no hope for a better life are also victims of the system, he said. "Those people need help too, and the only way to help them is to destroy the capitalist system."

The rally came to a close with Dave Cohen, of the Young Workers Liberation League, condemning the prison system and government that supports it. The need now is to overthrow the core of racist ideology in the U.S., he said.

This Monday the state of California is scheduled to begin its case against Angela Davis on charges of murder, kidnapping and conspiracy (stemming from the courtroom raid staged by Jon Jackson in the Marin County Civic Center on Aug. 7, 1970.) Jury selection will be the first order of the day after Judge Aranson calls the trial in session. It could be the toughest battle in the whole case for Miss Davis' attorneys. According to a survey by UCLA sociology professor Jeffrey M. Paige, commissioned by the National Conference of Black Lawyers, Santa Clara county, where the trial is being held, has a black population of less than 2 percent. In 1968, 13 percent of the registered voters in the county registered with George Wallace's American Independent Party. A sampling poll showed that 62 percent of the population just does not like Angela Davis.

It is for these reasons that Angela Davis' lawyers will carefully screen every potential juror to try and select ones without any bias towards Miss Davis.

After a breakdown in the Whitmore computers everything is back to normal with all at work. So remember, you're back on file and your brother is watching.

Computers Working Again

By KEVIN KERIT

Several potential problems concerning a number of University courses were averted yesterday morning as computers which had been inoperative for two weeks were restored to service.

Roy Ageloff, a graduate student presently teaching an accounting course at the University, stated that the computers, shut down since their move from the Engineering Lab to the new Graduate Research Center on January 15, appeared yesterday to be functional. Ageloff explained that the computers, used by faculty and students in a wide variety of courses, were tentatively scheduled for transfer to GRC last August, but their move was delayed until this month due to incomplete construction at the new site.

When asked if the computer shutdown would have any added impact in the area of administration, Ageloff replied that this certainly would not be the case, since Whitmore has a separate computer system, but added that "if a computer shut down for the entire semester, it could cause problems for many courses and students doing research."

Conrad C. Wogrin, Director of the University Computer Center, attributed the two-week delay in resumption of computer operations to the routine difficulties involved in moving such an enormous system and the testing required by the machines before being made available for general use. Asked if he foresaw any future difficulties with the new computer arrangement, Wogrin replied in the affirmative, stating, however, that problems are to be expected.

One problem specifically mentioned was that of supplying sufficient cool air to the machines, as the tremendous amounts of heat generated by the computers would render them inoperative unless adequately relieved. Presently, sufficient cooling systems do not exist, but Wogrin is looking forward to the installation of a supplementary air conditioning unit to cope with this dilemma. Until this is accomplished, he stated, "There will be days in the spring when the outside temperature will rise to the critical point of about 52°, and then operations will have to shut down at intervals to allow the system to cool."

Free Angela Rally

Directing this effort for Angela Davis will be Howard Moore, a sophisticated Atlanta lawyer. Another lawyer, Margaret Burnham, will share in the responsibilities of choosing jurors. No one is sure how long jury selection will take, but some lawyers speculate it might take at least a month or two.

Once the jury is picked the battle will finally begin. Working along with Miss Davis' counsel will be the National Conference of Black Lawyers and twelve top professors from major universities.

The trial promises to be a long and difficult one. It is true that Angela Davis purchased and registered the guns later used by Jon Jackson in the attempted courtroom kidnapping, but Harris will have to prove she gave the weapons to Jon Jackson and did so knowing that he intended to use them for an illegal act.

The state cannot claim Miss Davis gave the guns to Jon Jackson, and they do not claim she was at the scene of the crime. The only thing the prosecution can do is to emphasis Miss Davis' political militancy, and her friendship with George and Jon Jackson.

After fifteen months in jail it looks as if Angela Davis has only more months to look forward to in awaiting the decision of a long, drawn-out trial, the rally participants want her out of jail for these months.

Johnston New Director of Security

After an intensive study by the Security Director's Search Committee, Acting Chancellor Bromery has named David Johnston (see other story on page) as the new director of security for UMass.

Johnston had been second choice to Robert Wasserman, who was involved with law enforcement in Boston. Wasserman had to decline, because according to Henry Bouffard, Student Attorney General and member of the search committee, "he accepted a very good job in Washington."

Bouffard termed Johnston very qualified. "He combines the ideal qualification of a policeman who has gone to school, and understands police theory."

The Security Director's Search Committee was composed of faculty, students, campus police, administrators and the Student Senate General Counsel. It began its search in October and finished on January 1, of this year. Douglas Forsyth, Special Assistant to the Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs, and member of the search committee, said, "The committee was made up of a broad spectrum of people working under the assumption that they were going to respond to different individual's needs in the University community."

Forsyth, who was appointed acting director of security after the resignation of William Dye, discussed the origin of the search for a new director of security. "I was appointed to the position of director of security," he said, "after Dye resigned during the summer to become Chief of Police in East St. Louis, Missouri. Besides the regular duties, I was given the responsibility of finding a replacement for myself. You see I'm more a psychologist than a cop."

He then outlined the procedure for the selection of the members of the committee. "I requested the Faculty, Student, and Graduate Student to suggest people qualified to serve on the committee. Some of the members chosen were, Larry Dye from the School of Ed., Henry Bouffard, Student Attorney General, Rick Verrochi of the Student Senate, Daniel Schwartz, Lieutenant on the Campus Police, Richard Howland, Attorney for Students, and Daniel Fitzpatrick, Associate Dean of Students and Coordinator of the Committee."

After forming, Forsyth says the committee developed a system where each would personally rank applicants for the job, (which numbered 80 and came from as far as California) by reading the resumes of each applicant which included recommendations, past experiences in police work and other important items. "We were looking for someone with community responsiveness," Forsyth maintains, "who understands that the University community is a unique one."

After individually ranking the candidates, starting with who they thought was best, Forsyth says they met back as a whole to discuss and decide, from each others choices, who they would call for interviews on campus.

Of the 80 applicants which applied the committee narrowed the list to 12 candidates.

Forsyth says the structure of the committee developed for interviews, was to find out what the attitude of each man was. "It was an important affair, which required a man to have staying power in stress situations," he said.

"What the 2 day interview encompassed was the afternoon and evening of one day, and entire portion of the following day," he explained.

In detailing the interview procedures it was seen that the committee had adopted a rigid format for choosing a man to fill the position. First, when the candidate arrived he was taken to the University police station to see how the security system was set up. From here he went to the Campus Center to talk, with students who came with Richard Howland or Rick Verrochi. A meeting followed with half of the search committeemen before supper and the other half after. Most of the questions asked by the members centered around police carrying guns on campus, drug related situations, community relations with minority groups and questions of general concern.

Bouffard said the committeemen presented the applicants with a number of situations. He said, "We asked if Federal authorities approached them to cooperate in wiretapping, would they tell a professor about the wiretap, or would their allegiance be with the University or federal government?"

Bouffard also said they were asked questions such as "Should the University police wear uniforms?", "What their concept of policing was?" "Should University police carry guns?", and "What types of training were necessary for the University Police?" Bouffard said Johnston was in favor of police wearing guns.

Following these meetings with the search committeemen, the candidate was taken to the campus police station, to meet the men working on the night shift. "These men usually don't get talked to because of their hours," Forsyth explained.

A Profile

Johnston Experienced

David L. Johnston, 35, was appointed to the post of director of security by Dr. Randolph W. Bromery.

As director of security, Johnston will work under Dr. Robert W. Gage, Acting Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs. The new director, said Dr. Gage, "combines a wealth of on-line police experience, academic excellence, community sensitivity, and research skills to provide an approach to campus security that is unique and responsive."

Since July, 1971, Johnston has been an advisor to the Governor's Committee on Law Enforcement and Administration, with specific responsibility for Criminal Justice Systems development. He also designed strategies for improving municipal police departments, and helped develop the State's 1972 Comprehensive Criminal Justice Plan.

He earned his bachelor of science degree at The School of Police Administration and Public Safety, Michigan State University, with a major in law enforcement administration; and his master of arts degree at the State University of New York. And he is completing his Ph.D. at The School of Criminal Justice, State University of New York at Albany, where his major is the planned change in criminal justice.

He has been a police officer for the Saginaw Police Department in Michigan; and has worked for the Department of Probation in New York City; the Troy, N.Y., Police Department; the Connecticut Department of Corrections; the Pennsylvania Department of Social Welfare Project; and the Oakland, Calif., Police Department.

A native of Painesville, Ohio, Mr. Johnston has been living in Tewksbury. He and Mrs. Johnston have one child.

Tomorrow (February 2, 1972) is the last day to register to vote in Amherst before the February 22nd Town Election. There will be a registration session in the Town Clerk's office in the Town Hall from 12 noon to 10 p.m. to accommodate those who wish to register.

Room To Move

For Those Of You Who Are New

We would like to introduce ourselves to those of you who are new to campus this semester. Room To Move is a drug drop-in center located on the "Hatch" level (architecturally speaking) of the Student Union. Our purpose is to serve the UMass campus and surrounding communities as an information, referral, education, counseling and crisis intervention center. We have a large number of articles available in the center on topics ranging from withdrawal from opiates, drugs and sex, psychological phenomena to herbal highs. We have a good selection of drug related books on reserve at the Goodell Library. (These books are listed only at the reserve desk and are not filed in the master card catalogue.) Room To Move's education program offers workshops to the University community on psychedelics, barbiturates, speed, value clarification, emergency care, legal aid, alcohol and opiates.

The staff is available twenty-four hours a day to respond to any issues or concerns you may have. We have a number of professionals we can refer to if a certain situation falls outside our realm of service. In the instance of bad trips or other crisis situations, the staff can be reached at all times by calling 545-0400.

There's a lot more to Room To Move than this linear description could convey, but we hope that you have gotten some feeling about the center and now feel free to come by any time.

Official CASIAC Pass-Fail Policy

The following is the College of Art's and Sciences official policy concerning courses that may be taken on a pass/fail basis:

"Students in the College of Arts and Sciences and all full-time students shall be eligible to use a pass-fail option in one course each semester. A student may elect to take up to and including five University core requirement courses pass-fail. For courses required for a student's major, permission of the department is necessary.

An eligible student taking a full load in summer work (9 credits) may be allowed the pass-fail option in one course. This resolution means that a CAS student may, among other options, take all four of his natural or social science requirements pass-fail; or all four of his humanities requirements pass-fail; or as an interim policy for SPRING TERM ONLY, all four language courses pass-fail, INCLUDING his language 140 course pass-fail.

The deadline for changing to or from pass-fail is the 10th day of the term on Monday, February 7.

This is the official policy; Friday's Collegian was incorrect.

Irish Republic Breaks With Britain

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP)-Rebel guerrillas struck back with bombs, bullets and defiant parades Monday over the killing of civilians in a clash with British troops.

The Irish Republic to the south responded with diplomatic blows against Britain, and, in Parliament in London, Bernadette Devlin assaulted British Home Secretary Reginald Maudling with punches, scratches and tugs on his hair.

The battle in Londonderry Sunday that resulted in the deaths of 13 civilians was the worst violence since August, 1969. The British government ordered an independent inquiry.

The Irish Republic recalled its ambassador in London, Donal O'Sullivan. An Irish Embassy spokesman called the move "the strongest protest we can make" without rupturing diplomatic relations with Britain.

Prime Minister Jack Lynch of Ireland said he is sending his foreign minister, Patrick Hillery, to New York to consult with U.N. officials. Hillery also will visit "heads of friendly governments" in a bid to set up an international inquiry into the Sunday shootings.

In London, Miss Devlin, a member of Britain's Parliament as well as a leader of the Roman Catholic minority in Northern Ireland, interrupted proceedings as Maudling was explaining the circumstances in which a force of British paratroopers opened fire during Sunday's demonstration in Londonderry.

She complained that she was not allowed to put a question to Maudling.

"I have the right as the only representative who was a witness to ask a question of that murdering hypocrite," she shouted.

Miss Devlin, who stands only about 5 feet tall, then rushed across the House of Commons and attacked Maudling.

She was pulled away by other members of Parliament and hauled from the chamber.

Earlier an anonymous telephone caller in London claimed that a two-man suicide squad had been assigned to assassinate Prime Minister Edward Heath to avenge the civilians killed in Londonderry.

The caller told The Associated Press the killers had been chosen at a meeting of Saor Eire, a leftist offshoot of the Irish Republican Army. A spokesman for Heath said the necessary steps would be taken.

The Irish Republican Army-the IRA-has vowed revenge for the deaths in Londonderry.

Strikes protesting Sunday's shootings paralyzed much of Northern Ireland's industry. Londonderry limped along in near shutdown. So did some other smaller Northern Ireland towns.

FAA Responds To Recent Hijacking

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Federal Aviation Administration, aroused at the continuing menace of airplane hijackings, ordered all the U.S. scheduled airlines Monday to start screening passengers and baggage for weapons or sabotage devices.

The new order will go into effect 72 hours after it appears in the Federal Register. That printing is expected Tuesday or Wednesday, so that the new procedures will go into effect Friday or Saturday.

King of Nepal Dies

KATMANDU, Nepal (AP)-King Mahendra, who brought modern ways to Nepal, died Monday and his son, a 26-year-old paratrooper and painter, ascended the world's only Hindu throne as a divine-right monarch.

Mahendra Bir Bikram Shah Dev died in southern Bharatpur 24 hours after suffering a heart attack, his second in four years. He was 51.

His eldest son became king immediately in a simple private ceremoney.

Hoover Condemns Court Disruptions

WASHINGTON (AP)-FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover said Monday the courts are now experiencing the same violent disrespect for the law that enforcement agencies have suffered for years.

Hoover said the courts must take quick, decisive action against defendants engaged in wild outbursts and disruptive tactics during a trial.

North Viet Nam Denies Desire For Communist S. Viet Nam

PARIS (AP)-North Vietnam denied Monday it wants a Communist government in Saigon, and said it seeks one broadly based on national political and religious factions.

Nguyen Thanh Le, Hanoi's spokesman at the Vietnam peace talks, said Secretary of State William P. Rogers "deliberately sought to deform our positions" when he said Sunday night Hanoi insisted on "a government of their choosing, a Communist government" which the United States could not accept.

Le said Hanoi wants "a large government of national accord" to succeed the administration of President Nguyen Van Theiu. "This government, to be precise," said Le, "would be composed of personalities of various political and religious tendencies."

The major religious groups in South Vietnam are the Buddhist and Roman Catholic communities.

Le also released the details of the nine-point peace plan which was handed to presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger at a secret meeting with the North Vietnamese in Paris on June 26. Point 3 called for the Thieu government to be replaced by "a new administration standing for peace, independence, neutrality and democracy."

This government would negotiate with the Viet Cong's provisional revolutionary government "to settle the internal affairs of South Vietnam and to achieve national concord," the hitherto secret plan said.

Such a position is not new from the Communist side. In the seven-point peace plan presented July 1, 1971, by Mrs. Nguyen Thi Binh, delegation leader of the Viet Cong in Paris, Point 2 called on the United States to stop backing the Thieu government and, assuming this would lead to its downfall, said: "The political, social and religious forces in South Vietnam aspiring to peace and national concord will use various means to form "a broad three-segment government of national concord" to organize general elections.

Allied Planes Bomb Tanks

SAIGON (AP)-The South Vietnamese military command announced Monday its bombers had destroyed three enemy tanks in South Vietnam's central highlands.

The command said the North Vietnamese tanks, of an undetermined type, were spotted by South Vietnamese observation planes in the region where the frontiers of South Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos converge, about 300 miles north of Saigon. The action was Sunday.

A large North Vietnamese buildup is reported in the region, and U.S. officials anticipate an offensive there within the next month. By official count, the South Vietnamese command now claims a total of five enemy tanks and five trucks destroyed in the region in the last week.

A second successive day of fighting was reported along the demilitarized zone and Viet Cong forces kept up rocket and mortar attacks across South Vietnam.

Four civilians were reported killed and 22 wounded in a seven-round mortar barrage that hit Cai Lay in the Mekong Delta, 50 miles southwest of Saigon.

AFTER SESSION WITH THE D.A.–Author Clifford Irving, left, listens to his new lawyer, Maury Nessen, speak to the press Friday after meeting at the New York District Attorney Office. Irving said through his attorney that his wife, Edith, told Swiss authorities she opened a bank account in Switzerland under the name of H.R. Hughes. (AP Wirephoto)

Warrants Out On Irving And Wife

ZURICH, Switzerland (AP) — The prosecutor's office said Monday that Swiss authorities have issued arrest warrants for author Clifford Irving and his wife on "urgent grounds of suspicion" against the couple.

"If they had come to Zurich instead of going to New York they would have been arrested on arrival," Dist. Atty. Peter Zeleff said.

The intrigue surrounding Irving's purported biography of recluse billionaire Howard Hughes took still another development with Zeleff's announcement that authorities have frozen $422,707 in a Swiss bank account.

The district attorny said the account, in the Swiss Bank Corp. main office in Zurich, probably was opened by Mrs. Irving under the pseudonym Hannah Rosencrantz.

Irving, 41, and a U.S. writer, declined comment on Zeleff's statements. Irving was questioned at the Federal Court House in New York, where he won postponement of his appearance before a federal grand jury.

Earlier in the day, Irving also won postponement of his appearance before a Manhattan grand jury. Both juries are investigating what happened to $650,000 which McGraw-Hill Publishing Co. gave to Irving to transmit to Hughes in payment for a purported Hughes biography.

Zeleff said in Zurich the Rosencrantz account was opened last May 27 and shortly afterward $291,249 was deposited and "partly used by the alleged Hannah Rosencrantz for the purchase of securities."

The rest of the $422,707 apparently was deposited later, he added.

The district attorney said authorities had not decided whether to ask for extradition of Irving's wife Edith, a Swiss national.

CBS said Mrs. Rosencrantz is the present wife of Mrs. Irving's former husband and that Mrs. Irving had used a West German identity card bearing that name to open the account with money she had withdrawn from an account she earlier opened at the Swiss Credit Bank across the street.

Irving admitted in New York Friday that his wife was the mysterious Helga R. Hughes, who had deposited the McGraw-Hill checks originally and then withdrew the money in cash. She endorsed them "H.R. Hughes" and a New York expert identified the signature as that of the industrialist.

Southern Bill Defeated

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Monday defeated a Southern-led move to continue the exemption of over 10 million state and local government employees from the federal ban on racial and other discrimination in employment.

These employees now are excluded from coverage, but a bill before the Senate would bring them under the law. An amendment by Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr., (D-N.C.), to knock out this part of the bill was rejected by a 59-16 vote.

However, an equal-employment bill already passed by the House makes no provision to extend coverage to state and local employees, the largest class of persons now exempt.

This and other differences will have to be ironed out by Senate-House conferees before final action by Congress on the legislation to strengthen the prohibition against job discrimination based on race, religion, sex, or national origin.

Senate debate on the bill began Jan. 19, and a vote will be taken Tuesday on invoking the Senate's anti-filibuster rule in an effort to force the measure to a vote.

Majority Leader Mike Mansfield, D-Mont., told newsmen that the outlook for obtaining the two-thirds majority necessary to put the rule into effect is not very good.

If the initial move fails, further attempts will be made to cut off the debate.

He declined to speculate on what would happen to the bill if the Senate still is bogged down in dispute over it when a Lincoln Day recess starts Feb. 10. However, he said the Senate already is way behind on its legislative schedule.

Government To Restrict Anti-Biotics For Animals

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government is moving to restrict sharply the use of antibiotics in feeds for food- producing animals, citing a task force report warning of a potential human health hazard.

The Food and Drug Administration Monday announced a proposed ban in three stages next year on the use of five types of antibiotics employed to promote faster growth and prevent disease among poultry, swine, cattle and sheep.

Farmers would be prohibited from routinely feeding tetracyclines, streptomycin, dihydrostreptomycin, sulfonamides and penicillins to poultry after next Jan. 1, and to swine, cattle and sheep after July 1, 1973. The ban would apply to all other approved antibiotics after Dec. 31, 1973.

After the deadlines, the drugs could be used only if prescribed by a vetinarian. The prohibition would be waived, however, if pharmaceutical companies begin safety and effectiveness studies under government-controlled conditions before those dates.

FDA Commissioner Charles C. Edwards said the ultimate effect of the proposal probably would be to bar some antibiotics from animal feed.

The Animal Health Institute, which represents 55 companies manufacturing 90 per cent of the nation's feed additives, said food costs would rise if antibiotics were banned entirely.

James G. Affleck, president of the institute, said more than 100 billion meat animals and poultry have been fed antibiotics over the last 20 years.

The Mystery Is Solved

WASHINGTON–The biggest mystery of President Nixon's speech last week was when he revealed that Henry Kissinger had made as many as 10 secret trips to Paris to negotiate with the North Vietnamese.

Most people who watched the President found it hard to believe that Mr. Kissinger could have gone to Peking twice, Paris 12 times and Hollywood 456 times.

How, the big question is, can one man do it?

The answer can now be revealed. There is not one Henry Kissinger, but five.

When President Nixon first came into the White House, he knew he was faced with problems all over the world. He also was aware that he needed a foreign affairs expert who could speak in his name. But he didn't want to spread these duties around.

So he contacted the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md., and gave them the problem. The NIH said they were working on a project where they could turn out five people completely alike in every respect. All they needed was a model.

The President called in Henry Kissinger, who was then a professor at Harvard, and told him what the President had on his mind. The real Kissinger, who hates to fly agreed to go along with the plan.

He went out to NIH for a month, and the doctors got to work duplicating exact models of him (most of the volunteers were German scientisits who had been laid off by the space program).

Plastic surgeons went to work on the faces. Hair specialists and make-up men were brought in. In a few cases transplants had to be made to get Kissinger's exact measurements.

By trial and error with 12 volunteers, four were finally selected who looked, talked and appeared to be facsimiles of Kissinger. (The seven volunteers who didn't make it were burried at midnight with full military honors.)

With five Henry Kissingers to work with, President Nixon was able to go ahead with his foreign policy plans.

A special dormitory had been built in the basement of the White House where all the Henry Kissingers lived when they weren't out on a trip.

Whenever the President wanted a Kissinger for an assignment, he spoke into a special microphone attached to a loudspeaker in the dorm: "Who wants to go to Peking?" If more than one Kissinger wanted to go they would cut cards for it.

If the President needed a Kissinger for a backgrounder in the White House, he would yell down, "Will one of you guys come up to brief the press?"

Or, as in the case of the secret North Vietnamese peace talks, the President would shout, "Send someone up to go to Paris."

One Kissinger would take the duty at Key Biscayne, and another would accompany the President to San Clememte.

The most ingenious part of the strategy was when someone in the White House decided to give Kissinger the image of a swinger. "If we make him a swinger and have him photographed with beautiful women in Hollywood, New York and Washington, we will have everybody fooled. At the very moment that he's dancing with Jill St. John, one of the other Kissingers will be eating sweet and sour pork with Chou En-lai."

While all five Kissingers wanted to play the role of the swinger, it was decided to give it to the real Henry Kissinger, as a reward for lending his name and his body to the foreign policy of the United States of America.

What Would Freud Say?

By BILL GORCZYCA
EDITORIAL STAFF

In 1957 Vance Packard authored a book which attempted to expose certain advertisements and commercials that were laced with subtle sexual overtones - which tempted the consumer to buy certain products. Since the days that I dreamed I went to the frat party in my maidenform bra, advertisers have dropped the "subtle" approach and are now aiming their best blows below the belt.

Take for example that TV commercial for a leading men's hair spray in which a hot-pants clad amazon invades a barbershop, intimidated the barber by threatening to melt his scissors, and proclaims to a nationwide audience that "she likes it long." It's hard to believe that she's talking about the hair of the poor slob who is passively waiting for the barber to do his thing. One can hardly resist purchasing a can of the product to bolster his ego and set himself off from any miniscule males who may be around.

Then there is that homely looking woman who takes off her glasses and lets down her hair while offering to "cream your face" in the privacy of your own bathroom every morning for the price of a can of a brand name product. That proposition can elicit a response from even the most steadfast of males.

Men are not the only target of this approach, for advertisers devote equal time to pluck the strings of the female emotional harp. There is a commercial for a kitchen product in which a long white snake rises mysteriously from an innocent looking plastic container and plunges into the drain of the kitchen sink, eating through chunks of sludge and grime, while a group of astonished housewives go into ecstatic convulsions while watching the sordid affair. And then there is the commercial for a leading steak sauce which depicts their product dripping out of a bottle and slowly oozing down an unbelievably tall stack of steaming meat which is curiously cut so that is resembles a certain part of the female anatomy. All this occurs while a woman erotically moans unintelligible expressions in the background.

I think it time for another Vance Packard to pick up a pen and wage war against X-rated commercials. I'm getting tired of having my subconscious raped by slick advertising techniques. Besides, that shaving cream is too expensive and the spray makes my hair brittle.

A Compromise Of Mush

Ed. note-The following is the second in a series of five articles on Teacher-Course Evaluation.

by Nick Apostola

In early December, 1970, Provost Gluckstern created what was to become a monster, as far as most of the faculty was concerned. In a memo dated December 8, 1970, he designated eight faculty members, two graduate students, and two undergraduate students as members of his new Ad Hoc Committee on Teacher Evaluation. In his own words, "It is the feeling of this office that a new University-wide committee including both graduate and undergraduate students be established to attempt to address itself to...specific recommendations to guide the administration in dealing with the questions of teacher evaluation and the role of teaching generally on this campus."

In the usual optimism of persons setting reporting dates for committees, Provost Gluckstern asked"...the committee to submit its recommendations on or before April 1, 1971." Well, of course they didn't. Not much was heard from the committee until early this September when Provost Gluckstern sent out the Final Report of the Ad Hoc Committee on Teacher Evaluation to the faculty and to the Student Senate for their comments.

Committees are the joining of many minds to seek simple solutions to complex problems that never work. This committee was no different. The committee meetings became the battlefield where the war between evaluation and no evaluation took place. But the war soon turned into one between publication and no publication. That is, the liberals wanted full publication of the mandatory evaluation results and the conservatives wanted voluntary publication of mandatory evaluation results. The committe was so balanced that depending on who was there for a specific meeting, the recommendations swayed from liberal to conservative to liberal to conservative, etc. But somehow, in all this confusion, the conservative points seemed to hold strong. The liberals wanted evaluations and publication of the results mandatory, the conservatives worked to see that the Teacher Evaluation Program didn't infringe on the faculty's rights.

Compromise is a wonderous thing. It turns even strong statements into liberal mush. Recommendations #4 of the final report reads: "Evaluation results shoud be supplied to each individual instructor but a decision on publication of results beyond that level should wait upon wide discussion of the several options." So the committee decided that it would be in the best interest of the faculty if the topic of publication was put aside for awhile.

Pulling it all together, it can be seen that the Faculty refuse to impose upon themselves the same type of grading system which they have imposed upon students. They say that an evaluation system that is forced cannot have a meaningful effect on the persons being evaluated. They continue that if there is to be an evaluation system the faculty must believe in it. This has been the major roadblock in the adoption of a University-wide Teacher Evaluation program. They don't trust the Illinois form, therefore the administrations is reluctant in forcing the form, or even a University-wide program on them. The faculty doesn't like evaluation system, they aren't forced to use it; students don't like to get graded, and don't trust the grading system, but the faculty knows what is best for them. For those of you who are unfamiliar with the terminology, it is called elitism.

Letters To The Editor

The Mobe Is On The Move

To the Editor:

The anti war movement in this country faces a very serious challenge, not only from the manipulations of Defense Department strategists, plotting their oft stated goal of victory in Southeast Asia while hiding under the protection of "peace" proposals, but also from within the ranks of anti war sympathizers who are disenchanted with the recurrent mass demonstrations and would have some more effective, although undefined, means to bring an end to the war. As a member of the UMass Student Mobilization Committee I wish to respond briefly to these criticisms.

President Nixon has revealed a new plan for peace that reduces everything in his mind, and any who support him, to very simple issues. The benevolent American government has reached deep in its humanitarian conscience to provide these high minded proposals, and if they are not accepted by the "enemy" we will be justified in bombing the life out of the evil, war loving Vietnamese. If you have any false hopes about these new proposals ask yourself if any of the goals of the American government have changed; the goals of protecting the American colonial empire which brought over 500,000 American soldiers and billions of dollars in Southeast Asia, goals against which the Vietnamese have been fighting for decades. A secret plan for peace has been made public. What other secrets have not? Could Nixon possibly have a few more surprises to reveal later on, or will it take another Ellsberg to open people's eyes, sadly, after the fact? You don't have to bet your life on his new proposals, but the Vietnamese most surely do. Where will you stand when the bombers fly again?

Where do you stand now? Of what value to either the Vietnamese or the American soldiers is your unexpressed anti war sentiment? The Student Mobe has demanded since its inception the immediate withdrawal of all American forces from Southeast Asia. If the war is opposed for moral reasons a cease fire is not enough; as long as the troops and aircraft remain they will be readily used to force our way on a political settlement. It is horribly obvious that government is not directed by moral considerations but by political ones, and a cease fire can only temporarily stop the fighting while not stopping the war. One could only expect increased killing if the government should find a return to fighting to be politically favorable. Immediate withdrawal must also be the demand of those who oppose the war for political reasons, for there can be no chance for the Vietnamese themselves to determine the nature of their government as long as American bombers and troops threaten their lives.

Through the demand for immediate and total withdrawal of all U.S. forces the SMC has led the anti war movement in this country, reversing the tide of public opinion and greatly limiting the power of the government to blatantly carry out its aggression. This limit has occurred only through the influence of mass demonstrations. The SMC realized that it is only through the mass demonstrations that the people in this country would be able to affect the course of the government's war policy. Isolated and occasional expressions of outrage by individuals are important to a certain extent, but these random anti war acts have little power to influence government policies. If we are seriously concerned with stopping the war we must be effective to the fullest extent possible. Very few are willing to be martyrs, and fewer still of those in jail are ever heard. The SMC is not concerned with salving its own conscience, but with realistically exerting political pressure on the government to end the war. The fact that no presidential candidate dare claim to be a hawk indicates how deeply the mass anti war demonstrations have affected the political spectrum. We must continue with this anti war pressure through mass demonstrations, independent of any political party, in order to maintain and increase our influence. It is by no means an easy struggle, but it requires your support. There will be a very important meeting of the SMC Wednesday night at 6:00 p.m. in the mobe office in the Student Union. If you are concerned enough to act you should be there.

Editorial Points

Perhaps in the confusion of the times, the obvious solution to the Howard Hughes autobiography controversy has been overlooked. Actually, Hughes has spent the last several years undergoing a sex change operation which explains why and how he has avoided any publicity. He then married Clifford Irving and changed his name from Howard to Helga and is attempting to regain the $650,000 it cost for the operation.

For someone who attempts to avoid publicity, Duane Thomas sure gets his name in the paper a lot.

If Muskie is so anxious for everyone to trust him, why doesn't he reveal his financial sources as George McGovern did?

Even though New Year's and all those good times are over, it's a new season, or soon will be. In memory of the good old days, then, take a glass of buttermilk and a sea pilot cracker at exactly 7 p.m. tonight, hold it up in the direction of the Student Union, and hold communion with the souls of the departed ones.

Letters

As in previous years the MDC will continue to print letters to the editor. The only requirements are that they be typed at sixty spaces, double-spaced and absolutely no longer than two pages in length. All letters must be signed and the author's address and telephone numbers must be included. No letter will be published without this information. Also, no letters will be printed without the name of the author. Please note this change in policy.

All letters are subject to editing either for content or space according to the judgment of the editors. Also, due to space limitations, we do not guarantee that all letters will be printed.

THE EDITORS

A Pat On The Back

To the Editor:

On campus there is now an Advocate Program in which juvenile delinquents are living with concerned students. The University is fortunate to have such a program because it finally brings the learning experience out of the classroom and into the students' lives. It also helps the "children in trouble" to feel that people care about them for what they are. A few people who have made this program possible have gone unnoticed or with very little recognition. The Orchard Hill students concerned with this program wish to thank Jim West, the Area Director of Orchard Hill, and Steve and Joan Stoia, Heads of Residence of an O. H. dorm for all their help and guidance. Without the constant phone calls and the late nights working on the program by Mr. West, the area would not have had this program going in time to bring in the adolescents from the Lyman and Lancaster Detention Schools, which have closed due to dangerous overcrowding and poor maintenance.

If it weren't for Staff members like Jim West and the Stoias, and other interested staff like Paul Quinn, a Head of Residence in another O. H. Dorm, who is an advocate, news of this program may not have reached the students in time to help these "children in trouble" and provide them with a home and personal attention for the next month while they are being placed by the Department of Youth Services. Some students in this area have become so involved that they are attempting to become foster parents for their visitors until their sentences are up.

Therefore, we are truly grateful to our staff in the Orchard Hill area for bringing this program to our attention.

Third World Call

To the Editor:

Third World and minority members of the UMass community will be meeting tomorrow at 7:30 pm in SBA 120 to discuss their "survival at UMass."

Recently, the only minority member of the Board of Trustees, Mrs. M. Snowden, raised the issue of the survival of minority peoples on the three campuses to the attention of the trustees. With deep responsibility to her minority constituency, she maintained that the trustees, administrators, faculty and students would have to be clear on what they were about, because the problems confronting the University were not a matter of the future of the University, but a question of life and death with regards to minority students.

Because of pressures from the Federal and State governments, the University is in the process of developing an Office of Affirmative Action to meet the needs of minorities which have not been met through past programs. This past failure can be reflected in the school's record of enrollment of minority students. For example, the UMass School of Medicine in Worcester has no enrolled minorities, and the University as a whole only has a minority enrollment of 3.8%.

As minority members on the working committee that was developed to study the problem, the University's to this record was one that required immediate action. This lead to the creation of a caucus of the minority members from both campuses. From this meeting of the minds, was developed a position paper entitled, "Response of the Minority Members of the Working Group to the Outline Report". It was hoped that through this position, the administration would realize that "our representation (minorities) on this working committee is not only to contribute to the progressive aspects of institutional change envisaged in the 'Gage Report', but also to be responsible to our constituency in terms of reporting to the, of tapping their resources and ideas, and of being accountable and responsible to them for our actions and decisions." It then becomes necessary for us to meet with all of the Third World People on this campus, so that we can keep in tune with our stated philosophy.

It is only through unity that we, as oppressed people, can begin to make any progressive and meaningful changes. Time is running out, so it is important that we begin to systematically synthesize the events surrounding our existance at the University. We have nothing to lose; we have everything to gain. What happens to an Asian on this campus, happens to a Chicano. What happens to a Chicano, happens to a Puerto Rican. What happens to a Puerto Rican, happens to Black people. We are all victims of the same system; therefore, it is necessary for us to come together as comrades having sincerity of energy, responsibility, and purpose.

Prof. Acklyn Lynch et. al.

Edelman Appointed Policy-Plans V.P.

Peter B. Edelman has been appointed the Vice President for Policy and Plans, UMass President Robert C. Wood has announced. The Board of Trustees established the position of a third vice-presidency today.

Edelman's responsibilities will involve advising the President and Trustees on changing national patterns in higher education, on proposed institutional innovations, and on new university public service activities.

A former legislative assistant to Senator Robert F. Kennedy and law clerk to Supreme Court Justice Arthur J. Goldberg, Edelman was most recently Staff Director for the UMass Committee on the Future University of Massachusetts whose far-reaching report was released in December.

Edelman is a graduate of Harvard College and Harvard Law School. His wife, the former Marian Wright, is the Director of the Center for Law and Education at Harvard. They live with their two children in Newton.

Draft Counselor's Corner

Numbers Game Unpredictable

By GILBERT J. SALK

The new lottery's coming up soon, so let's rap a little about what it's all about. Also, a couple of news briefs, and some thoughts on where the draft is going.

New brief #1: There will be a draft counselor training course this semester--probably starting in the next week or two. Watch this column (TTh) for more details.

News brief #2: There will be an important draft counselors' meeting at 5:00 p.m. today in the Draft Counseling Services office, 923 CC.

Now for the lottery:

If you wee born in 1953, your number will be assigned in this week's drawing. If you get a high number, you should receive a 1-H classification from your board in the next couple of months. This will mean that you will probably be reasonably safe from the draft.

If you get a low number, and you don't have any deferments, you will be prime for next year's draft.

This is an important point. This year's draft has absolutely nothing to do with you. Those born in 1953 cannot be drafted before Jan. 1, 1973. The maximum number reached in 1972 has no effect on your liability.

The advantage of getting your number early is that you will have time to get a deferment together before you really have to sweat being drafted.

IMPORTANT: There is no way to accurately predict what number will be reached next year. Just remember that this year's call will be very low--it's an election year, and draftees can now vote--and that may create a manpower shortage which will have to be filled next year. Also, don't be too ready to believe the predictions for next year issued by the SSS, the Defense Dept., or the Pentagon. Their estimates will probably be low, because it concerns you, and you can vote. The lottery, the troop reductions, the low draft calls--all are political gimmickry right now, and will be until the elections. So be cool.

It is worth noting now that there is a minute, but real, chance that there will be no draft calls this year. Don't count on it, but watch with a jaundiced eye. It might be fun to see how the political gambit is worked.

You should also note that there is a possibility that a new attempt to end the draft will be mounted in the Senate. It might be worth your time to write to your Senators and Congressmen and tell them that you're opposed to the draft or any form of involuntary military service, and that you want them to vote in favor of any bill seeking to end the draft. At least let them know that you're watching.

Good luck in the numbers game. While you're digging the drawing, you might want to look up and read a short story called The Lottery. Check your friendly local English major for hints on where to find it. It's about the draft, written by a woman, several years old, and calculated to scare the shit out of you.

PEACE.

Candy is coming.

Nixon's Peace Plan: "Deceit"

The Student Mobilization Committee has released the following:

"Nixon, in his latest 'peace plan', has offered an eight-point program. Its meaning, in effect, is that if the liberation forces of Southeast Asia will give up, then there will be elections in South Vietnam. Even if we were to leave aside the U.S. government's past betrayals of election promises, and South Vietnam's most recent experience with a democratic election, an examination of the Nixon plan reveals its inherent deceit. Thieu would be in direct power until one month before the proposed election; while his entire administrative apparatus would remain throughout the entire period. Province chiefs, who wield so much power over the very lives of villagers, and who have in the past shown success in producing votes for Thieu, would also remain at their lucrative government posts.

Referring to point 7 of the Nixon plan, Tom Wicker in the Jan. 27th N.Y. Times states that 'This is a demand that Hanoi give up its military positions in Laos, Cambodia, and South Vietnam and accept aerial encirclement from Thailand and the Gulf of Tonkin, in return for elections.' In his own speech in Saigon, Mr. Thieu made it clear also that the Vietnamese Communists could participate in the elections only if they laid down their arms and renounced violence. What about his own army and internal police?

"The truth is that Nixon's 'peace plan' is a fraud. It is designed to appear as if he has made every effort at reaching a negotiated settlement whereas, in fact, it is an attempt to justify reescalation. The evidence accumulated after three years of his administration proves conclusively that Nixon seek a military victory. Under increasing pressure from the American people, he has very slowly withdrawn a portion of the U.S. ground troops, while at the same time he has escalated the air war and invaded Laos and Cambodia. Despite these moves, U.S. backed forces have been beaten continually in Laos, Cambodia, and South Vietnam. For Nixon-Thieu, the military situation grows more dangerous every day. Neither 'Vieenamization' nor the air war are working as well as expected. The American people have not wavered on their demand that the war be ended now. Nixon fears the mass upsurge that would inevitably result if he attempted to stop the withdrawals and escalate the ground war.

"Nixon, through his 8-point proposal, is attempting to head off in advance the social explosion he correctly expects. Veiled threats of reescalation, and a call for unity of the American people, were highlights of his Jan. 25th televised speech. That 'peace plan', attempting to justify past and future military adventures, and his plea for support, are testimony of the power of organized antiwar activity in America. As the pressure of the military situation grows, and his bargaining position weakens, we can expect ever more desperate gambles from the Nixon administration.

"Rather than having clouded the issue with his latest fraud, Nixon has posed the question in sharper terms. And we must reply in the clearest way. Immediate, total, and unconditional withdrawal! Self-determination for Southeast Asia!"

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

Most astronomers, I think, have a normal amount of integrity. However, most astronomers seem more than willing to throw that precious commodity aside when it comes to discussing astrology. Why is this so? Let me have your opinions!

ARIES (March 21-April 19): People who perform services for you may be late, disinterested or confused. Take it in stride. Know that this condition is but temporary. Accept necessity of change. Gemini, Virgo persons are involved.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Be sure you know what you are purchasing. Check quality, guarantee, past performance. Get approval of family member. Avoid domestic dissension. Be frank. Review requirements. Choose quality.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Accept added responsibility. Perform necessary duties. Foundation may appear shaky. Maintain aplomb. Don't base actions on impulse. Avoid self-deception. Realistic attitude now is a necessity.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Heed voice of experience. Older individual can show you the way. Tendency now is to skip, slip and slide. You could go in circles without proper guidance. Know this and go directly to source.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Finish what you start. Spread appeal. Diversify. Money situation is subject to quick change. What was strong in in recent past may give way. Move with times. Friend may ask favor that rocks financial boat.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You can deal successfully with those holding opposing views. Means you may be called upon as arbitrator. Prestige rises if you stick to principles. Leo person could figure prominiently. Be impartial.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Tread lightly. Use soft-sell approach. Trying to force issues now would be error. Hunch pays off; follow though without being overanxious. One who enjoys answering questions is much in picture.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Steer clear of dispute involving mutual friends. Humor, versatility are twin allies. Don't risk capital. You require additional information. Those who vie for attention merely are testing you. Be clear headed.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Check details. Obtain useful hint from Scorpio message. Avoid wishful thinking. Co-operate with mate, partner. However, it is wise not get agreements, promises in writing. Get green legal light.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Foundation may not be solid. Know this and take steps to correct situation. Specifically, what is long-range needs review. Your goal may be slightly out-of-focus. Get going with letters, calls.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Dreams become realities only if you are properly prepared. Means real opportunities are available. But you won't receive anything on silver platter. You have work to do; applies especially to home, residence improvements.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Lie low. Do plenty of listening, observing. Avoid brooding. Know that certain amount of seclusion now will prove an asset. Be discreet. Don't confide in wrong people. Apparent setback is temporary.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are independent, unorthodox, capable of overcoming odds to achieve goal. April could be a key month this year, combining business and romantic interests. Finances will be on a more solid base.

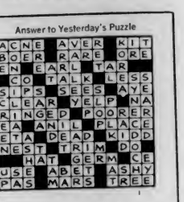
Nixon Success Predicted During Trip To China

If President Nixon visits China with a belief that that country wants self-preservation and not expansion, he will find no "irreconcilable conflicts of interest between the United States and China," a UMass professor predicts.

Franklin W. Houn, a professor of political science, makes the prediction in an article, "Chinese Foreign Policy in Perspective," appearing in the February issue of "The Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists."



The Chinese-born and educated professor, who served in the Chinese government prior to the Communist takeover in 1949, notes in the article what he calls "Peking's essentially defensive posture in world affairs, the self-sufficient and self-sustained nature of its economy, its pre-occupation with internal transformation on all fronts, and the Chinese people's traditional inward-looking mentality."

Prof. Houn also notes a Chinese "willingness to resolve such outstanding issues as the future of Taiwan and the withdrawal of American military forces from Indochina in a manner and at a pace that would not be detrimental to the vital interests and national honor of both countries."

The UMass professor does not expect the People's Republic of China to accede to an international agreement that would not allow her to match American and Russian capabilities. Once again, he cites China's defensive nature as her motivation, and says the Chinese have reiterated that they "will never be the first to use nuclear weapons in a war."

Skiers Off To Successful Start

Co-captains Jerry Curran '72, and Tuck Woodruff '75, paced an almost all new UMass ski team to first and second place finishes against seven colleges of the New England Intercollege Ski Conference. Each team skies six men, the best four to count and each school may ski a four man "B" team so that extra man may gain experience in ski racing.

Skiing on natural snow for the month of January has resembled ice skating on a steep slope and conditions at the Middlebury Snow Bowl were no exception. The Boston College Dual Slalom on Saturday was a real cliff hanger. In the first run "wise old racer" Jerry Curran, with three years of UMass racing experience, and last year's promising freshmen Tuck Woodruff and Kurt Syer posted good times.

This year's freshman sensation Dick McWade fell for a loss of about ten seconds while Dave Rutter lost a ski and more than 30 seconds. Dave Ferris fell, lost both skies and was out of the race. Northeastern had 5 men in all with good times, Amherst had 6 men in and everyone was good and Boston University and Boston College were better off than UMass.

In the "B" Team running, UMass looked dramatically good with Jim Ahearn and Larry Peck both in the top 15 finishes. It looked as though Coach MacConnell working with only one varsity hold over, Jerry Curran, had bet his money on the wrong horses.

In the second run with all the snow gone and the course down to blue ice and boiler plate the right man stood up. Tuck Woodruff put a second good run together on the easier course for a total time of 71.1 seconds and second best place for the day. Jerry Curran skied the harder course with his usual skill for a total time of 75.9 seconds which was the sixth best time of the 80 ski racers in contention.

Kurt Syer from last year's freshmen team had a good run on the ice for a total time for both runs of 77.3 and 8th place. Everything now depended on Dick McWade the first freshman to ski on the UMass varsity. With a fall in his first run and running late in the day on blue ice it was expected that he would be very slow or wipe out completely, but he put in one of the better second runs of the day to give him a total time of 85.6 and 19th place for the race.

All other teams in the meantime except Amherst were in big trouble. Amherst had practiced for their whole intersession and had put in 15 straight days of hard practice on ice at Haystack Mountain, the practice area for the the UMass team. Amherst had five men who had 2 good runs and their team time for the best four was 307.4 seconds. The only four for UMass who had success in the first run all skied the second run better on a different course well worn by forty racers and they had a surprising second place with a 309.9 only 2.5 seconds behind first place Amherst.

The young UMass team had proven that it could "Pull up its sox" and "Hang in there". In the second run the UMass B team all had a fall. The order of finish was Amherst 307.4, UMass 309.9, Northeastern 330.7, Boston College, 339.0, Boston University 344.1, Tufts 365.1, AIC 434.5, and Bentley 527.0. Dave Dube of Amherst won the race while Tuck Woodruff was 2nd, Jerry Curran was 6th, Kurt Syer was 8th and Dick McWade was 19th out of 80 collegians in the race.

Sunday's race hosted by Northeastern was a giant slalom, a longer faster race on the same blue ice. Slalom racing requires quick precise turns closely linked together in an acrobatic sabre dance on steel edges between closely spaced poles. Giant slalom is a cross between downhill, which is a test of courage and love for speed, and slalom, which is a test of quick turning ability. Put together the giant slalom requires the racer to carve out long radious precise high speed turns. There is always one best and fastest line in any race, unfortunately this line is usually the most hazardous to run.

There is a slow safe way and a fast dangerous way. On the fast dangerous route the skiers body and skies often make a violent impact with the poles on race course. Races are won on careful planning where the skier has selected the best line, memorized it, and stays on it within inches while quickly reacting to new conditions which changed since he looked at the course. It is a heart breaking sport where one-hundredth of a second off in timing is the difference between first place and nothing. In slalom races, falls are more frequent than in Giant slalom and downhill. Because falls are frequent, and in team racing you ski 6 the best 4 to count, Slalom team races can be won by the cautious team if the others go "all out". In giant slalom and downhill, falls are less frequent, so less caution is needed under ordinary conditions; on ice anything can happen and usually does.

In the Northeastern race the outcome depended on who had the best line and edges and technique good enough to hold it on ice. Everyone except Amherst had good luck in standing up, UMass had more speed than anyone else. In the first run Woodruff, Curran, Ferris, Rutter and McWade were all fast for the varsity and Ahearn and Peck were fast for the B team. In the second run everyone did it again only better. Woodruff finished first with a 96.3 seconds, Bob Morrow of Northeastern University was second with a 96.6, while Curran had a 98.2 for third, Dave Ferris had a 99.9 for 5th and Dave Rutter had a 102.5 for 15th. Dick McWade the fast frosh was one tenth behind with a 102.6 and sixteenth place. Larry Peck racing B team for experience had a solid tie for 15th with another 102.5.

It was a good week-end ending with UMass, ahead for its league division championship with a total team racing time of 706.2 seconds while Northeastern was 732.9, Amherst 735.2 and Boston College had 746.9. Other teams racing were Boston University, Tufts University, Bentley and AIC.

The next ski team outing will be at Dartmouth Skiway in Lyme, New Hampshire next week-end with the Amherst Giant Slalom on Saturday, and the Eleventh running of the UMass Winter Carnival Ski Race on Sunday. Starting time is 10:00 a.m.

CO-CAPTAIN Jerry Curran led the UMass ski team to impressive first and second place performances in the opening meet of the season for the defending New England champions.

Redmen Win, 82-65, Sluggishly

By EARLE BARROLL

What's all the fuss about? Jack Leaman and his basketball team knew exactly what they were going to do last night against Springfield College...And as it turned out they were the only ones who did.

Maybe that's why so many fans were leaving the Cage under a chorus of, "oh, what a lousy game it was." The fact of the matter is, it was, but that was what Leaman had on the planning board before the game even started, believe it or not.

According to Leaman this is what transpired between the Providence game and the Springfield tap-off that caused this thinking that put the Cage into a state of insomnia: "After practice last night, I felt we had to make it a sloppy game with a lot of layups, a lot of running and some heavy rebounding action," he said.

"To come back after a game like we played against Providence, and have to play two days later against a good basketball team like Springfield College is a tough assignment. I didn't expect us to play well, we were sloppy at practice and I was very worried about this game because of this. But we won and I'm satisfied that we got this one in the satchel."

As it turned out, Leaman's plan took shape early and persisted throughout as his Redmen applied a "sleeper- hold" of their own and sloppied-it by Springfield, 82-65 at Curry Hicks Cage.

To tell what took place during the game would probably put the typewriter to sleep, but here's a nightcap version of what went on.

Between running and turning the ball over up and down, the court UMass built up a ten-point lead midway into the first half on the strength of Chris Coffin's board work and a few UMass layups scattered in between the rubble.

By the half, the score mounted to 37-22 and well into the second half the game was put out of reach as the lead swelled to 21, (70-49), before the reserves came in.

Through all of this, Leaman did point to some plus factors which prompted him to say, "I'm looking to the next few games with a positive picture."

He cited the play of Coffin: "He was the best UMass player on the court tonight. His defense was outstanding and he was the best rebounder of the game. We need play like that from him every game to be effective up front."

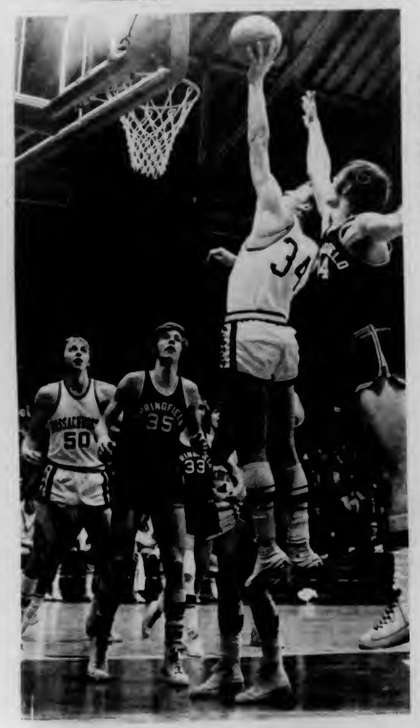
He was pleased with John Betancourt: "For the first time in a while, John's been able to snap out of his slump and run the show out there."

Tom McLaughlin received his plaudits: "It was good to see Mac hit on three good shots tonight."

And Al Skinner and Peter Trow were also on the list of the plusses of this game.

Now add the intangibles: "We ran a lot better tonight than in recent games. I was also very pleased with our defense and I'm glad we got to put the ball in the hoop more often than in the previous games (48%).

There was one record set last night...believe it or not. Springfield's ace guard Dana Anderson scored his 1000th career point.



But in the end, it was perhaps the cold breeze that came rushing into the Cage from the south door that really summed the evening up: it gave most of the crowd the energy to make it out of the Cage...It gave Jack Leaman nothing more than a refreshing feeling for the perfect job he had set out to do.

It's The Same Old Story

By MDC STAFF

It was the same old story again for the UMass freshmen basketball team last night as they pounded another foe into submission early and often and left it weak enough in the second half to run away and hide from the pack.

The victim this time was Springfield College. The score at half time was "relatively" close, 37-23, but the Chiefs had nothing to offer in the second half as far as a coherent attack was concerned and fell heavily, 97-63.

And once again the only excitement that remained for the crowd was that mad rush to the century mark that turned the last two minutes into fourth gear.

The win upped the UMass count to 7-0 and the loss left Springfield at 6-5, but the Chiefs shouldn't feel left alone in defeat...they have a lot of company throughout New England who have been exploited by the Redman frosh.

Balance...the name of the freshman game was more than in evidence last night. Four players hit in double figures in scoring led by Mike Flanagan with 25 (11 of 13 from the floor), John Murphy (22), Bill Endicott (19) and Dave Dibble (10) in his initial start.

Murphy also led all rebounders again, which is like saying Julius Erving can dunk. The big guy from Clinton had 21 to his credit. Jim Burke hit doubles with 10.

What else is new?

Swimmers Sunk By Vermont

By JANIS AHMADJIAN

"It was a long, cold, hard day" said Coach Joe Rogers Saturday as the UMass Varsity Swim Team traveled for three hours to the University of Vermont only to be defeated 31/80.

The Catamounts really showed their stuff - tough, experienced, and extremely aggressive; a difficult team to face for the first meet of the semester. In the words of distance swimmer Bruce Taylor, "great individual efforts could not overcome a five week layoff and a strong Vermont team."

UMass did capture a first in the last event, 400 yard Freestyle Relay. Captain Herb Schuster, Dick Blaisdell, Tom Smith, and Joe Hebert did it with a winning time of 3:43.2.

Bruce Taylor scored the first points for UMass with a second in the 1,000 yard freestyle. Other second place points were captured by: Dick Blaisdell - 50 yard and 100 yard freestyles, Joe Hebert - 200 yard freestyle, and Jack Tyler - 500 yard distance freestyle.

Third place points were gained by Bob Okolita, a new swimmer on the team in the 200 yard individual medley, and the 200 yard backstroke, Bruce Taylor - 500 yard freestyle, and Dave Guiney - 200 yard breaststroke. George Kwiecien displayed great individual effort as he struggled to represent UMass in the 200 yard butterfly.

In the first diving competition Mike Queen placed third. He also placed a second in the last competition while Dick Hagins, a new diver for the team placed a third.

After the meet Captain Herb Schuster expressed a widespread team feeling, "I'm tired of the defeat UMass has to be put through. There are many swimmers at UMass that could make UMass swimming a definite threat, but where are they? Is it that hard to put in some practice?"

The next swim meet of the season will be Saturday when UMass hosts M.I.T. at 2:00 p.m. Boyden Pool.

Duane Thomas Busted

DALLAS (AP)-Troubled Dallas Cowboy running back Duane Thomas, charged with possession of marijuana, talked with club president and general manager Tex Schramm by telephone Monday and Schramm said the conversation was "limited to the subject of him being properly represented."

Thomas and his brother, Bertrand, were released on $5,000 bond each Sunday at Greenville after they were arrested 12 miles west of the Northeast Texas town, some 64 miles from Dallas.

"It's in the hands of our attorneys-or his attorneys, Schramm said. "We did not talk football or about his contract. We had not begun renegotiation of his contract."

Kiner's Case Dismissed

BENTON, Tenn. (AP) — Charges of possessing narcotics and legend drugs against Steve Kiner, linebacker for the New England Patriots of the National Football League, were dismissed Monday.

Kiner, 24, a former All-American at the University of Tennessee, had been arrested on the charges the night of Dec. 22 by state troopers Lloyd Hood and Herschel Gardner after he was stopped near Benton for speeding.

Here are some sweet remembrances of last year's Spring Concert. To think things have changed so much around here in one whole year. (Photos by Barbara Brecher)

Major Spring Concert Unlikely

By KENNETH SULIN

The probabilities of having a major spring concert in the stadium are next to nothing now as a result of yesterday's board meeting attended by Dr. Gage, Gerry Scanlon, Dean Field and various members of the Student Senate and Concert Committee.

Gage, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, stressed he was in favor of promoting cultural enrichment and recreation for the campus community; however, the welfare of the University was the main issue at hand. The greatest factor of worry was obviously the "imports", the people drawn to the concert from outside the five-college area, the people least concerned about responsibility and possible future performances.

Scanlon, Director of Student Affairs, assured the board that the public attitude would be minimal and through previous experience with University concerts stated, "The kids just won't take care of themselves."

A major "circus" is not necessary for the students as Gage put it; however, he wasn't totally opposed to the idea. He could foresee this type of thing as being far from a sophisticated artistic event, rather it would only give the campus a name, whether it would become a good one or a bad one, he said.

The discussion continued to security problems and effective methods of keeping non-ticket holders out. A first proposal by the Concert Committee suggested the gates to the stadium would open two hours before the concert's beginning at both front and rear turnstyles, the only two means of entrance, where two police officers and two student ushers would be stationed. As for gate crashers, bordering the ten foot barbed wire fence surrounding the stadium would be an outer snow fence on the north and south sides along with a security patrol awaiting and expecting climbers.

A second proposal, which all agreed would be effective, was suggested by Scanlon; one similar to a technique used by the University of Rhode Island. A pattern using three police-bound perimeters must be passed though in order to gain entrance to the stadium. The first perimeter would check for tickets and more or less screen any people that are drunk or carrying bottles. The second would again check the validity of tickets while the third would amit the students. Scanlon concluded, "If we must do it, we must do it positively and weigh all factors."

Elliot Sherman, Head of the Concert Committee, directed a question toward Scanlon and Gage asking them whether or not a concert of 15,000-20,000 would be feasible and, if not, what would they suggest. Gage then replied that such a performance would be almost entirely impossible because, for the price and size, the University just couldn't handle the responsibility, let alone the capability. Gage also stated that mob scenes would arise. "Kids think it's a smart thing to beat the system and not pay admission," he said. His main concern, however, was the fact that people would be injured without question. He concluded, "Money lost can be made up but injury cannot."

Dean Field added, "We have a lack of capacity to control the situation."

The Concert Committee related the proposal to the strike planning; however, Gage showed this was "totally different," not a long-range concern and commitment, rather a single-shot event that would be virtually impossible.

Lee Sandwen, President of the Student Senate, was confident a concert of 15-20 thousand was plausible; nevertheless, Gage could not be persuaded. In answer to Elliot's earlier question Field suggested the performance of a low profile group with possibly three to five thousand in attendance soley for the purpose "to see what happens."

Finally Gage concluded that the target of 15,000 people was far too large. The Fact was discouraging and it is now obvious that the possibilities of a large concert must be met with modest steps.

We will probably see a smaller than expected spring concert with a low-key group which in turn will act as a trial and later, if all goes well, a stepping-stone to something of a larger scale

Action Lab Begins Its Third Semester

The Action Lab tutorial program will be preparing for its third semester of operation in the Hampshire County House of Correction. Last semester, the program was responsible for about two hundred man/woman hours in the jail per week.

Approximately thirty UMass undergraduates participated in organized discussions and seminars aimed at stimulating inmates and involving both students and inmates in creative and educational dialogue. The program's seminars ranged from preparation for the high school equivalency test to discussions of the novels of Hermann Hesse and included such things as an art seminar, a seminar on various aspects of meditation and informal discussions concerning drugs, race relations, and the judicial system.

Some of the inmates appeared highly motivated towards academic work. Others, coming to the tutorials and seminars simply to look at the coeds and talk, did not wish to learn in the traditional sense at all. Regardless of the inmates motivations or the tutor's initial intentions, the program seems to be successfully progressing in a number of areas. For those inmates with few or no visitors, the opportunity to talk with someone from the outside appears beneficial. Some work was done with Spanish-speaking inmates, teaching them English skills.

Also, inmates desiring to continue their education have been given the opportunity to do so. Currently the program is seeking university professors to tutor some inmates for college credit that will be recorded in the Division of Continuing Education at UMass.

For other inmates, Action Lab has provided reading material of interest and many tutors work directly with inmates to improve reading and math skills.

Action Lab hopes to expand the base of its program to include research in the areas of employment, lodging, educational and counseling information for the inmates. It is also hoped that legal resources and information can be upgraded within the jail itself.

The Action Lab program will hold its organizational meeting today at 8:00 p.m. in Room 165 of the Campus Center. The program will attempt to meet more specifically the desires of the inmates. This will include such things as film seminars and seminars in black literature. The selection of tutors and seminar directors will be based on each individual's creative input into the program. Additional black seminar directors are particularly needed. It is hoped that all those people who feel they can participate in the program either within or without the jail, will attend.

The Action Lab program offers a unique view of the controversial American correctional system. As it includes direct contact with those most affected by the judicial process, the program offers an incisive (if not a balanced) presentation of the nature of American correctional facilities.

Board Of Selectmen Make Rules Change

By CHARLIE BERKOW

The Board of Selectmen made a procedural change yesterday which will allow for more complete press coverage of their meetings. In other important business in yesterday's marathon meeting, they approved a proposal initiated by a group of local geologists to study water supply in the Amherst area for inclusion in the warrant (agenda) for this year's Town Meeting. They also acted on petitions for changes in Cowles Lane, discussed a plan to foster agriculture in the area in a meeting cut short by time and began the discussion of the preliminary capital budget.

Under the new procedures, the Selectmen will have an agenda for their Executive sessions, as they do for their open sessions. At the beginning of each Executive session, they will decide which items will be discussed in open meeting, and will re-open the meeting immediately to discuss those items. This will allow the press to cover the meetings more completely.

The Selectmen previously held open meetings attended by the press followed by Executive sessions, in which financial or personal matters, etc., were discussed. If, in the course of the Executive session, the Selectmen came across a matter which they felt should be discussed in open meeting, they opened it up again. But the Collegian and other reporters did not stay around to cover these items. As a result, many were missed.

Gerald Brophy, representing a group of concerned area geologists, asked the Selectmen to insert an article in the warrant for next month's Town Meeting to commission a study of the area's water resources. In calling for the study, Brophy cited uninformed "ranting" by the press about the water supply as showing a need for more information. Selectman H. Hills Skillings added that "Serious problems" which might come up in the future will necessitate the information to be provided by the study. Town Manager Allen Torrey agreed, and felt that drillings presently being conducted by an engineering firm should continue. "I feel that we should be working on all fronts," he said.

The Board referred a traffic problem concerning Cowles Lane, Amity, North Prospect, Hallock and North Pleasant streets to Torrey, asking him to study the problem and to see that no-parking signs are posted and enforced on Cowles Lane. Area residents and businessmen on Cowles Lane had petitioned the Board to make it one-way going west and allow parking on the south side. Residents of neighboring streets raised a counter-petition saying that as the next street over was also one-way going west, they would have to go to Amity Street to turn east. Residents complained that presently, cars parked on Cowles Lane are blocking traffic and creating a traffic hazard. Skillings told Torrey, "We would like no more complaints that it (no-parking regulations) is not enforced."

In other business, the Board:

—Discussed with Town Assessor John McDermott a tax plan designed to foster agriculture in Amherst;

—Approved the relocation of several telephone poles; —Approved a list of reimbursements to property owners whose land was taken to widen Cushman bridge;

—Approved the character of Muriel Wiggins for incorporation and discussed procedure for future character approvals;

—Set the Town Meeting for 7:30 p.m. on March 13 at Amherst Regional Junior High School; —And received the annual audit report of the Jones Library.

The Selectmen began discussing the preliminary report on the capital budget, but adjourned their meeting at 1:45 during that discussion. The meeting resumed at 8:00 p.m., when the Selectmen went into Executive session to review payments to the town by the state in lieu of property taxes on land owned by UMass.

The meeting reopened with further discussion of the capital budget, which was still going on at the Collegian deadline.

Hamlin House Closes Hotel

Hamlin House has resumed its dormitory duties this semester and has shed its function as a hotel.

Refugees from Chadbourn infest the first three floors of Hamlin while the fourth floor is occupied by a group from J.O.E.

Chadbourn is currently being renovated and will be ready for occupancy next semester.

The group from J.O.E. will leave Hamlin in two weeks.

Although a dormitory will be provided for the students who remain during vacation, the cut-rate hotel service that was provided by Hamlin will not be resumed this semester.

The Campus Center Hotel will assume the duties of the Hamlin Hotel at a considerably higher rate.

Collegian Elects Board Of Editors

Staff members of the Collegian elected a new Board of Editors at a meeting last night in the Campus Center.

Outgoing editors include Richard C. Hanson, Anne C. Stadnicki, Barry J. Rubenstein, and Earle T. Barroll.

A caption in yesterday's Collegian indicated that the computers in Whitmore had been out of order for the past two weeks. Actually, a separate computer system was not functioing. This is the one used in research and course work by students.

Warning Given On Man-Made Life

NEW YORK (AP) — A scientist has warned his colleagues around the world to slow down their efforts to manufacture life in the laboratory. He says man lacks the wisdom to deal with the consequences of such acts, especially the creation of test tube babies.

Dr. Leon R. Kass, a physician and biochemist at the National Academy of Sciences, discussed the manufacture of life in the laboratory as reports gather that some scientists, notably in England, are on the verge of implanting in a woman an embryo fertilized in a test tube.

"To have developed to the point of introduction of such massive powers with so little deliberation over the desirability of their use," Dr. Kass said, "can hardly be regarded as evidence of wisdom."

The scientist suggested an alternative: "In the absence of such wisdom, we can be wise enough to know that we are not wise enough. When we lack sufficient wisdom to do, wisdom consists in not doing.

"Restraint, caution, abstention, delay are what this second-best--and maybe only--wisdom dictates with respect to baby manufacture, and with respect to various other forms of human engineering made possible by other new biomedical techniques."

Scientists have already reported from several laboratories the fertilization, in the test tube, of human egg by human sperm and the subsequent laboratory culture of the young embryo. There have been no reports of implantation yet, after which the embryo would grow to birth.

Much of the public attention has centered on reports from Dr. Robert G. Edwards of Cambridge University and his colleague, Dr. Patrick C. Steptoe, in work supported by the Ford Foundation.

An object of their work is to help women have babies despite a blockage of their tubes, through which a fertilized egg normally passes on the way to implantation, the scientists say.

Dr. Kass replies in an analysis in the quarterly The Public Interest, that surgical reconstruction of the oviduct would be preferable and that although the success rate so far is only fair, it is bound to improve. But Dr. Kass puts more weight on the risk factors.

The manipulation in the laboratory of the embryo, he said, could produce damaging effects in the eventual child. "Does the parent's desire for a child," he asks, "entitle them to have it by methods which carry for that child an unknown and untested risk of deformity or malformation?"

The moral argument, Dr. Kass said, is that scientists must know there will be no defects in the child before proceeding with implantation--and there is no way of knowing. "I have dwelled at length upon the problem of risks and mishaps that accompany the experimental phase of this new technology, first, because it is a problem widely and remarkably ignored, and, second, because it provides a powerful moral objection sufficient to rebut the implantation experiments."

Dr. Kass also discussed another stage in the laboratory manufacture of life, a technique called "cloning," in which the nucleus of an unfertilized egg is removed, and replaced with a nucleus from an adult cell. The egg will then be genetically identical to the adult source.

"An unlimited number of identical individuals," Dr. Kass said, "all generated a sexually from a single parent-- that is, a clone--could be produced by nuclear transplantation."

The genetic or hereditary material in a cell, the DNA, is often described as containing all the information for determining what the baby will be, the printing press that prints out people. In cloning, the printing press would be replaced by the copying machine, printing out copies of genetically identical people.

"Within our lifetime," Dr. Kass said, "possibly even as early as 1980, it may be technically feasible to clone a human being." And he added: "Among sensible men, the ability to clone a man would not be sufficient reason for doing so."

The same questions of experimenting on the unborn arise with cloning as did with the test tube baby, Dr. Kass said, and they again constitute a moral argument against any first attempt to clone a man.

But there are other questions that apply specifically to cloning.

"Central to this matter," Dr. Kass said, "is the idea of the dignity and worth of each human

The basic question we must ask is this: Is individual dignity undermined by a lack of genetic distinctiveness?"

There is also the question of dehumanization.

"Is there possibly some wisdom in that mystery of nature which joins the pleasure of sex, the communication of love, and the desire for children in the very activity by which we continue the chain of human existence?"

"I had earlier raised the question," Dr. Kass concluded, "of whether we have sufficient wisdom to embark upon new ways for making babies, on an individual scale as well as in the mass. By now it should be clear that I believe the answer must be a resounding 'No.'"

Ms. Green Says Education Bill To Suffer With Money Rider

By STEVE TRIPOLI

Congresswoman Edith Green (D-Ore.) said last night that the country "will suffer greatly" if her student aid package is passed with a Senate rider adding $1-1/2 billion to it for de-segregation.

Cong. Green, speaking in the Student Union ballroom before the New England regional meeting of the College Entrance Examination Board also said that the responsibility for the bill if it isn't passed in the version of her Special Subcommittee on Education lies at the door of Health, Education, and Welfare Secretary Elliot Richardson.

The main points of the House version of the bill which Cong. Green endorses are:

1) No more discrimination in education on the basis of sex.

2) A new emphasis on vocational and technical education.

3) Student financial aid and the restatement of the original Congressional intent that money only go to the lowest socio-economic group.

4) Institutional aid.

She also stated on this subject that the administration has placed itself in a position against Institutional aid.

Continuing with the statement that the middle class is now the "forgotten group in American education," Cong. Green attacked present Administration policy which "favors children of the disadvantaged and rich universities." She cited the case of one hundred schools which get a large portion of the government's money, mostly for research grants. These are the "prestigious schools, many from the New England area, and many of which have lobbied against the article in her bill on admissions regardless of sex.

Turning to other aspects of the issue, Cong. Green said that she feels that the Office of Education has turned the financial aid program "into a welfare program" and that she felt that no student should be disqualified from financial aid because of his own work outside of school.

She closed by warning the Administration against pursuing its present policy. "We are pricing the middle income family and its sons and daughters out of the education business."

Grad Senate Discusses S.U. Fee

By JEANNETTE MARTINEAU

Monday night's Graduate Student Senate discussed the possibilities and the justifications for a "scale rate" of the Campus Center-Student Union Fee.

Veda Ross, who chaired the meeting, also brought up the subject of College III at Boston. According to the Report of the President's Committee on the Future University of Massachusetts, "College III should disclaim the traditional separation between professional education and liberal learning...it should be a new model for undergraduate professional education. It should be as deeply committed to the intellectual values associated with the liberal arts -- the capacity for self-criticism, the ability to take a large view, the readiness to change -- as it is to convey some specialized skills. Its premise should be that an undergraduate curriculum, making use of the disciplines where appropriate but organized from a career point of view, can be an effective vehicle for instilling the breadth and perspective necessary for effective public service.

"College III should be concerned above all else with building links between understanding and effective action. Its program should include opportunities for field work and work experience. The University Committee to Plan College III was very strong in its support of field experience as an integral part of the new school," stated the report.

Support of the Future Report was withheld pending further discussion.

Learn Sign Language

All persons interested in registering for the new deaf sign language course should meet with Mrs. Maxine Brown at the School of Education auditorium today at 4 p.m. Information regarding days and times of class meetings will be announced then.

Students who cannot attend the special meeting should see Mrs. Brown at the Northeast Regional Media Center for the Deaf in Thompson Hall, Room 12, Feb. 4, from noon to 2 p.m. Only those students from the Five-College Area who have already given their names to Mrs. Brown's office are eligible to take the course.

Today Is The Day

Editor's Note: For coverage on the draft lottery listen to WMUA throughout the day.

WASHINGTON (AP) — March 9 was the first birthdate stuffed into a red capsule Monday as Selective Service officials began the process of preparing for Wednesday's draft lottery for men born in 1953.

Aug. 25 and May 13 followed March 9 and all the birthdates, ending with Sept. 16, were in capsules within an hour.

It took about the same time to stuff numbers into blue capsules, beginning with number 110 and ending with 354.

The capsules were then locked in two plexiglass drums where they will stay until Wednesday.

The process is part of Selective Service's effort to make the selection of birthdates for men facing the draft after they are 19-years-old as random as possible.

The atmosphere at the Commerce Department auditorium where the drawing is to be held was low key in contrast to past preparations and draft officials said it probably was because fewer men now are being drafted.

New Program Traces Thefts

Students will be asked to file cards listing their valuables with the University security police this week. The cards are part of a new security program to trace stolen goods.

Heads of residence will distribute the cards. Students are asked to list valuable goods which they have marked with their social security numbers. The reason for using social security numbers on valuables is that outside departments would not be familiar with student ID numbers, but would be able to trace back the social security numbers. Also "fences" would not buy goods marked with social security numbers, or the value of the goods would be lowered due to the chance of discovery, according to the security police spokesman. The cards will be on file by student number, however.

Valuables should be marked with indelible ink, or the numbers should be scratched into a not-so-obvious place on the item, according to the police. Some houses and area governments are buying electric pencils (a vibrating etching tool which engraves nearly any material).

House furniture, as well as individual possessions, should be labeled, the police said. It was suggested that the dorm name be engraved on lounge furniture.

Students who file cards with the police (through their heads of residence) will receive decals for their doors, warning prospective thieves that their goods are traceable. Dorms with 100 %, or nearly that percentage, will bear plaques outside their dorms testifying to their protection.

The security police say that this program has been successful at other schools, but it can be a success at UMass only if the majority of persons mark their valuables and turn their cards in. If enough students respond, the program will be continued.

NES Needs Tutors

The first meeting of NES did not appear to be prosperous, according to its spokesman. Although more than 150 students came to the meeting to sign up for tutoring duty, there is still a void of tutors in the program. Some of the people at the meeting were tutors last semester, but the majority of former tutors has not returned. As a result, there are many children in Springfield without tutors.

For any people unsure of their tutoring ability, NES runs a 3-credit course in tutoring. It includes working in the Springfield grammar schools. About 15 places are still open in this course.

Even though the 4 orientation sessions are mandatory, it is still possible to sign up by coming to the NES office. The next orientation session will be on Sunday, February 6, at 7 p.m. in Room 163 of the Campus Center. This meeting will center on the problems of the urban school. Anyone interested in enrolling should come to the NES office sometime this week.

Violence Spreads Through N. Ireland

British paratrooper arrests rioter in Londonderry, Northern Ireland, Sunday where outbreak of violence at protest rally left several dead and injured.

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP)-Violence, death and protest gripped divided Ireland Tuesday as guerrillas retaliated for the victims of Londonderry's "Bloody Sunday." A sniper killed a British soldier and a Belfast woman was gravely wounded in cross-fire.

Strikes and boycotts throughout Ulster and the Irish republic to the south spearheaded a surge of anger by Roman Catholics mourning the 13 who died in the Londonderry clash between civilians and British troops.

In Dublin, capital of the republic, an explosive device shattered windows in the British Embassy. Police said several persons were believed injured. Two thousand demonstrators marched on the Embassy, burning a flag and mock coffins and lobbing bricks and fire bombs over the heads of police.

Northern Ireland's Prime Minister, Brian Faulkner, charged the republic with using a distress fund set up two years ago for Catholics in the north to "buy guns for murderers." The republic's prime minister, Jack Lynch, demanded that Britain pull its troops out of heavily populated Catholic areas in the North and end internment without trial.

The British government named the nation's top judge, Lord Chief Justice Sir John Widgery, to undertake an inquiry into the Londonderry killings.

Prime Minister Edward Heath told a packed House of Commons in London the 60-year-old judge would start work immediately. His aim will be to get at the truth behind a welter of charges and countercharges springing from the fatal confrontation between paratroopers and civil rights marchers.

Heath's remarks opened an emergency debate on the government's policy in its six-county Northern Ireland province. The Commons squelched a motion attacking that policy by a 304-266 vote, then approved Widgery's appointment unanimously.

The British soldier was shot dead in Belfast almost as Heath spoke. The woman was hit later in a cross-fire between guerrrillas and British troops in the fashionable, largely Protestant Mount Pottinger district of Belfast.

The soldier's death was seen as a reprisal by the outlawed Irish Republic Army-IRA-which swore Sunday to kill a soldier for each of the Londonderry dead.

British army headquarters said the sentry, on duty outside the police station, was hit in the chest by a single shot from a sniper.

His death brought the toll since August 1969 to 233. He was the third soldier killed this year.

Gunmen and British army contingents supported by armored cars clashed in a fire-fight across the border between Northern Ireland and the neighboring Irish republic. The battle, which claimed no known casualties, ended when the Irish army arrived.

Troops patrolling Belfast came under guerrilla rifle fire on several occasions. The army said one raider was wounded and captured.

In the Catholic Ardoyne district of the capital, a foodstore was blown up by an incendiary bomb. Three women were taken to a hospital slightly injured.

Crowds gathered throughout Northern Ireland to protest the Londonderry shootings. Soldiers combatted hostile mobs in Belfast by firing rounds of rubber bullets, which are designed to stun but not kill.

At Dungiven, a tiny market town near Londonderry, 4,000 people with 13 white crosses packed the main street in bitter cold in a silent tribute to the dead.

In Brief...

Court Orders Soldier Be Discharged

BOSTON (AP)-The 1st U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ordered that a New Jersey soldier be discharged from the Army Tuesday because of his objection to war.

The soldier, Robert J. Armstrong Jr., 24, of Paramus, N.J., filed a petition in U.S. District Court in May, 1970 seeking release from the Army, but the court denied the petition.

The Appeals Court, in a 2-1 decision, reversed the lower court ruling and ordered Armstrong released.

Averill Harriman Donates Art

WASHINGTON (AP)-The W. Averell Harriman Foundation has given 22 major works of art, including paintings by Paul Cezanne and Pablo Picasso, to the National Gallery of Art in memory of Marie N. Harriman, late wife of the former ambassador.

Harriman himself gave a portrait of Marie N. Harriman by Andre Derain.

Church Fights Government Subpoena

BOSTON (AP)-Dr. Robert N. West, president of the Unitarian-Universalist Association, begins a coast-to-coast tour Wednesday to seek support for his denomination's fight against an expected government subpoena of the church's financial records.

A federal grand jury in Boston twice issued subpoenas to allow it examine the denomination's bank records after Beacon Press, the church's publishing arm, announced last year it would publish a version of the Pentagon Papers provided to them by Sen. Mike Gravel, D-Alaska.

Police Seize Heroin In Raid

LAWRENCE, Mass. (AP)-A Lawrence man and three men from New York were arrested Tuesday in a police raid at a motel that resulted in the seizure of heroin worth an estimated $2 million on the street.

Policemen Mourned In New York

NEW YORK (AP)-One of two slain police buddies was buried from St. Patrick's Cathedral Tuesday, with police from as far away as Boston and Washington helping to make it one of the biggest gatherings of mourners in the 100-year history of the stately midtown edifice.

Standing outside on sunwashed Fifth Avenue afterward, Police Commissioner Patrick V. Murphy expressed confidence the killers would be caught, adding:

"Every man on the force is dedicated to catching them."

An estimated 3,500 law enforcement officers were among some 4,000 mourners who converged on St. Patrick's for funeral services for Gregory Foster, 22, slain Thursday with his partner, Rocco Laurie, 23.

Before entering, the lines of uniformed police stretched six blocks along Fifth Avenue.

Cathedral officials could recall few previous funerals of comparable size.

Laurie was buried later from his home parish, Blessed Sacrament Roman Catholic church in West Brighton, Staten Island.

At one point, Terence Cardinal Cooke was forced to interrupt the cathedral services briefly when Foster's 19-year-old widow collapsed. She is the mother of a 3-year-old son and an infant daughter.

Foster, black, and Laurie, white, fought together as Marines in Vietnam. They returned to New York to join the police force together, and remained together as volunteers on a neighborhood police team, a restoration of the old foot patrol idea, to bring the force into closer contact with citizens.

They died together as their slayers emptied guns into their backs while they were on patrol in the East Village. One of the killers reportedly danced a jubilant jig as he fled.

Rewards totaling $13,000 have been offered for the slayers.

In a letter after the shooting, the Black Liberation Army claimed its members had perpetrated the slayings. The BLA made a similar claim in the machine gunning of two policemen last May.

Four men were being sought for questioning in the slayings of Gregory and Laurie. One of them was indicted in the killings, also last May, of a two-man, black and white, police team in Harlem.

Nixon Plans No Tax Increase

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon's administration has no present plans to ask Congres for a tax increase this year or next, two of its key figures told skeptical congressmen Monday.

Treasury Secretary John B. Connally and Management and Budget Director George P. Shultz brought to the House Ways and Means Committee the administrations' request for a $50-billion raise in the national debt ceiling, to $480 billion.

But the questioning turned quickly to the possibility of a tax increase-especially, some inquirers implied, the chance that one will be sought after the November presidential election.

Connally and Shultz agreed that administration estimates of the 1971 economy had been far off the mark, as deficits estimated at $38.8 billion this year and $25.5 billion next year indicate.

But they insisted the administration is looking not for additional taxes, but a firm lid on spending and an economic recovery that would generate more revenues.

Connally, noting the administration recently went through a tax reduction, said, "From an economic standpoint a tax program at this time would fly right in the face of what we think our objectives should be."

Several committee members indicated they are not convinced a tax increase is ruled out, at least after the election.

Communist Europe's Birthrate Drops

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP)-Easy abortion and increased use of contraceptives are pushing birth rates down in Communist Eastern Europe and governments there are worried about it, a western study showed Tuesday.

A study by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization says:

"It is reckoned that 60 per cent of all pregnancies are aborted in Hungary-probably in the U.S.S.R. too-44 per cent in Bulgaria, 36 per cent in Czechoslovakia and 23 per cent in Poland.

"The Church in Poland heads the opposition against easy abortion and seeks to defend the traditional family concept."

The Soviet Union eased its campaign against abortion in the mid-1950s. The study suggests it was because the death rate had gone down and Soviet leaders wanted to get more women into jobs. It adds that the downward swing in births may have gone further than expected and that attempts may now be made to reverse the trend.

The birth rate in the Soviet Union dropped 36 per 1,000 in 1938 to 17 in 1970. It was then about the same level as rates in Western Europe and below the rate for southern European countries.

In Romania, the laws against abortion were tightened more recently, sending the birth rate up from 12 per 1,000 in December 1966 to a level of 40 in 1967. But the spread of contraceptives and illegal abortions brought it down again to 20 in the first quarter of 1971.

The study finds that except in East Germany and Czechoslovakia, contraceptives play a minor but slowly increasing role in population trends.

In the 1950s population in Eastern Europe was growing faster than in NATO countries. Now the trend has reversed. In 1965 the Eastern countries had about 65 per cent of the population of NATO areas, including the United States and Canada.

By 1985 the proportion should fall to about 62 per cent.

NATO does not see any problem for the Soviets in keeping up their military manpower.

Like other industrial countries, those of Eastern Europe are adopting the idea of the small family, but NATO suggests some special reasons: A chronic lack of housing, the need for women to work, the urge to acquire more comforts, and women enjoying sex more without child-bearing or even marriage.

"The 'liberation' of women is an old Soviet concept," the study says. "It is, however, offset by certain practical disadvantages summed up in the Soviet saying: The man bears the responsibility, the woman carries the bricks."

Irving To Appear Before Grand Jury

NEW YORK (AP)-Federal and state investigators have put together a portfolio of pictures of present and former aides to Howard Hughes. It is believed they will ask Author Clifford Irving to try to pick out one as the mysterious "George Gordon Holmes" he claims was a go-between in putting together the purported autobiography of the elusive billionaire.

Court sources also said Tuesday that Irving has been summoned to appear before a federal grand jury Thursday.

In Albuquerque, N.M., a political aide to John Meier, former scientific adviser to Hughes and now a candidate for the Democratic senatorial nomination in that state, said Meier had also been subpoenaed to appear then.

Thomas Benavides said Meier was already in New York preparing for his appearance, but this could not be confirmed from court or other sources.

Meier earlier had denied any connection with Irving.

"That's ridiculous," he told reporters last weekend when asked if he had supplied any material to Irving. "I never met the man."

The New York Post said Irving telephoned the newpaper Tuesday afternoon to deny ever saying that Meier was "Holmes," as had been reported.

"I have never named John Meier as a go-between in the Hughes affair. To my knowledge, I have never met Meier."

Irving said he was breaking his lawyer's injunction to maintain silence because "I do not believe that any person should be damaged by inaccurate statements that may appear in the press or other media.

"Lest such a person be hurt, I break my silence on one limited subject."

Irving received three checks totaling $650,000 from the McGraw-Hill Publishing Co. to transmit to Hughes for the rights to the "autobiography."

In a court affidavit, Irving said he had given two of the checks to Hughes personally and a third, for $325,000, to "Holmes." He later admitted that his wife, Edith, deposited the checks in a Zurich, Switzerland, bank and later withdrew the money in cash.

Swiss authorities said Mrs. Irving later deposited $445,000 of this money in another Zurich bank under the name of "Hannah Rosencrantz."

Arrest warrants have been issued in Zurich for both the Irvings on "suspicion of fraud" charges. Swiss authorities said they had not decided whether to ask for extradition of the couple.

CBS News Man Answers Critics

WASHINGTON (AP)-CBS newsman Daniel Schorr, subject of a White House-ordered FBI investigation, testified Tuesday the Nixon administration has made a great many people believe "it is no longer an honorable thing to be a newsman."

White House officials refused to appear before the constitutional rights subcommittee of Sen. Sam D. Ervin, (D-N.C.), but repeated in a letter disputed statements that Schorr was being considered for a government job when the FBI investigation began last Aug. 20.

Remarking that letters "can conceal more than they reveal," Ervin said that although the administration has invoked executive privilege in declining to testify, he does not believe an appearance "would cause the White House to fall in ruins."

Schorr said the investigation was ordered after his reporting brought a series of complaints from President Nixon; Sen. Robert Dole, the Republican national chairman, and White House staff members.

If the White House actually had been considering him for a job under those circumstances, Schorr said, "it would have been an extraordinarily openminded thing for them to have done."

He said reports printed in The Washington Post that he was being considered for an executive position on the Council of Environmental Quality were "news to me," and that no one in the government has ever told him directly he was being considered for a job.

In a letter to Ervin, FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover said his agents, acting on White House orders, made a routine check on Schorr, interviewing 25 persons in 6 1/2 hours before being called off.

"The incomplete investigation of Mr. Schorr was entirely favorable concerning him, and the results were furnished to the White House," Hoover said.

"Job or no job, the launching of such an investigation without consent demonstrates an insensitivity to personal rights," Schorr said.

"Most of my colleagues believe that I was subjected to harassment," he said.

He expressed belief most Americans would be more comfortable if legal safeguards existed to bar what he called "an arbitrary intrusion into their lives."

Schorr said he found himself in a "no-win" situation, because to publicize his own problems with the administration could only tarnish his neutrality as a journalist.

He said he had to avoid becoming emotional because "If the administration could push me into the role of its open antagonist, that would serve its purpose as well, or better, than intimidating me into pulling my punches."

Schorr said:

"I've never before felt that to a great number of people it is no longer an honorable thing to be a newsman.

"For if you can discredit the press, it doesn't make much difference anymore what they say or write."

Nurseries Infected; Hexochlorophene Suspected

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP)-Data collected from 20 cities indicates that staphylococcal infections may be on the rise in some hospital nurseries, the national Center for Disease Control said Tuesday.

Dr. Philip Brachman, director of epidemiology for the CDC, said the agency had notified state health departments requesting such data after the Food and Drug Administration issued warnings to hospitals against the use of hexachlorophene, a powerful antibacterial agent.

The CDC said it had only raw data which must be further analyzed to determine if the apparent rise in the staphylococcus in certain locations was due to ending the use of hexachlorophene for bathing infants.

Products containing hexachlorophene had been used to bathe infants in hospital nurseries to reduce the number of staph bacteria collecting, or colonizing, on the skin of babies. The FDA warned Dec. 6 against continued use of products containing hexachlorophene, in either hospitals or homes, saying reserach studies questioned the safety of such products. The FDA said hexachlorophene might be absorbed through the skin and become toxic.

Brachman said, "We have meaningful data from about 20 hospitals or so. Things have happened so rapidly we haven't been able to contact all the hospitals we would like to." The CDC declined to list the cities from which replies had been received.

"We sent out information to state health departments on Jan. 19 when we started to have evidence that there might be some problems, and we asked the departments to collect the data for us," he said.

Brachman said CDC officials would go over the data with the FDA and members of the Academy of Pediatrics this week in Washington to determine its significance.

"The fact that an outbreak of staphylococcus occurs doesn't necessarily mean that it is due to the discontinuation of hexachlorophene," said one CDC spokesman. "A number of aspects could figure into the problem."

CDC officials declined to discuss specific information contained in the new data.

"The data indicates certain levels of staphlococcus disease among infants, but until we have a chance to sit down and look at past data, we don't know much more than that," said Brachman.

Laird Says No Call-ups Until April

WASHINGTON — Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird announced Sunday that there would be no draft calls at least until April, thus assuring tens of thousands of men with low lottery numbers they will never be drafted.

Laird's announcement, made on the American Broadcasting Company's program, "Issues and Answers," means that nearly all men who were born in 1951 and before and who did not hold draft deferments on Dec. 31, 1971, will escape the draft forever, regardless of their lottery numbers.

Selective Service System officials said that about 115,000 men who might otherwise have been drafted were affected by the announcement. Most of these men graduated from college last June or lost student deferments for some other reason during the last six months of last year.

The officials said that many men, anticipating that there would be no draft calls in the first three months of this year, canceled their deferments in the last days of 1971.

Laird said at a news conference on Dec. 27 that no one would be inducted in January and that "quite possibly" there would be no calls in February and March.

Sunday's announcement affected draft-eligible men who were classified 1-A, 1-O or 1-A-O at the end of last year, who have a lottery number below 125 — last year's cutoff — and who have not been drafted or, if they are conscientious objectors, have not been called for their alternative service.

Under Selective Service regulations, these men were placed at the beginning of this year in what is called the extended priority group, Subgroup B. Men in this category are liable to the draft for the first three months of this year but not afterward.

These men will never be drafted, Selective Service officials said, unless there is a national mobilization on the scale of that in World War II.

According to lawyers and draft counselors, men in Subgroups B, who are appealing their 1-A classification, should withdraw their appeals.

There is a small group of men born in 1950 and before who were classified 1-A on Dec. 31, 1971, who are still eligible to be drafted. These men are in what is called Subgroup A, because they held 1-A classifications on Dec. 31, 1970.

Students Key Courses For Future Jobs

Students at American colleges and universities are showing unusual interest this fall in courses of study that are loosely keyed to vocational goals.

Undergraduate enrollment in such fields as premedicine and prelaw, social work, psychology, journalism and nursing has generally risen this fall.

In part, the pattern seems to reflect the current economic situation. There have been continuing declines, for example, in enrollment in such areas as engineering, education and physics, paralleling a sharp drop in employment opportunities in those fields.

This is one of the conclusions that emerge from analysis of two recent nationwide statistical studies on college enrollment--one by the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education and the other by Dr. Garland G. Parker, vice provost of the University of Cincinnati. It has been generally confirmed by The New York Times in interviews with directors and students on a dozen campuses across the country.

The patterns are not fully consistent throughout the country, and conclusive statistics are elusive. The picture is further clouded by the creation on many campuses of experimental courses that cut across traditional departmental boundaries and therefore defy direct comparison with courses in previous years.

Still, the new trend is well illustrated by the situation in biology, which is probably the most popular course of study for aspiring physicians. The Carnegie study reports that the number of new students entering biology this fall was up by 16 per cent over last year's number in a survey of 357 institutions.

Medicine is one of the few fields in which there is still a shortage of trained personnel; medical schools have previously reported a dramatic rise in applications.

At Harvard, the number of biology majors rose from 194 to 248 last semester. And enrollment in organic chemistry, a prerequisite for medical school, has nearly doubled in two years. Latecomers are compelled to watch the lectures on television.

Similarly, the percentage of entering freshmen at Cornell who indicate that they planned to major in biology jumped from 20 per cent in 1969 to 22 per cent in 1970 and 26 per cent this fall.

And at Berkeley, more than half of the freshman class of 3,000 is taking introductory chemistry this fall, requiring televised lectures and night classes.

"There seems to be both negative and positive reasons for this," said Mrs. Barbara Boga, a premedical adviser on the California campus. "The glut of Ph.D.'s and the bad teaching market are one reason. And of course everybody has been talking about the shortage of doctors."

One of the most rapidly growing areas of study is journalism and communication arts, where they are offered, despite the fact that the job picture in the news industry is not very bright at this time. Journalism registration at the University of Wisconsin jumped from 181 last semester to 246 this fall.

"Students see journalism as a way to get involved in the world in an active way," said Edwin R. Bayley, dean of journalism at Berkeley. "It is a manifestation of their discontent with the establishment."

"Journalism has more scope than anything," said Don Irwin, a 21-year-old journalism major at Wisconsin. "It's an ever-changing field."

Another very popular field is psychology, which leap-frogged ahead of government and English as the largest undergraduate major at Dartmouth this year, according to the college. The same thing is happening at the University of Michigan and at the University of Pennsylvania, where psychology enrollment has doubled from 1,300 students in 1968 to 2,600 in 1971.

Dr. Burton S. Rosner, the department chairman at Pennsylvania, offered an explanation.

"A lot of people are interested in psychology because they think it can help solve their own psychological problems," he said. "At the same time, psychology has become more intellectually rigorous, so that easy solutions are not plentiful. Those seriously interested in the nature of man now find that there is more to psychology than before. Finally, many want to go on to clinical work. They see this as a concrete way of dealing with social problems."

There appear to be shifts of student interest even within fields.

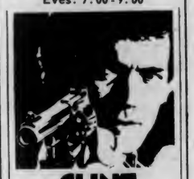
Hopkins Works At Amherst

An exhibition of landscape, interior, and still life paintings by Joan Hopkins will be on display at Amherst College.

Today through Wednesday, March 1, Miss Hopkins' work will be shown in the Ninevah Room of the Mead Art Building. Open to the public, viewing hours at the museum are from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Saturday, and from 11:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Sunday.



A painter of landscapes, interiors and still lifes even through the stylistic turmoil of the last decades, critics have terms the artist's sense of early especially strong. She is regarded as a splendid colorist who enjoys the material of paint; even her smallest pictures are said to provide delicate interplays of color and texture.

Since her first "One-Man" Exhibition in 1959, Miss Hopkins has shown throughout New England, from Rhode Island to Maine. She has received a number of awards, including the Florence Brevoort Prize at the Providence Art Club in 1969.

An experienced teacher, Miss Hopkins has also been art supervisor in Northfield, Mass., and has taught at UMass. She is married to Jack Coughlin, professor of art at the University.

Today (February 2, 1972) is the last day to register to vote in Amherst before the February 22nd Town Election. There will be a registration session in the Town Clerk's office in the Town Hall from 12 noon to 10 p.m. to accommodate those who wish to register.

Rightists Form Coalition

Representatives of a variety of rightist organizations met Monday evening, January 24, at the Holiday Inn in Meriden, Conn. to draft a platform for political action. The coalition plans to call itself the United White Peoples Campaign. In attendance were representatives of the United Klans of America, National States Rights Party, the Washington based National Youth Alliance, the Minutemen, Defense and Survival Force, DAWN and several others.

A tentative platform was prepared and moves are underway to contact other rightist groups in an effort to gain further cooperation. The meeting was hosted by the Connecticut National States Rights Party.

Live Off The Army

By GILBERT J. SALK

A while back, I wrote about finding ways to live less expensively. In continuing that theme, I'd like to mention some of the good points provided by our government. Many people don't know they exist, but Uncle Sam does provide some valuable services which we can utilize to our advantage, even if we are opposed to the basically exploitative nature of the institution.

For example, the Department of Defense, so-called, makes a habit of buying more than it can use, phasing out the still usable, and generally managing to create a huge quantity of surplus goods. I should point out that this surplus is not limited to things like guns, missiles, and aircraft carriers (although these items are sometimes available.)

DoD surplus includes clothing, cars and trucks, electrical equipment, tools, cameras, furniture, and more. Most of it is disposed of through closed bids. If you are interested in trying to obtain some of these goodies, all you need do is write and request a bidders' application. You will get a brief questionnaire and a long list of categories and georgraphical areas. Just check off the kinds of items you want, and the areas from which you want information, and you will be placed on a mailing list which will keep your mail box full of official-looking circulars from the Defense Dept. They will inform you of what surplus property is available, the original cost to you the taxpayer, where the property is located, and where to send your bid.

That's all there is to it. One cautionary note, though. You should be aware of the fact that you will have to get the stuff yourself if you should happen to be the low bidder, so don't bid on stuff located in Ogden, Utah. (Like stuffed sheep, for example.)

There's only one real problem with all this. I find myself getting really angry when I realize exactly how much shit gets wasted while people are starving to death. The Invitations to Bid do serve as a constant reminder that we live in a society built on garbage. But, if I can make some practical use out of someone else's garbage, it ain't garbage anymore, right? Give it a try.

Just write to Department of Defense Surplus Sales, P.O. Box 1870, Battle Creek, Mich. 49016. Ask for a bidders list application.

If you don't like dealing with the military, of if you just want another source of cheap goodies, you can deal with a civilian branch of government (if that's not a contradiction.) The General Services Administration gets rid of all the government junk which is not part of the Department of Defnese garbage heap. If it's possible to use it, you can be sure that the government has, or will have, a surplus of it, and the GSA is the folks to deal with to try to get it.

They have offices scattered around the country, each disposing of the wastes of government branches in its own territory. For New England surplus, write to the General Services Admin., Property Management and Disposal Service, Sales Branch, Personal Property Division, JFK Federal Bldg., Boston, Mass. 02203. (Use a large envelope--that's a big address.) Ask for a Surplus Personal Property Mailing List Application. If you're interested in surplus from other parts of the country, ask them for a list of other offices. They'll be happy to send one.

Good ol' Uncle is also in the book and pamphlet business. If you're interested in government publications on any subject (and, believe me, Uncle has stuff on everything) just drop a note to the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

If you don't have any specific interest areas, but would like to be kept informed about some of the literature that's currently available, write to the same address and request the free biweekly Selected U.S. Government Publications. It lists stuff from free to over $20.00 in a broad range of subjects. There's stuff on flower gardening, records of committee reports, complete Selective Service medical regulations, the Black Panthers and other subversive (sic) groups, and more.

It's a treasure chest of the delightful and the maddening. You can find desceiptions of items which show beyond a doubt the racist nature of our government, which prove that ecology is still a political concern only, which show the presuppositions and biases of banner committees. You don't even have to buy any books to be amused for hours (and bemused forever, perhaps.)

In all fairness, I should state that many of the publications are extremely useful, and usefully inexpensive. Not as good as the Canadian counterpart, perhaps, (the subject of a future column) but still helpful.

Some words on access, in the form of a book review.

I'm late, but I just got hold of The Last Whole Earth Catalog. It is overwhelming. For those of you who've never seen WEC, it's primarily a catalog of catalogs. It tells you where to find information about how to do what you've always wanted to do, or where to get the other tools you need to get done what you need to get done.

It's also stopped publishing, as of this last issue.

Which fact only serves to emphasize WEC's whole approach to the world. The back cover has a picture of our planet as viewed from space. The only other thing on the back page is the caption "We can't put it together. It is together." WEC started with a vow to only publish for 3 years, to keep from becoming a profitable business (their price went down during their brief history), to carry no advertising, and to operate with a debt to the consumer rather than to the manufacturer.

They found a huge hole and other magazines jumped to help fill it, but the Whole Earth Catalog is the daddy.

This last issue is huge. It carries much of the information which was in the earlier editions plus a bunch of new stuff. About 1/3 of the material was not in previous editions, in fact.

It is too much to review, really. All I can do is strongly urge all of you to find a copy and thumb though it. Even if you don't buy a copy, you'll wish that you could.

PEACE.

The Legislature Opens Again

On January 5th the Massachusetts Legislature opened for the 1972 session. The Legislature, or General Court, is composed of 240 representatives and 40 senators distributed throughout the Commonwealth. Members of this body are largely responsible for the type of legislation which becomes law in this state. For this reason it might benefit the UMass students to become familiar with the sort of bills being introduced at this session, and to let his senator or representative know his feelings on any bill in which he is interested. Legislators are always eager to hear from their constituents but this year is particularly important as many of the lawmakers are up for re-election. Student viewpoint has taken on a new importance too since the 18-year-old voting law went into effect.

Some of the up-coming legislative issues include birth control and abortion, the lowering of the drinking age to 18, a graduated income tax and prison reform bills. Hearings on these bills are coming up soon, for instance the drinking age hearing is on March 1. Students are encouraged to write their legislators and let them know your feelings-it can have an effect.

Among the many powers of the State Legislature, is its ability to set tuition rates for all State and Community Colleges, this includes UMass. Several bills dealing with a raise in the tuition rate are being heard on Wednesday, February 2, by the Education Committee. Both the UMass Student Senate and the University and State Communications Council (USCC) plan to speak at this hearing.

Any student wishing to obtain the name, address and telephone number of his representative and senator can do so in the USCC office, located on the bottom floor of the Campus Center in the RSO section or by calling 545-0217. Also, any student wishing to learn more about legislative processes or about lobbying procedure on upcoming bills is encouraged to contact the USCC office.

Abortion Aspects Presented

The Abortion Waiting Room, a multi-media presentation from Boston on the legal and illegal aspects of abortion, will be featured at UMass tomorrow in 905-909 Campus Center.

This program is designed by the Women's National Abortion Action Coalition and has recently been exhibited at many colleges in the Boston area. It consists of three films, shown continuously from 3:00 PM to a last showing at 8:00 PM, and also a display of contraceptives and abortion implements. In addition there will be a series of speakers from WONAAC, women who have either had an abortion or who have arranged one.

Everyone is both invited and urged to come up and view The Abortion Waiting Room. It is being presented at this time in order to inform people of WONAAC's National Convention which this year will be held at Boston University on February 11-13.

Is The Budget A Hoax?

WASHINGTON--President Richard Nixon, through a spokesman, said that the 1973 annual budget submitted to Congress was a forgery and he had nothing to do with it.

The book, which was purportedly authored by George Shultz of the Office of Management and Budget reveals in 1,103 pages the innermost secrets of the government's finances.

Shultz claimed this was the first time Mr. Nixon had authorized such a volume and McGraw-Hill and Life magazine had paid $362,000 for the rights to it.

The budget director said he met with Mr. Nixon secretly all over the country and had taped the President's fiscal revelations over a period of six months.

Lawyers for Mr. Nixon said that the President had never heard of Shultz, had never authorized him to put out a budget and had never received any checks from McGraw-Hill and Life for the book.

Spokesmen at both McGraw-Hill and Life said they have handwritten documents from President Nixon atesting to the fact that the 1973 fiscal budget was authorized by him, and they planned to go ahead with printing it, no matter what Mr. Nixon's representatives said.

"There are things in this budget," a spokesman for Life said, "that only Mr. Nixon would know. Every page of it was initialed 'RMN' and our handwriting experts insist that the writing corresponds to the President's."

Mr. Nixon's representatives say the whole thing is ridiculous. They insist that Mr. Nixon hasn't left Key Biscayne for six months and whomever Shultz talked to was not the President of the United States.

To further substantiate the charges that the budget was a forgery, Mr. Nixon's public relations people set up a telephone press conference call from the President's hide-out in Key Biscayne to seven reporters in Washington who had known Mr. Nixon personally.

Mr. Nixon in the press conference said, "This must go down in history as the greatest yarn of all time.

"Anyone who is familiar with me knows that I would never ask for a $25.5 billion deficit. I also would never, in my wildest dreams, predict a national debit of $493 billion, which is an increase of $37.4 billion over 1970."

The reporters who spoke to Mr. Nixon by phone all agreed it was his voice, and voiceprint tests verified that it was Mr. Nixon speaking.

But Shultz stuck to his story that this was indeed President Nixon's budget and said his only guess as why it was being denied now was that the President didn't want to be held responsible for it.

Adding to the mystery was the endorsements on the McGraw-Hill and Life checks for the rights to the story. The checks had been signed on the back R.M. Nixon and had been deposited in a Swiss bank.

The Swiss bank revealed that a blonde woman with a German accent had opened an account in the name of Rhoda Mildred Nixon.

She had deposited the checks and then had withdrawn the money two weeks later.

No one knows who the woman is. Shultz' wife is not a blonde nor does she speak with a German accent, but there are other people in the White House who do.

There are three theories making the rounds of Washington concerning the publication of the budget. Theory 1: The President agreed with George Shultz to write the budget message, but then his advisers got frightened and they decided to deny it. Theory 2: The budget is a hoax cooked up by the Democrats to defeat Mr. Nixon in 1972. Theory 3: Henry Kissinger made a secret trip to Geneva and bought a dress and a blonde wig at the Airport.

A Suggestion On Getting Out

WASHINGTON - We are prepared to believe that President Nixon wants to get out of Vietnam. He feels that he has made a generous offer in the terms of the secret negotiations with Hanoi which last week he revealed have been going on since 1969. The fact that at long last, almost in despair, he disclosed these negotiations indicates that there is small chance of their being accepted so long as Gen. Thieu remains president. In fact, we now know what we are fighting for; it is to preserve Gen. Thieu, though he must run the seemingly small risk of a new election.

The difficulty is that North Vietnam, we imagine, has not the slightest confidence in the proposed democratic process of holding an election despite all the bait Mr. Nixon has spread around Thieu's resignation one month ahead of time, participation by the Viet Cong and impartial supervision.

Yale political scientist Robert Dahl once observed that of 150 nominally independent countries in the world today, the people in only about two dozen regularly exercise the right to free elections. We can't force the system on other nations, he argues. Certainly South Vietnam hardly appreciates it in the farcical affair where Thieu ran by himself; an instance of "one man, one vote" if we ever saw it.

Furthermore, the North Vietnamese probably believe that they are winning; that time is on their side; that the Americans are interlopers. They have the perverse notion that it is their country and that we have no business being there.

Yet it would be wrong, we think, for Hanoi to misinterpret the Nixon speech. Some of our friends here hate the war so much that they want the lesson against imperialism driven home by the abject defeat of America. This is a luscious morsel of I- told- you- so and revenge to roll over the tongue, but we can't buy it.

We guess that Mr. Nixon's earnest, injured broadcast is going to mute some critics, and produce a substantial feeling of sympathy for a time at least. We think the leaders of North Vietnam should appreciate this. They will make a mistake not to explore this possible opening or to ignore the fact that many Americans who loathe the war are not prepared to see their country humiliated. For Americans it is a question now, we think, of getting out with the fewest scars possible so that we can get back to our own agonizing internal problems.

Historian C. Vann Woodward once argued that America's long unbroken string of victories had produced two myths, the myth of America's invincibility and of American innocence. Yet what a difference for most of us 10 years of war in Vietnam have made. As for our innocence there is My Lai. As to our invincibility, it is a strange thought, the most powerful nation on earth now almost pleading with a little third-rate country, which we have been blasting for 10 years, to please agree to a settlement! We want to depart, we want to end it, we want out. Give us our POW's for God's sake and let us go.

In perspective the war is the longest America has ever fought and one of the most important in some of its consequences. It forced Mr. Johnson out of office, and probably defeated Hubert Humphrey, and has bedeviled Mr. Nixon for three years. More important are subtler developments, widespread alienation of youth, a greater than normal distrust of politicians, a loss of faith in the very instruments of government, a malaise, a sourness, a feeling that the nation is in great trouble, a questioning of democracy itself.

A year ago a Gallup poll showed 73 percent of the public wanted troops out; there is not greater danger for the spirit then to go on fighting a war which the people think is wrong.

Blind Leading Blind

(Ed. Note: This is the third in a series about Teacher Evaluation.)

By NICH APOSTOLA

The Ad Hoc Committee on Teacher Evaluation wasn't completely a waste of time and effort; they did come out with one good recommendation. Recommendation number 6, in their series of 7 recommendations reads: "There should be established an Office for the Evaluation and Improvement of Teaching, reporting to the Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs, which would be responsible for the administration and interpretation of the Course Evaluation Questionnaire and for the development of services to help the faculty further develop their teaching skills."

It is astonishing how little training is required of College professors. More is required of a candidate for High School teaching, as far as teacher training is concerned, than is of a professor. It is even more shocking when you realize that high school and elementary school teachers receive their preparation in college. What you have, then, is a professorate that has had little formal teacher training itself, and no elementary or high school teacher training, going into schools of education to train primary and secondary teachers. It isn't quite the blind leading the blind, but rather a more miraculous medical process of the blind giving sight to others.

And so we finally have an attempt (which is the recommendation) to put within the faculty's reach, some type of formal teacher training that would not be as embarrassing as other ways. This Office of Teacher Improvement would be staffed with experts in teaching techniques, who could help a faculty member to improve his style and help his students stay awake.

Some of the methods are quite interesting. Video taping can be used. The faculty member would have one of his lectures taped, or he could be shown how to use the equipment, then he would sit down and look at it with a professional or by himself and try to analyze what he is doing right and what he is doing wrong. There is another scheme used called micro-teaching. The faculty member tries to teach one concept to about 5 or 6 students in a limited amount of time, usually 5-10 minutes. After he is done, the students tell him what he did right and wrong, thereby giving the instructor immediate feedback.

There are many other methods of helping the faculty to improve their teaching, but to aid the faculty in upgrading teaching is a long-range solution to a problem. It does nothing to help the students that are here and trapped by bad teaching. A bad teacher does more than just waste the students' time, he robs them of what could have been an exciting experience in learning. A student's time here is limited; he must have a method by which he can decide where he wants to spend that time and with whom.

The Administration would like an evaluation system around to evaluate that small portion of the University devoted to teaching. The faculty should have an evaluation system around so that they can start to learn how to teach. And the students need an evaluation system so that they can avoid the faculty members that waste their time.

Clear Light Destroys Rhetoric

To the Editor:

It was most unpleasant to read in our "free and responsible press' the ugly, red-baiting misrepresentations by Matt Tackeff on Angela Davis. Although I trust most have rejected it out-of-hand and at the risk of over-reaction I feel that some sort of response should be made. Miss Davis, Tackeff writes, is a "symbolic victim of racism, sexism, and fascism" around who American radicals rally in desperate search for support in this "characteristically" issueless year. What, I ask, is "symbolic" in being subjected to an F.B.I. manhunt (before indictment or charge), incarcerated in solitary and denied bail for over a year, and facing trial largely, as the Collegian notes on another page, for her "political ties with the Soledad Brothers Defense Committee." Miss Davis is an accused Black woman and a Communist in the hands of Ronald Reagan's judicial system. And that, in my opinion, is not a "symbolic" bind to be in.

Tackeff brings up some other points whose relevance is not immediately apparent. Herbert Aptheker is a Communist, but when he lectures on behalf of Miss Davis or on W.E.B. DuBois, he is introduced as their friend. A plot? No, he is and was. Does he claim not to be a Communist? No. DuBois, we are told, apologized for Stalin in the '40s. He didn't, so far as I know, although he became a Communist a few years later. DuBois, dead now for nearly a decade, is accused of not having a "widespread following" even though "he was one of the most erudite scholars this country ever had." Do scholars have "followings"? What does it mean if one doesn't? In the case of DuBois, of course, Tackeff is wrong. Do more than 200,000 votes for United States Senator while under indictment as a criminal in 1950 constitute a following? What of the "vast silence" that fell over the largest demonstration in Washington's history (the 1963 March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom) when DuBois' death was announced?

The point of all this misinformation dredged up by Tackeff is clear, if illogical and a little sick. It is that the leaders of the agitation to free Miss Davis are Communists. In this fact (which is not really a fact because large numbers of civil rights leaders and other more "respectable" citizens are involved) our editorialist finds "the true nature of the cause." Communists, we are told are "professional apologists for totalitarianism" and their desire to free her is merely "posturing". Better that she be convicted and killed than to "restore some of the shattered credibility" of the Communist Party. The issue becomes then, not the manifest abuse of Miss Davis' person and rights (leaving aside here the question of her guilt or innocence), but that of associating with a cause taken up by the Communist Party of America. It's enough to know what the Communists are for, according to Tackeff, for "right-thinking" Americans to be against it. I suppose in his issueless world that is a logical position. Hopefully a majority of Collegian readers are more concerned with issues than with labels. Miss Davis' too long extended detention, the location and conduct of her trial are not "symbolic" issues but real ones. Her cause deserves the concerned attention of a student community freed of the catch phrases and lock-steps of the witch-hunting '40s and '50s.

It's Curious That...

To the Editor:

When I went to sign up for a five-college course this semester, I discovered that all the other participating colleges in the community award 4 credits per course rather than the 3 credits system used at UMass. I cannot see why the University doesn't change over to the same system, for it would facilitate the interchange between schools, awarding an equal number of credits per course. I find it curious that UMass Boston is on a 4-credit basis, and the total number of credits are transferable to Amherst. It seems odd that the two campuses should subscribe to different policies since they are both state schools.

I believe that the most significant advantage of the 4-credit system would be the concentration in limited areas, learning four subjects in depth rather than cramming five courses into a semester's work--eliminating the common and harried chore of looking for a "gut" course to alleviate the work load demanded by the broad survey courses the University offers. In most cases these courses require a quantity of work--not quality, and students lose interest in the field of study. Pre-requisites in many courses are a waste of time, but necessary to have on record to enable students to take upper-level courses.

I am not familiar with the financial implications the changeover to a 4-credit system would produce, but I would be interested in finding out the facts and opinions of students, faculty, and administration on this issue. Is the University currently considering this change in policy and if not, why?

To the Editor:

For the last two months, once and sometimes twice a week, in the evenings for 2 - 6 hours, 15 students have been meeting (NONE TOO SECRETLY) in a conference room in "our" Campus Center to try and organize a feasible, acceptable, and decent Spring Concert. In a meeting of two hours the Administration managed to thwart all of their efforts.

We had a budget, a 3 group plan to draw from 15-20,000 people, and a Security proposal to coordinate student marshals, campus police, and an auxiliary contingent. Yes, in those months of hard work, looking at facts, circumstances, atmospheric conditions, and obtaining feedback from the administration on key issues, we thought we'd been rather thorough. But, as we were continually reminded this morning (1 Feb.), we were being "unrealistic" and showed our "lack of experience". For all the painstaking considerations, we forgot to arrange one thing: Approval.

So now we walk sullenly back to our corners; obedient children, all.

Is it going to end there? All over?

For Elliott, Joe, Gary, John, Lee, Cindy, and the rest of us it won't end here. But one of the illuminated drawbacks to our labors was that there wasn't enough student communion. If you want a good concert, people, then we have to work together for it.

Granted, you won't have too many organizing, but some more people who are dependable could be used to do some leg work and investigation. And what would be wrong with a committee at large of a few thousand to yell when they don't like what's being done? The meetings are open to all and advertised in the Collegian.

The thing that hurts is that this will make no difference to anyone other than the few administrators that I've pissed-off. Sad.

Enjoy your life at UMass, people: Such as it is.

A Delicate Balance

To the Editor:

If your response was similar to mine, it was not without a certain degree of satisfaction that you watched the events unfold that ultimately led to the creation of an independent Bangladesh. But in approving Mrs. Gandhi's handling of the Bangladesh situation, I wonder if we did not overlook a larger and far more vital question regarding the place of war in a civilized society. Does a nation have a responsibility to explore all existing means of resolving a conflict by peaceful means before resorting to war? If so, and all such means are exhausted, is war then justified, or should efforts be made to seek new alternatives? What is the responsibility of uninvolved nations? Do they too have a commitment to seek a peaceful resolution of the conflict?

If we are truly dedicated to a world without war, it is imperative that the importance of these questions be recognized. This is especially so in this day of the bomb when the answers provided may mean our very survival.

Though there can be little argument that India had cause to take up arms against Pakistan, I don't think our responses would have been quite as positive had the superpowers become involved in nuclear war.

Give Greeks A Chance

To the Editor:

The small turnout for Sunday's Sorority Round Robin's has prompted me to make this appeal. Many days of work went into making this Round Robin a success. The sorority system is doing its best to reveal itself and what it offers to all University women. Granted there are many, many people on campus that sorority life would not appeal to but how many of these people come out to see what it is all about? Many of these people condemn it but do not give it a fighting chance. I do not intend to plug sororities, yet I could say a lot about how happy I am being a sister and a part of the Greek system. Being a Greek does not just mean being active socially. Service projects are very numerous and very successful. You are helping others as you gain insight to your own life and times. Many people may get the same satisfaction out of dorm life and we should respect each other's decisions. All I ask is that if you have any questions at all about sorority life don't ask a friend down the hall, come and see for yourself. Houses are starting rush parties in the beginning of February. Don't think visiting a house puts you under any obligation. If you're interested visit again and try a few more houses. Parties are open to all University women. If you honestly don't think it is for you you haven't lost anything, you may have even found some new friends.

Believe all the things you have heard? That's someone elses opinion. Doesn't yours count? To you who have come down on the Greeks; if you have honestly given us a chance, fine, it's not for you, but let others find out for themselves. They may find it is just what they were looking for. If you haven't given us a chance, if you just believe what you want to hear, you aren't being fair to us or yourselves. If you plainly not interested that's your perogative but don't go putting us down blindly.

All you need is yourself. Come visit any number of houses in the next few weeks. This way at least the conclusion you reach is your own. Come visit and I think you will find it rewarding. The point is; think for yourself. Be an individual. Give us a chance before you make any decision. Give Greeks a chance.

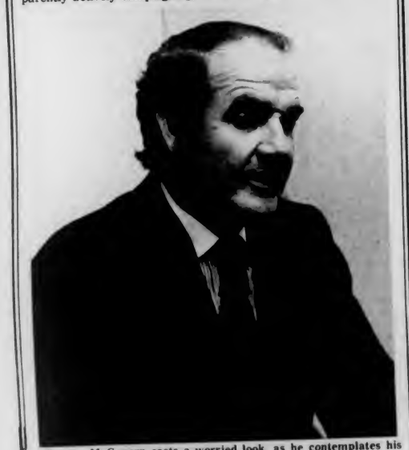
Government Validates Paulsen's Candidacy

WASHINGTON (AP)-Comedian Pat Paulsen is an honest-to-goodness candidate for the presidency, says the Federal Communications Commission.



The FCC announced Monday that it considers Paulsen a bona fide candidate for the Republican presidential nomination because he has entered the New Hampshire primary.

Walt Disney Productions Inc. asked for an FCC ruling because Paulsen is scheduled to appear in an episode of a new Disney television sereis called "The Mouse Factory."

The Disney firm wondered whether the FCC's equal time rule would apply to Paulsen and his tongue-in-cheek candidacy, thus obligating stations airing the show to provide equal time to other presidential candidates.

The FCC said the regulation would apply and that stations would be obligated to provide equal to candidates demanding it.

Paulsen should be considered a national candidate because he "has qualified to be on the ballot in New Hampshire and is apparently actively campaigning," the FCC said.

George McGovern casts a worried look, as he contemplates his selection rivals. He knows with Paulsen in, it might even go the House! (Photo by Barbara Brecher)

No Ones Perfect

The student yearbook of UMass came within two percentage points of a perfect score in the juding of 1971 college yearbooks by the National School Yearbook Association (NSYA) of Memphis, Tenn.

According to the "Honor Award" rating received this week from the national rating service, the 1971 "Index" of UMass accumulated 108 of a possible 110 points in the judging. The yearbook was edited by Thomas D. Leavitt of South Deerfield, Mass.

The 1971 edition was the 102nd produced at the Amherst campus. The "Index", which is among the top three college yearbooks produced in the United States, has a press run of 13,500.

NSYA grades more than 1,000 publications a year. The service group was founded 21 years ago in Houston, Texas, by N.S. Patterson who still guides a staff of 25 judges who are professionals in the yearbook field.

"Just Keeping Them Under Control"

NEW YORK (LNS)–Thousands of hyperactive children–kids who can't sit still and "learn"–in elementary schools all over the country are being doped up to enable teachers and administrators to keep order in their schools.

Scientists have discovered that "Ritalyn", stimulant used in the 50s for depressed old people, has the opposite effect on children who have not reached puberty.

Faced with the natural bored response to overcrowding, irrelevant school work, and poor homes, teachers and administrators are prescribing Ritalyn. Pressure is then put on parents who have no place to send their kids other than public school to let the kids "take the pill or stay out of school".

A dose of Ritalyn every four hours blocks out real feelings of fatigue, hunger, nervousness, and discomfort and enables the child to concentrate on schoolwork. Dr. David Martin, a California doctor who has prescribed Ritalyn for over 2,000 students was pretty straightforward:

"Now I want you to understand we aren't curing these kids; we're just keeping them under control. Usually we'll start your three or four year old with five milligrams a day, then up it to 15 milligrams a day by the time they are eight or nine. We can go as high as 100 to 140 milligrams a day if we have to, and that's a pretty big slug for a little kid. Of course we have to be careful of an overdose–too much medication makes them a vegetable."

But how much is "too much"? A study made at Los Angeles County University found that "long-term use of amphetamines (Ritalyn is an amphetamine) produces a toxic reaction which damages the lining of small and medium sized arteries."

There have been reports of artery damage, children going into shock or being seized by dizziness on taking their first pill and changes in sugar metabolism. And if Ritalyn proves to be as addictive as other amphetamines, there will soon be an army of junkies in the public schools, dependent on the school system for their next fix.

But don't let that upset you because as one "education expert", Careth Ellingson, warned, "It would be a disaster if a fearful and uninformed public response (to the use of Ritalyn for Children) were to sweep away the only chance that a great many children have to function normally (sic) in the classroom."

One reporter seemed to disagree on whether there was too much undeserved paranoia: "One doctor has used a check list which defines 'deviancy' as doing anything disapproved by the teacher; it lists as abnormal behavior a child's dismantling his ballpoint pen, propping up his desk with a pencil or stopping on the way back from the pencil sharpener to talk with someone or to look at things on a teacher's desk."

CIBA Pharmeceuticals, the Summit, New Jersey company that manufactures Ritalyn (and makes $13 million a year profit from it) has started a large advertising campaign to convince educators that the drug will eliminate "problem children". These advertisements say things like:

"Today there is a growing recognition that the hyperactive 'problem child' may indeed have a medical problem. Minimal Brain Disfunction (MBD) is meant to refer to children of near or above average intelligence with certain learning or behavioral disabilities ranging from mild to severe, which are associated with deviations of function of the central nervous system.

The typical MBD child seems in perpetual motion. In constant, purposeless activity. He's aggressive, destructive. Easily frustrated. Can't concentrate. He's bright, yet does poorly in school. His behavior makes him nearly unbearable to parents, teachers, playmates.

"What's wrong with a child like this who may exhibit all or some of these symptoms in varying degrees of severity? His behavioral problems may be manifestations of MBD. If so, he is not alone. By one estimate this disorder affects 5% or more of our child population."

Five per cent of the child population? There are 38,498,000 people under 13 years of age in the U.S. today, so about seven million children may be in "need" of Ritalyn.

At the present time, Ritalyn is being used most heavily on poor children in New York, Michigan, and California. But tranquilizing school children is being considered, if not actually in effect, in most states in the country, according to the House subcommittee hearings held in September, 1970.

In Omaha, Nebraska, in June 1970, 5-10% of all elementary school children were on the drug.

The National Welfare Right Organization (NWRO), so far the only organization to come out strongly against the use of the drug, says that "there is no justification for presuming the drug is safe to use on children." In July, 1971, they filed a suit with the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) demanding that the label, package insert and advertising of Ritalyn be altered to reflect the widespread opinion that it is hazardous and that the FDA ruling that Ritalyn is safe be revoked until it is proven safe.

As NWRO says, "This society finds drugging children easier than dealing effectively with the problems of poverty."

Airport Arrests Up; But Not For Hijacking

NEW YORK (LNS)–Nearly a third of the roughly 2,000 air passengers arrested by deputy U.S. marshals in the federal government's anti-hijacking program last year were busted for drugs. Most of the rest were picked up on charges also unrelated to hijacking.

This is a breakdown of the figures: The Justice Department reported that from January 1st to December 15 last year, its sky-riders made 1,926 arrests, 538 of them for narcotics violations. Only 205 were for concealed firearms and 133 for carrying concealed knives. The Treasury Department's Customs Bureau anti-hijacking team made about 400 arrests during the same period, but refuses to provide a breakdown.

Federal officials point to this record as evidence that the airport security system is doing something. But they admit that its stated purpose of stopping hijackers is as far from being achieved as ever. Nonetheless, the investigative tactics they employ may set a valuable precedent for police forces throughout the country to violate two basis rights–freedom to travel and freedom from unreasonable search.

According to an article in the Feb. 3 issue of Rolling Stone Magazine, the vast majority of the arrests are made at the boarding gates, where a ground security system has been instituted that has two main components–a so-called "behavior profile" of a typical hijacker and a metal-detecting "magnetometer". The Customs Bureau claims that more than 35,000 weapons–guns, knives, ice picks and the like–were taken from passengers in the first year of the program.

The FAA Customs and the airlines have developed a one-two-three model of how the security system is supposed to work. It begins with warning signs at the ticket counter or boarding gate, stating that the passengers and baggage are subject to search. When the passenger checks in, the ticket agent makes a code mark on the bottom of the ticket stub noting whether or not the traveler fits the behavior profile. (The profile was developed by an FAA psychologist and has been kept a secret, even from most marshals. It is presumably made up of such features as "nervous sweating" and "trembling hands" as well as more subtle criteria. There is also reportedly an "ethnic feature"–probably a euphemism for giving extra security to non-whites.)

On the way to the plane, the passenger passes through a magnetometer, which comes in two forms–two six-foot poles about a yard apart from each other, or an aluminum door frame attached to the gate. A passenger is supposed to be frisked for weapons only if he has both fit the profile and activated the magnetometer.

"It all sounds very scientific and neat," says William Leibowitz, a Manhattan lawyer, "but it doesn't work that way." Leibowitz says that in a Kennedy Airport case he is handling no signs were posted, and "the officials, without claiming that my client set off any magnetometer at all, simply forced him to open his baggage. He happened to have long hair. They searched him without any adherence at all to their own set of rules." Leibowitz's client was charged with possession of drugs, and the case is still in the courts.

In any case, airline ticket agents concerned mainly with getting passengers on board quickly are too busy to be able to judge each passenger carefully according to the behavior profile. According to Hugh Vandervoort, a 27- year-old former sky marshal, what usually happens is that "the ticket agent couldn't care less, but if this guy (the passenger) is gonna distinguish himself in one way or another–he might pee in his pants, or whatever– the sky marshal will take it from there. The marshal might backtrack later and say he fits the behavior profile."

The federal government insists that the behavior profile is a scientific test–but criminologists have discarded long ago the idea that there is any such thing as a "criminal type". As a United Airlines stewardess says, "It's the kids who look freaky who are going to be searched." And ex-agent Vandervoort reports: "They do a lot by the way you look."

If an airport cop doesn't like the way you look, he can turn the sensitivity of the magnetometer all the way up so that it registers with even a minute amount of metal on your body–a woman in London tripped the detector with her IUD.

Theoretically, a passenger can refuse to be searched if he or she declines to board the airplane–but it rarely happens that way. Terry Bertels, a medical student, was leaving Kennedy for Rome when his keys activated the magnetometer. Bertele says an agent told him, "You don't mind if I search, huh? We do this for everyone.' I suppose I could have refused, but he certainly didn't give me a chance. He did not make it a question. It's the way the troopers stop you and search your car on the New Jersey Turnpike if you have long hair."

The Constitution is supposed to protect people from unreasonable searches. In most places, only if the police have a warrant, voluntary consent, or "probably cause for arrest," is it legal for them to carry out a search. But it is clear from several cases that the new air security system bends so far as the sky police want it to, and in many cases simply serves as an excuse to search hippies for drugs.

"You're giving air marshals the power to decide for themselves when to stop people and search them," warns lawyer Irving Cohen, who represented a guy in his 20s who had been busted for two ounces of grass after an airport search. "I don't think they're entitled to that much power. The Fourth Amendment requires probable cause, so the argument that less than probable cause is OK doesn't conform...at some point, it could be extended to where a policeman can just stop anybody on the street and they'll tell you, 'If you're innocent you've got nothing to worry about."

The government is no doubt pleased to see a precedent set for arbitrary police powers at the airports, and more generally, in white middle class environments as a whole. The last 20 years have seen a growth in white people's awareness that such power is exercised routinely in black and brown ghettos throughout the United States and there have been some legal battles challenging that power, on paper at least. But recent government policy has moved in only one direction: towards greater repression and a more effective repressive apparatus, giving official authorization for new methods one by one so that white middle class doesn't notice what's happening.

If anyone thinks the airport security system really has much to do with stopping hijackers, it pays to take a closer look.

The anti-hijacking program was launched by President Nixon after the hijacking and destruction of four jetliners by Palestinian guerrillas in the fall of 1970. "The menace of air piracy must be met–immediately and effectively," said Nixon. There are now 1,500 sky marshals riding the planes, and on the ground, inspecting baggage and passengers at the airports along with 230 deputy US marshals from the Justice Department.

"Let it be understood by everyone," proclaimed Spiro Agnew, "that thanks to the President there are now guards riding U.S. aircraft. These guards are under instruction to shoot to kill."

According to ex-sky rider Vandervoort, the training received by the $12,000-a-year guards is inadequate in every area. "I left," he says, "because I had the general impression it was a menace not only to my health but to anyone who rides in aircraft with marshals."

Another former marshal, Theodore Braiterman, says there are a lot of "pretty heavy boozers" among the ranks. "I'm 99% sure some sky marshal is going to blow his cool," Vandervoort predicts, "and there's going to be problems--maybe just depressurization or the whole plane going down in flames–but something will happen ..."

To date, there has been only one hijacking with sky marshals aboard. That occurred last October, when an American Airlines 747 flying from New York to Puerto Rico with three air marshals and an FBI agent was hijacked to Cuba by a man who threatened to shoot the stewardess. Federal officials were embarrassed over stories that the agents were unaware the hijacking was taking place–they deny the stories–and by the report that the hijacker had actually stuck a ballpoint pen, not a gun, in the stewardess's back.

But if the agents were aware of the hijacking, it seems they chose the wisest course–it's hard to imagine what other action would have ensured the safety of the passengers and crew and the safe return of the plane–which leads to the question whether the $55 million spent on the anti-hijacking program last year could have prevented any determined hijacker from carrying out a reasonably cautious plan.

The entire anti-hijacking system has already come to court, in a trial presided over by Judge Jack Weinstein in Brooklyn. It was a case in which heroin was found in the pocket of someone who fit the profile–his name, Lopez, fit the "ethnic feature"–and then set off the magnetometer. His lawyer decided to challenge the constitutionality of the search, without success. There is not much chance that the Supreme Court with its four Nixon appointees would see things different.

(This story is a revised and abridged version of a story by Peter Freiberg, a reporter on the staff of the New York Post, who put it together for Rolling Stone.)

Workers Strike In Texas

CRYSTAL CITY, Tex. (LNS)——One hundred and eighty Farmworkers, mostly Chicanos, many of them in their sixties and seventies, went on strike January 21 against Wagner's Farm, one of the biggest farms near Crystal City, a town 120 miles from San Antonio.

The strike started that Friday when some of the workers who pick out the yellow spinach from the green spinach after it is brought from the fields took a look at their paychecks. They had been promised $1.60 an hour (which is under the minimum wage) and, instead, had received $1.30. The people in the fields who pick the spinach had been promised 40¢ per bushel but instead were given only 20¢ per bushel.

"About 50% of the people in Crystal City don't have jobs," said Maria Luisa Alonzo who just got out of high school and started working in the spinach fields.

Orchard Hill Offers Extension Program

Beginning this semester, Orchard Hill Residential College at UMass will open an Extension Center, serving the needs of those students and University employees employed in activities of a social reform nature. The primary tasks of this center will be to develop relationships between ongoing, isolated projects, and to encourage increased participation in these programs by means of such things as newsletters and other communications materials.

Although plans call for several other "outreach" programs, including a student job pool, there are currently three projects making use of the Extension Center. Temporarily housed in the Webster House preceptor's office are: the Student-Labor Relations Project, Consumer Services, and the OH Women's Center.

The student labor relations project is an attempt to combine the knowledge gathered by living and working with that gathered in the classroom. Unless working people and students learn to learn together, they will never learn to live together, according to the organizers. All programs generated by this project will be open to O.H. students and University non-professional employees through their unions, taxpayers of the state who have been all but shut out of the cultural life of the University.

This semester's plans call for:

—A three-credit course on consumer survival skills.

—Six one-credit colloquia dealing with current issues vital to both working people and students. They are: Television and Society, Women in the Economy/Women in the Political System, 'Coping'-law for the Layman, Student-Labor Relations and Economic Problems of the Black Community.

—Two lecture series: One on Racism and one on Economy and the Wage Earner.

—Special events including conferences, workshops, films, etc.

Consumer Services is designed to serve consumers in an increasingly bewildering maze of false and deceptive advertising, unfair pricing, insurance hoaxes, and inferior, dangerous products for many of which there is no real need. Besides two sections of consumer survival skills, the service will include the following:

—Consumer oriented reference library

—Establishment of relations with the Western Mass. Public Interest Research Group

—Hot-line for consumer problems of students and members of the surrounding communities.

—Guest speakers and lecturers

—Programs for community groups in Northampton, Holyoke, etc. dealing with consumer-related problems of the aged, the unemployed, etc.

ORCHARD HILL–Stepping in the right direction?

Bromery Announces New Career Training

A new program for job training for the unemployed and underemployed will begin soon at UMass according to acting UMass Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery..

In the initial phase of the program which is called New Career Training, the 10 unemployed applicants will take two years of on-the-job training and job-oriented education. Ten unemployed persons presently working at UMass, but without sufficient skills to move upward in their areas of employment, will be given typing and stenography classes.

The New Career Training division of the Springfield Action Commission, Inc. (SAC) will administer the program. Federal funds–100% the first year and 50% the second year–will come through the New Careers Program which was authorized by Congress in 1966. UMass will contribute the additional 50% of funds during the second year of the program.

The UMass Division of Continuing Education will develop adequate training programs for the underemployed, and the University will guarantee the 10 accepted unemployed persons (careerists) paraprofessional jobs after successful completion of their two-year training program.

Lectures To Reflect French Literature

The first in a series of French department lectures will be given tonight at 8:00 in Herter 231. Professor Micheline Dufau, Chairman of the Department of French and Italian, will speak in French on the image of the Middle Ages as reflected in French literature.

The lecture series itself is an experiment being tried by the department in response to student suggestions from last semester. On alternate Wednesday evenings, beginning this week members of the department will speak on the ways in which the political, social, and cultural life of various periods in French history is reflected in the literature of that time. The lectures are intended as an option enrichment for the survey course in Masterworks of French Literature (French 171-172), but they are open to the general public.

On February 16, Professor Aline Allard will speak about the Remaissance in France, and on March 1 Professor Christian Garaud will speak about the seventeenth-century "classical" period.

Make Great Decisions With WFCR

Persons listening to radio WFCR (88.5FM) at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday nights between Feb. 2 and March 22 will hear eight public discussions of subjects ranging from U.S.-China policy to solutions to population problems, as the UMass presents another Great Decisions program.

Each of the eight sessions, sponsored by Apple Corps, a student group from the Orchard Hill residence complex, will be in the Noah Webster House Lounge, with a live audience.

Great Decisions is a public opinion-program of the Foreign Policy Association, a national, nonpartisan, non-profit organization founded in 1918 to inform the public of international efforts.

Questions will be welcomed from the live audience which is urged to obtain copies of "Great Decisions 1972," study material for the sessions, from the Noah Webster House library weekday evenings or by phoning Assoc. Professor Luther Allen, series moderator, at 549-1782. The study material is $2. Professors from the Five-College are (Smith, Mount Holyoke, Amherst, and Hampshire College, and the University) will be panelists for the eight forums.

Dates and topics:

Feb. 2–"Vietnam and After: What Lessons Have We Learned?"; moderator: Gerard Braunthal, political science, UMass; panelists: Luther A. Allen, political science, UMass; Joel M. Halpern, anthropology, UMass; and Richard H. Minear, history, UMass.

Feb. 9–"Japan, The Common Market and The U.S.: Is a Trade War Brewing?"; moderator: Luther A. Allen, political science, UMass; panelists: Peter DiChico, president District 2, International Union of Electrical Workers; Bertil Liander, School of Business Administration, UMass; and Thomas A. Sears, economics, UMass.

Feb. 16–"The Soviet Union and The U.S.: Toward Negotiation or Confrontation?"; moderator: Luther A. Allen, UMass; panelists: Robert H. McNeal, history, UMass; Karl W. Ryavec, political science, UMass; William C. Taubman, political science, UMass.

Feb. 23–"Chile's Marxist Experiment: What Does It Mean for the Americas?"; moderator: Luther A. Allen, UMass; panelists: Michael H. Best, economics, UMass; Eliance Ortega, graduate student, Mt. Holyoke; and Harvey Kline, political science, UMass.

March 1–"Our China Policy: How Far and How Deep the Thaw?"

March 8–"Poor Nations and Rich Nations: Can the Gap be Narrowed?"

March 15–"Guns and/or Butter: What Price National Security?"

March 22–"Our Crowded World: What Solutions to Population Problems?"

Panelists for the last four programs will be announced.

Faculty Will Play In Bowker

Five faculty members of the UMass music department will perform the works of five composers Wednesday, Feb. 9, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium on the UMass campus.

One of the composers whose work will be heard, Philip T. Bezanson, is head of the UMass music department. The work is "The Word of Love."

Jon Humphrey, tenor, and Fernande Kaeser, pianist, will be assisted by Joseph Contino on clarinet, Carl Daehler on horn, and Peter Tanner on percussion.

Jon Humphrey, an assistant professor, has performed with such groups as the Robert Shaw Chorale, the New York Pro Musica, the Cleveland and Philadelphia Orchestras, and UMass recital groups.

Fernande Kaeser began her musical studies at age 7 at the Institute de Ribaupierre of Vevey and gave her first concerts when she was 10. An assistant professor at UMass, she is the only Swiss-born pianist to ever be awarded first prize at the International Music Competition of Munich.

Joseph Contino, as associate professor, teaches clarinet, flute, and saxophone; and coaches the UMass Youth Orchestra. Carl Daehler, assistant director of UMass bands, is an instructor of applied horn. Peter Tanner, an assistant professor, has played with the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra and the United States Marine Band.

The concert, part of The Faculty Recital Series, is free to the public.

Surgeons Caution No-Bra Look

CHICAGO (AP) — The no-bra look has its delights, both for men and women, but two surgeons caution that today's pleasure may turn into tomorrow's sorrow.

While there's no known medical harm from the current fad, the doctors say, it hastens the day when a bra becomes a necessity.

Writing in the Jan. 31 issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association, they point out that the ligaments which hold the breasts erect stretch without the support of a brassiere.

This causes the breasts to sag, and once the ligaments are stretched they cannot be restored to their original tautness except by surgery.

The doctors wrote in response to a suggestion from a physician that the American Medical Association warn women that "the lack of mammary support may lead to the development of pendulous breasts."

Dr. John H. Wulsin of the University of Cincinnati College of Medicine wrote that the fibrous attachments which support the breast stretch "under the influence of gravity, more so in some women than others and especially in those breasts naturally large or fat or pregnant or lactating."

"Once lengthened by tension these fibrous connections...do not resume youthful dimensions, and despite hopeful legend, no amount of exercise will restore pristine mammary profile," he added.

"However," he said, "exercise may, by improving posture and the thickness of the underlying pectoral muscle, push forward and thereby embellish breast contour, sagging or otherwise."

"Proper support for the breasts in the form of a satisfactory brassiere can be expected to minimize stretching of the intrinsic mammary connective tissue," Wulsin said.

Dr. Milton T. Edgerton of the University of Virginia Medical Center, Charlottesville, pointed out that the sagging which results from not wearing a brassiere has been apparent in numerous cultures.

He said, "The only real objection to allowing the breasts to become pendulous is an aesthetic one."

Chicago 7 On Film

"THE CHICAGO CONSPIRACY TRIAL" is a film based on transcripts of the Chicago 7 trial. See it at Mead Auditorium, Amherst College tomorrow. This film about the Chicago 7 is sponsored by the Hampshire County Chapter of the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts. There's no admission charge, but contributions are requested.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

For me, a sense of humor is perhaps the greatest asset one can possess. And I have found that individuals born under Gemini have that commodity often in abundance. Natives of this zodiacal sign are able to laugh at themselves. This is proved during my lectures when, with a straight face, I announce that, "More persons born under Gemini are in jail than any other zodiacal sign." If any Gemini natives are present, they invariably laugh the loudest.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Pets and people who rely on you demand more attention. Key is to seek harmony without spreading yourself too thin. Stick close to home base. Avoid extremes. Taurus and Libra persons figure prominently.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Bring forth creative resources. Be ready for change of scenery. Children are very much in picture. Find more time for pleasure, recreation. Leave minor details to others. Need is for self expression.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You get facts, results. In personal area, you find where you stand with member of opposite sex. If single, marriage question arises. If married, additional responsibility is indicated.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You move about, develop ideas and complete transactions. More persons become aware of your presence. Aries individual can aid. Stop carrying burden which is not rightly your own. You have right to happiness.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Money position is brighter. What appeared a mere lax shelter could show signs of life. Welcome contacts, changes and challenges. Take inventory. Protect valuables including your reputation.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Person magnetism is on rise; you receive meaningful compliments. Respond in positive manner. No kicking of toe in ground. Be confident. Take steps forward. Go places, meet and greet people.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Work behind scenes. You can be power that pulls strings. Find right direction. Stop moving in aimless circles. Laugh at past foibles. Get ready now for successful assault on future.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Some of your hopes, wishes are fulfilled. What has been a restricting force is removed. Discipline is a necessity, but it must be of the self variety. Find out what you need. Then you will receive it.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Prestige is on line. Show that you can move with times. Verbal barrage may come from one who is envious, frustrated. Take it in stride. Professional plans to make room for you at top.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Philosophical concepts are emphasized. You begin now to hear sound of your own voice. Key is to take yourself seriously. Means shove off any hint of inferiority. You are worthy. Know it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be concerned with actual values, not surface indications. Creative processes are at work. Don't block them. Give yourself a chance to grow. Pisces person can play important role. Money question will be settled.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Co-operate with one born under Aquarius. Legal maneuver is in picture. Stick with one who has experience. Eschew sensational methods. Steady pace gets you to goal. Know this and act accordingly.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are sensitive, able to perceive moods of others. Recent times have not been too happy, but this will change. And change will be beneficial. If single, you could marry. If married, there could be an addition to family. There will, in upcoming months, be new vital opportunities for success.

Pats Land Dryer; Draft Reynolds First

By HARRY EISENBERG
Associated Press Writer

The rebuilding New England Patriots, seeking to improve an unintimidating pass rush, Tuesday acquired defensive end Fred Dryer from the New York Giants for their No. 1 and No. 6 draft choices this year and their second round pick in 1973.

The trade was announced by Patriots' General Manager Upton Bell minutes before the opening of the National Football League's annual selection of collegiate players.

"We wanted a boy who could come in and contribute right away," said New England Coach John Mazur, "and we feel Fred Dryer will do that."

In the second round New England drafted wide receiver Tom Reynolds of San Diego State, the country's leading pass catcher last year.

The Patriots, who tied for the second worst pass rush record in the American Football Conference last season, were scheduled to pick 17th in the first-round, a selection they acquired from the Los Angeles Rams for Phil Olsen. Their own pick went to the Minnesota Vikings as compensation for Joe Kapp.

"We weren't sure what we would get picking 17th," Bell said. "This young guy Dryer give us another legitimate pass rusher to go along with Julius Adams. I think he gives us the pass rush we need."

The 25-year-old Dryer, 6-foot-6 and about 230 pounds, is also from San Diego State. He was the Giants' No. 1 draft pick in 1969, but this year expressed a desire to be traded.

Mazur said he hopes to team him at end with Adams, who played tackle as a rookie last season.

"Then we can let the two of them loose to chase the passer around," he said.

Dryer played out his option last year with the Giants. "I'm not very emotional about being traded," he said in a telephone interview from his San Diego home. "I knew I was going, it was just a question of to whom."

He said he played out his option because "it seems that I wanted to win and the Giants didn't like my way of going about it...I want to go to the Super Bowl...I don't want to look back on a long career as time spent just playing football and not going anywhere. The name of the game is winning."

Reynolds, 6-2-1/2 and 195 pounds, led the country with 67 receptions last season, scoring seven touchdowns and averaged 16 yards a catch.

"He is a real pass receiver," said Bucko Kilroy, the Patriots' director of player personnel.

"He's got great hands, quick feet and runs good patterns. He's been timed in 4.65 in the 40."

Kilroy said Reynolds was rated by the Patriots only behind Oregon's Bobby Moore among all the available receivers in the country. Moore was drafted fourth in the first round by St. Louis.

Reynolds said in a telephone interview that he was looking forward to teaming up with Patriots quarterback Jim Plunkett.

"Jim Plunkett is a young quarterback who likes to throw a lot," he said. "I like to catch 'em."

Patulski Goes First Wants Big Pact

NEW YORK (AP)-Walt Patulski, the huge Notre Dame defensive end, was tapped by the Buffalo Bills as the No. 1 selection in the National League draft Tuesday and immediately opened his campaign for a contract similar to the $300,000 pact the club gave O. J. Simpson.

Asked after his selection what he was looking for in the way of a contract, the 6-foot-6, 260-pounder pulled no punches, saying frankly; "A big one!"

He left it up to his attorney, Bob Woolf, to let the Bills know how big.

"I'd like to think in terms of the same thing as O.J. is in his," Woolf said. "Although he is a defensive end and, within the structure of pro football, quarterbacks, running backs and receivers are the glamour stars, the lineman is just as important.

"I think he should be compensated the same way. In all fairness, he should be paid for his proficiency as an athlete, not the position he plays. I don't see why a lineman should be paid less."

Simpson, the Bills' No.1 pick four years ago, signed a four-year contract at that time for $50,000 a year plus a $100,000 loan for investment purposes.

While Patulski was the focal point on the first day of the draft in which the 26 pro teams will eventually select 442 players, there were these other major developments:

—Neither Heisman Trophy—winning quarterback Pat Sullivan of Auburn nor runner-up Ed Marinaro, the record-setting Cornell running back, was selected on the opening round.

—Linemen were the chief commodity on the first round with nine drafted, including the first three picks-Patulski, California defensive end Sherman White by Cincinnati and Southern Illinois offensive tackle Lionel Antoine by Chicago.

The Giants, who last week traded quarterback Fran Tarkenton to Minnesota in a transaction in which they acquired three players and the Vikings' No. 1 pick, sent Fred Dryer to the Patriots for another No. 1, plus a No. 6 draft choice this year and a No. 2 next year.

Then they used the two first-stround choices to get help for their beleaguered defensive unit, selecting Eldridge Small of Texas A & I, a wide receiver in college, as a cornerback and tackle Larry Jacobson of Nebraska, whom they expect to play end.

The Bears, who used a No. 1 draft choice acquired from the Giants to select Antoine, used their own to add defensive back Craig Clemons of Iowa to their first-round harvest.

Two other teams also had a pair of first-round picks, Green Bay selecting defensive back Willie Buchanon of San Diego State and quarterback Jerry Tagge of Nebraska and the New York Jets picking Jackson State wide receiver Jerome Barkum and Michigan linebacker Mike Taylor.

Tagge was the first quarterback selected in the draft, but Florida passer John Reaves also was tapped on the first round by Philadelphia. Sullivan had to wait until the second round when he was picked by Atlanta as the 40th player in the draft.

Marinaro, however, may have been the most embarrassed of the ballyhooed pre-draft favorites. By the time he was selected by Minnesota as the 50th player in the draft on the second round, seven other running backs had been picked.

Four went on the first round, Oregon's Bobby Moore, who may wind up as a wide receiver in the pros, was selected by St. Louis as the No. 4 pick and the first nonlineman to be selected.

Pittsburgh took France Harris of Penn State, Kansas City tapped Jeff Kinney of Nebraska and the Super Bowl Champion Dallas Cowboys closed out the first round by adding another Thomas to their roster with the selection of Bill Thomas of Boston College.

Of the other heralded predraft favorites to go No. 1 Houston tight end Riley Odoms went to Denver, Georgia guard Royce Smith to New Orleans, Notre Dame defensive back Clarence Ellis to Atlanta, Auburn wide receiver Terry Beasley to San Francisco and Notre Dame defensive tackle Mike Kadish to Miami.

Other first-round picks were Stanford defensive end Greg Sampson by Houston and linebacking teammate Jeff Siemon by Minnesota, Colorado defensive end Herb Orvis by Detroit, Michigan defensive back Tom Darden by Cleveland, Villanova wide receiver Mike Siani by Oakland and Oregon tackle Tom Drougas by Baltimore.

LACROSSE–There will be a meeting of all Lacrosse candidates on Thursday, February 3, at 4:30 P.M. in Room 251 Boyden.

KARATE–The Oriental Sports Club will resume workouts on Monday and Thursday evenings from 7-9 P.M. in the 19th floor lounge of Kennedy.

IM VOLLEYBALL OFFICIALS–All paid officials MUST attend on of the following meetings in 223 Boyden: Either Wednesday, February 2, at 7:30 P.M. or Thursday, February 3, at 7:30 P.M.

VOLLEYBALL SCHEDULING–Because of the number of volleyball teams entered in the Intramural Mens, Womens, Co-Recreational and Graduate Faculty divisions, scheduling will be difficult. Those members of the mens and womens division teams, who are also playing in the Co-Recreational program, could possibly be scheduled at the same time. There is no way that this problem can be alleviated. The reason for this is that there are approximately 23 playing dates, to schedule 200 teams in league play round robin, to include championship playoffs, so there will be conflict of schedule for those students who are participating both in mens and womens programs, as well as the Co-Recreational Program.

Girl Skiers Set For '72

The women's intercollegiate ski team will open their 1972 season this weekend in the Berkshire East Mountains with a racing clinic on Saturday, February 5th. Their first race will be a Slalom on Sunday, February 6th. The UMass skiers, coached by Miss Kathy Clark, will compete in the New England Women's Intercollegiate Ski Conference (WISC). This weekend U. Mass. and Mount Holyoke College will co-host several other WISC teams. U. Mass. team members include Debbie Angus, Pam Cotton, Barbara Eaton, Dianne Evens, Jean Hayden, Barbara O'Reilly, Marcia Packlick, Cindy Rosti, Mary Frances Sullivan, Christie Sweeney, and Pat Visnick. These girls have devoted entire weekends to pre-season conditioning practices, and hope to place well in their forthcoming meets. Their schedule includes the following races, in addition to above mentioned.

Sat. Feb. 12	Giant Slalom	Roundtop, Vt.
Sun. Feb. 13	Slalom	Roundtop, Vt.
Sat. Feb. 26	Giant Slalom	Mittersill, N.H.
Sun. Feb. 27	Slalom	Mittersill, N.H.
Sat. Mar. 4	Slalom/Giant Slalom	Pat's Peak, N.H.

U. Mass. will be #4 in the running order.

Women's Swim

By JANIS AHMADJIAN

Today the UMass Women's Swim Team opens their second semester schedule as they travel to Springfield College to face a strong, experienced women's team in stiff competition. This is an extremely tough job for the young UMass team which is gaining experience fast.

The Swim Team competed in two meets before Xmas. The first one, a dual meet with a strong Mt. Holyoke team, they lost. Standouts were Cyn Erwin and Laurie Selik. The second was an Invitational Relay Meet at Wellesley College where UMass swam against Radcliffe, M.I.T., Brandies, Bridgewater State, Wheaton, and Mt. Holyoke. UMass took a first and a second place win in the events.

Claire Briana is the lone returning veteran from last year's team. However, the team has some promising, speedy Frosh: Laurie Seluk, Roxanne LaCoste, Karen Bornheim, and Janice Kaufman. Upperclass team members include Mary Beth Stanne, Jan Reid, Sandy Clark, Janis Ahmadjian, and Bridget Adams. Junior Sue White will be competing in Diving, having recently switch over from swimming.

The team has been practicing hard since fall swimming five days a week averaging 2,500-3,000 yards a day. Competitive swimming isn't really enjoyable; it hurts to push yourself. The more you hurt the better you get. A lot of endurance and stamina are needed to continue everyday.

- Pat Griffin is the enthusiastic new coach for the team, a recent graduate from the University of Maryland. While a student there she competed in swimming all four years.

Eager, nervous, anticipation characterize the team's spirit on the upcoming competion; they're hoping for a win to start off the sememster right. Other meets scheduled for the season include ones with New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Mt. Holyoke and the Albany Invitationals.

There's No Place Like Home

But Pucksters Have No Home Of Their Own

By BILL BALLOU

If the football coaching staff wants a good football player to attend UMass and play his football here, there are many different aspects of life at the University it can emphasize. But undoubtedly one of its aces in the hole is to bring him down to Alumni Stadium and say "Look. There's where you're going to play football for the next four years." It can show him a beautiful facility that is pleasing to the eye, spacious, and does not contain a bad seat out of its approximately 20,000. The Stadium contains excellent press and locker room facilities. It is one of the finest football complexes in New England. It is a definite asset to a football program that is building itself into a New England power.

If the hockey coaching staff, consisting of Head Coach Jack Canniff and his assistant Russ Kidd, wants a good hockey player to attend UMass and play his hockey here, there are many different aspects of life at the University they can emphasize. But that's where the similarlity with football stops. UMass does not have a hockey rink.

The Redmen do not have to play on the Campus Pond, but only because of the generosity of Amherst College. UMass is able to practice and play in Orr Rink, which is on the Amherst Campus.

Unfortunately, Orr Rink is a small facility, designed for use by one team that represents a student population about one-fourth of the enrollment at UMass. The absolute maximum capacity at Orr Rink is 2,000. Two thousand spaces for a school with 20,000 students and the best hockey team in its division.

Up until about three years ago, UMass hockey didn't rate a second look by most of the people on campus, let alone rate an arena. But three years ago Jack Canniff molded a couple of veterans and a slew of sophomores into a decent hockey club. A decent hockey club that rated a second look and in the past couple of years has developed into one of the best aggregations in New England. A team who played last year's national champions, Boston University, in BU's brand new Walter Brown Rink, and lost to them by only 6-4.

Last Friday night UMass hockey came of age. It grew up in Orr Rink, and it grew up painfully. 3500 people jammed into the 2000 capacity rink and saw the Redmen lose to Vermont by a score of 5-3.

The big story of that game was not the loss to the Catamounts, although it hurt, but the fact that 3500 people braved bitter cold and the knowledge that they would have to stand up for about three hours to walk, thumb, drive, and crawl over to Orr Rink for that hockey game.

For a game like that, you could easily get a crowd of say, 5,000. Hockey is king in Massachusetts, and good hockey from the high school level up draws packed houses.

Let's look at Vermont. A small school in a small state, UVM has one of the finest hockey facilities in New England. It seats over 4,000 and sellouts are the rule rather than the exception.

This UMass hockey team is a good one, and it is going to make the divisional playoffs. It undoubtedly will be one of the top seeds. What's going to happen if Vermont or anyone comes to Orr Rink for a playoff game? Will people have to pitch tents outside the doors to get in line early enough so they can be sure of getting in?

The Arena question has many facets. There is no doubt that a new building would aid in recruiting. The first question a player asks a college coach is "Where an I going to practice, and where an I going to play?" It's tough to compete against a BU or Vermont when you don't even have a rink of your own to show him.

There is no doubt a rink could be profitable. Ice time is at a premium all around the state, and every well managed rink in Massachusetts is being used 24 hours a day.

The UMass hockey team are virtual orphans. They and their fans deserve better.

"Dinky Rink" Hockey

Karl Schranz-'Sacrificial Lamb"?

SAPPORO, Japan (AP)-Karl Schranz, the Austrian skier who was disqualified from the XI Winter Olympic Games, becomes the third major sports hero to fall in the eternal battle over what amateurism.

To the people of Austria he looks like a martyr who was sacrificed to the forces of "pure amateurism." To the other side, he is a professional, although even some of these will contend he was singled out to be a scapegoat.

His predecessors were Jim Thorpe, an American Indian who had his medals taken away from him after a heroic performance in the 1912 games at Stockholm, and the great distance ace, Paavo Nurmi of Finland, disqualified at Los Angeles in 1932.

Schranz, 33, former world Alpine champion and silver medalist in 1964 at Innsbruck, was thrown out of the current winter Games here by the International Olympic Committee, which charged that he lent his name and picture to advertising for financial gain.

The IOC action provoked bitter protests from Austria's official delegation, which contended he was convicted without a trial.

Austrian newspapers said he was "a sacrificial lamb" and Alpine leaders in Sapporo's Olympic Village contended he was the "pound of flesh" demanded by Avery Brundage, IOC president.

Similar protests were voiced in the cases of Thorpe, and Nurmi, two great heroes of the games.

In 1912 at Stockholm, Thorpe won both the pentathlon and decathlon, two of the most rigorous tests in athletics, and was hailed by the King of Sweden as "the greatest athlete in the world."

Afterward, it was charged that Thorpe had accepted $50 at one time prior to the Olympics to play in a semi-professional baseball game. He was declared a professional and was ordered to return his medals.

For years, efforts were made to have the medals restored. Thorpe, who became an outstanding football player, died without ever seeing the medals again. No one knows what happened to them.

Nurmi, called "The Fabulous Finn," won five gold medals in the 1924 Games at Paris. He triumphed in the 1,500 meters, 5,000 meters, 10,000 meters cross-country team and individual and the 3,000 meters.

In 1932 at Los Angeles Nurmi was favored to add the marathon to his triumphs. Shortly before the games, he took part in a 40-kilometer race in Koenigsburg, East Prussia, and handed in an expense account.

Sigfried Edstrom of Sweden, president of the International Track and Field Association, said Nurmi's expense account exceeded limits and the Finnish runner was barred.

Some observers say the disqualification will make a hero of Schranz and produce financial rewards exceeding any he might have achieved if he had remained a competitor.

At 33, seeking to compete in his fourth Olympics, he was regarded as well past his prime.

Schranz was a son of a poor tunnel worker in St. Anton in the Arlberg Mountain of the Austrian Alps. His father's job was to walk tunnels under the mountains. He inhaled so much soot that he died at an early age from tuberculosis.

Schranz's mother took over the job of rearing five children. The job was further complicated when the family hut burned to the ground, leaving them homeless.

Karl began skiing when he was 4 1/2 on skis made by his father from broken ski tips left by tourists. As a youngster, he said he dreamed of becoming a fighter pilot like Pepe Jennewein, a former world champion who was credited with 68 kills in World War II.

At 12, Schranz became an apprentice ski maker at $12 a month. He worked in a saw mill and later became a ski tester with a salary of $200 a month.

There are reports that his current income is $60,000 a year. These reports were never confirmed.

Schranz built a 35-bed hotel in his native St. Anton. "I borrowed the money," he said.

Friends say he lives like a monk. He doesn't drink or smoke. He rarely dates. When he does, he moves in high scoiety. Highly religious, he has a Christian cross and a Winchester rifle hanging on the wall of his room.

His career has been marked by bad luck. He suffered a groin injury before his first Olympics at Squaw Valley, Calif., in 1960. He had to settle for a giant slalom silver medal at Innsbruck in 1964. At Grenoble, in 1968, his victory in the men's slalom was voided when he missed a gate after-he insisted-a shadow crossed his path.

Now he must pack and leave the Olympic Village. For what? Martyrdom and greater wealth, friends say.

That would be if Schranz decides to join professional ranks, as some former skiing stars have done, such as America's 1970 world champion, Billy Kidd.

On the other hand, Schranz may try to become Austrian coach, as he said some time ago that he would like to do, and then his income would be slim.

What could be so funny? Senate members John Hogan, Laura Emmons, Lee Sandwen, and Skip Olmstead are pictured in one of the lighter moments in last night's Student Senate meeting. On the serious side was the Senate decision not to grant funds to the Student Mobe for next year. (MDC photo by Barbara Brecher)

Senate Refuses To Fund Mobe

(BULLETIN--In late action last night, the Student Senate passed a motion calling for the administration to restrict athletic events in the same manner that the administration wishes the students to restrict a large Spring Concert. More details tomorrow.)

By DON BISHOP

In a late development at last night's weekly meeting of Student Senate, the Senate voted 28 to 14 not to fund the UMass chapter of the Student Mobilization Committee for the fiscal year 1972-73. Debate on this matter was long and heated, and at the time of the Collegian deadline motions to reconsider the non-granting of funds were being made.

In other budgetary matters, the Senate decided to grant funds for next year to the Senior Committee and the SWAP Conference. Also passed at the meeting was a bill calling for the creation of a student composed Intramural Committee and the appointments of Chet Richardson as Chairman of the Senate Financial Affairs Committee, Elliot Richardson as Chairman of the Senate Services Committee and David Poisson as Communications Coordinator were finalized.

The question of funding SWAP brought almost as much debate as did that of the Mobe. Initially the motion on SWAP was defeated, but later, in a reconsideration motion, those in favor of SWAP were able to convince the majority of Senators that the Conference did serve some viable purpose and was deserving of Senate funds.

Debate against the funding of SWAP, centered on questions of the constructive value of the Conference and as to why the Conference had to be held off campus. Various Senators and SWAP spokesman Ross Benjamin answered these queries by stating their beliefs that SWAP allows for valuable discussion on certain campus issues between students, faculty, and administrators. Supporters felt that SWAP has to be held off campus, as opposed to on campus, to prevent faculty and administration from leaving for home at night. At the end of debate the reconsideration motion passed by a slim margin.

The question of Mobe came up late in last night's meeting, and debate on the question of funds for next year followed a rather lengthy presentation by Mobe Co-Chairman Tom Moriarty on his rationale for funds.

Moriarty stated his view that the Vietnam War is and should not be a dead issue on campus and nationwide. He held that Mobe has and will continue to provide valuable educational and publicity service to the UMass community by presenting the "other side" of the war issue through such things as pamphlets and lectures.

The principal Senate spokesman in favor of funding Mobe was Vice-President Larry Ladd. He rejected a previous statement made, holding that the majority of students on campus no longer need to be educated about the war, in that they already oppose it. Ladd felt that Mobe provides a valuable service by presenting an opposing side to the administration version of the war.

Senators Casper, Tackeff, Mulligan, Staton, Sherman, Altfillisch, and Chiller all came out against Mobe for different reasons. Some felt that the idea of Mobe was a good one, but that for reasons of their present structure, Mobe was not deserving of funds for next year.

Other Senators felt that Mobe was an "elitist" organized group, expressing a "blatantly political viewpoint" (Mulligan), and because of their highly political nature were undeserving of Senate funds. Another view expressed was that Mobe has not shown any constructive service this year, and therefore were not deserving of funds for next year.

The final vote was 24 to 14 against funding Mobe for 1972-73.

Professors Discuss Vietnam

By ETHEL HARRIS
MDC Staff

"Vietnam and After: What Lessons Have We Learned" was the topic of the first in a series of eight panel discussions in the 1972 Great Decisions program.

Participants in the discussion held last night in Webster lounge, and broadcast over WFCR, included moderator Gerard Braunthal of the UMass Political Science department, Luther Allen, also of Political Science UMass; Joel M. Halpern of the UMass anthropology department, and Richard Minear, of the UMass history department.

Professor Allen stated that one of the chief results of continued U.S. involvement in the war is that "we may be learning the wrong lessons in Vietnam -- learning not to care". He cited the apathetic attitude of Americans toward other world affairs, chiefly the recent events in India.

In reference to the release of the Pentagon Papers last summer, Allen questioned why such a study was undertaken by the U.S. government at all. He theorized that perhaps a President taking office in 1969 favoring a unilateral withdrawal from Vietnam may have been able to use the papers as "a White Paper for a new United States foreign policy."

Professor Halpern, speaking in relation to the bombings in Indochina, cited a Department of Defense memo claiming that the U.S. was conducting only "protective bombing" in Vietnam and giving "limited air support" to allies in northern Laos. At the same time, he said, a United States government survey of refugees from the Plain of Jars in the summer of 1970 revealed that 97% had seen bombing attacks, and that many farmers worked at night only because the continued bombings disrupted their occupation. 75% of the refugees, according to the survey, had to dig bunkers, and almost all found that the bombing made their lives more difficult.

United States involvement in the war, according to Halpern, has caused a "psychological mobilization" of the people of Indochina. He also pointed out the fallacy of the theory that increased bombing would lead to an increase desire on the part of the people to negotiate.

Professor Minear presented figures to indicate that the same amount of bombing is going on in Indochina now as when President Nixon first took office. The role of bombing, he claimed, is "absolutely essential" to the Administration because we have fewer soldiers in Vietnam than two years ago. He cited statements by both Nixon and Defense Secretary Laird indicating a willingness to step up the bombings should enemy activity increase.

Minear also noted that the problems of a peace in Vietnam and greater unity of opinions within the United States were two entirely different goals. Yet Nixon, he said, is trying to achieve peace at the same time he is attempting to soothe domestic discord. For this reason, Minear claimed that Nixon's peace goals involve a continued U.S. presence, and therefore the U.S. will probably not be out of Vietnam before the 1972 presidential elections.

In regards to the panelists' feelings on the present peace proposals, Allen expressed doubt that negotiations would lead to an effective peace settlement, especially since the secret negotiations in North Vietnam had already been concluded. Halpern claimed that a peace settlement must "rely on the initiative of the United States", and that possibilities for a settlement between the nations of Southeast nations have been ruined by the U.S. settlement.

Minear claimed that Nixon's new proposals were in effect an admission that negotiations in Paris had broken down, and served chiefly to defuse the war as an issue in an election year. By presenting a peace plan, he said, Nixon can now put pressure on the National Liberation Front, and increase the bombing. Thus the general outlook will be for more war.

In response to a question relating to the war's effect on the South Vietnamese people, Dr. Allen cited environmental effects of defoliants and the higher casualty rate among South Vietnamese troops now that Americans are leaving. Other points brought out from the audience were the possibility of continued action against the war, and the effects of the war on U.S. economic and foreign policy.

The Great Decisions program is sponsored by Apple Corps, the social organization of the Orchard Hill Area Government.

The next panel discussion in the series, on February 9, will be on the topic of "Japan, The Common Market, and the U.S.: Is A Trade War Brewing?"

Ralph Nader Tries To Organize Students

Ralph Nader has initiated one of the most ambitious attempts at organizing students ever. Inspired by the hundreds of applications for volunteer summer work he received from college students, Nader developed his concept of student-run directed and funded Public Interest Research Group (PIRG). Nader observed that students were one of the most vocal yet least effective groups in this country-student's interests, like those of the consumers, have been criminally disregarded in the decision-making processes which created their physical, social, economic, and psychological environments. Nader believes that through the use of his technique for public interest protection and the hiring of an inter-disciplinary professional staff, students can create an effective organization to protect students' interests as students, citizens, and consumers.

On October 1, Joe Highland from Nader's office made a speaking tour of the colleges in Western Mass., encouraging the students to attend a meeting on October 11 to form a Western Mass. P.I.R.G. Since then, twenty colleges in the area have been actively organizing the P.I.R.G. petition drive. The money for organizing has been loaned to W.M.-P.I.R.G. by a five-college group called the Connecticut Valley Committee, established by the Rockefeller Grant.

Since that time W.M.P.I.R.G. has established channels to direct students wishing to do public interest research. Contacts were made in the faculty and a program developed. It offers a chance for students to either work with people on a grass roots level, or do research through which they can educate people and work towards an end of perceived injustices. It offers the chance to develop programs and products and warmth, and something of yourself.

The course will be a prelude to the research initiated next semester. At this time, the professional staff will be hired. The staff will be funded by a refundable two dollar tax per semester for which there will be a petition drive starting next Monday. With the aid of the professional staff the research students do will result in action, in such forms as articles, books, lawsuits, and lobbying. Mr. Don Ross, a lawyer from Nader's office, will address the course on the methods of Nader-style research. There are still vacancies in the course.

The P.I.R.G. people have been organizing at all twenty Western Mass. colleges. The petition drive will begin next Monday with Nader's speech. Greenfield Community has already petitioned and was successful. Mr. Ross stated that Nader was very optimistic about the chances of W.M.-P.I.R.G. being established. Mr. Ross said that the Nader office believes the students have great potential and seem very responsible.

Youth Held In Maine Murder

SKOWHEGAN, Maine (AP)- Michael D. Stackpole, 18, of Corinna was ordered held without bail Wednesday on a charge of murdering a 10-year-old girl while they were snowmobiling at St. Albans Monday.

District Court Judge Edward N. Merrill II continued until next Monday the charge that Stackpole murdered Roxanne Gilkey, whose body, with the hands tied behind her back, was found propped against a tree near a snowmobile trail.

Stackpole did not enter a plea at his arraignment.

He told the judge he had no money to pay for legal counsel and indicated he would like to have attorney George Perkins of Skowhegan as his defense counsel.

The judge said he would talk to Perkins and, in the event the lawyer would not take the case, would appoint another competent attorney to defend the youth.

Roxanne's body was found Monday night after a massive search by police and volunteers.

State Police said they were told that the girl had been seen with Stackpole on a snowmobile earlier in the day.

Dr. Irving Goodof, a Waterville pathologist and deputy chief medical examiner in Maine, performed an autopsy on the girl's body and reported that death was due to strangulation and exposure.

The doctor said there was nothing in the post mortem examination to indicate that Roxanne had been molested sexually. Michael was taken back to the Somerset County jail here to await next Monday's second court appearance.

St. Albans is a small town about 10 miles east of Skowhegan.

Service Committee Has Suggestion Box

By DEBRA MARR

Have you ever had a gripe about University services and didn't know where to bring it or figured that it would never be listened to?

The Services Committee of the Student Senate has placed a suggestion box at the information desk in the Student Union lobby. It is for suggestions and complaints about such services as the Dining Commons, the Infirmary, dorm living, the campus centers and parking. Suggestions for new services that the Senate can provide will also be welcomed.

By next week, additional boxes will be located at the information desk in the Campus Center, in the lobby of Hampden Dining Commons, in the library, and in Whitmore near the cashier's office.

The boxes will be checked about every other day, and the Services Committee will answer all suggestions and complaints.

The committee also urges concerned students to attend the regular Senate Service Committee meetings in Room 903 of the Campus Center Mondays at 7:30 p.m. In addition, Senate committees are open to all students; students with a specific interest in services or in any other committee are urged to join.

Tanker Reported Missing

NEW ORLEANS (AP)-A 572-foot tanker with 35 persons aboard was reported missing Wednesday in an area where smoke had been reported, and U.S. Coast Guard aircraft and cutters began a search for the vessel.

A spokesman said the V.A. Fogg, owned by Texas City Tankers, left Freeport, Tex., Tuesday afternoon and failed to arrive on schedule in Galveston Wednesday morning.

The spokesman said an aircraft in the area reported sighting a column of smoke Tuesday afternoon, but efforts to locate the source of the smoke failed.

The Coast Guard was in the process of suspending the search for the origin of the smoke when it received word of the missing tanker.

The spokesman said the tanker was empty except for two tanks of xylene, a benzene derivative which is not considered highly explosive. But there also were 18 empty tanks which contained benzene residue, and vapor from the benzene can explode at very low temperatures, the spokesman said.

'Action' Begins Phase II

By MDC STAFF

Thirty students are currently "in training" at the Northfield Inn as part of Phase II of the University Year for Action (UYA) program at UMass. The federally funded experiment involves approximately 8.7 million dollars for 1200 volunteers over a period of 16 months in selected schools across the country.

During the four day conference being held this week the students are being instructed in their roles as volunteers in social service. They will work for one year in a particular community agency and earn 30 University credits for their services.

At the conference workshops are being held with agency representatives from the Belchertown State Training School, the Urban League of Springfield, Westfield Detention Center and Genesis II. Other projects cooperating in the program are SALT, an experimental community newspaper, and the Hampshire county jail. Volunteers from Phase I of Action are sharing their experiences with the new participants, hopefully to make their program even more meaningful, according to an Action spokesman. Phase I began last fall when UMass President Robert C. Wood successfully negotiated with the federal agency to include UMass in the UYA project.

Acting Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery told the Phase II volunteers yesterday at dinner that the most critical aspect of Action is coming back to the University and actually sharing with other students and some faculty what the volunteers have learned "hopefully to direct University resources so they will come to bear more meaningfully on this State's people."

Bromery asked the volunteers to be aware of the total implications of the Action program, both positive and negative, so that they can develop strategies that will help the poor people at whom they are directed. He urged several times that these people should be participating at the local level of decision-making.

"The existence of the Action program makes possible and....gives emphasis to the problem-based approach to learning," Bromery declared, also. He was echoing the sentiments of Associate Provost for Special Programs Robert Woodbury, who spoke to the group earlier.

Woodbury said that Action students "get into a service dimension". He sais he viewed the program as a testing ground that combines the academic component of learning with field work.

"I'm not sure the Action model is a good model...but how do you put these two things together?," he asked.

Suggesting "resource linkages", Woodbury said that the University should share its resources with the community, for instance in computer service, and likewise, the community should offer somethings to the University... making it a "two way street".

What both Bromery and Woodbury emphasized was not to have students use the Action program solely for their own benefit. They asked that the volunteers bring other people into the program, and also consider the implications for where the University could go. Future directions in other related programs should be considered, Woodbury said, so that the idea and its benefits will not die with just the Phase I and II participants.

Ruth W. Burgin, Director of the Action program at UMass, expressed similar sentiments, saying that the students should be very aware that the program is experimental and being watched by people everywhere, both hostile and friendly. She was very appreciative of the cooperating agencies, she said.

The Action training session will continue today on the theme of human relations and community resources. Announcements are expected on the granting of additional federal funds to the program.

Ruth Bergen, at podium, addresses members of the federally funded University Year For Action Program, held last night at the Northfield Inn, in Northfield.

Court Voids Male Marriage

MANCHESTER, N.H. (AP)- Superior Court Chief Justice William Keller has broken up a marriage between two Lowell, Mass., men.

Keller ruled in Hillsboro County Superior Court Tuesday that all local and state records of the marriage between Francis Mucka and Neil Trudelle, alias Tina Marie Trudelle, both 27, must be voided.

The state Attorney General's Office acted in the case after Nashua City Clerk Lionel Gilbert said he discovered the pair had taken blood tests in Concord after they had failed to get married in Lowell, and had been married last year by a Nashua justice of the peace who didn't realize both were men.

The Attorney General's Office argued that the marriage was against the law and "public policy of the state."

Londonderry's Weekend Victims Laid To Rest

LONDONDERRY, Northern Ireland (AP)-The dead of Londonderry's Bloody Sunday were laid to rest on a rainswept hillside Wednesday while flames, rampaging mobs and gun battles plunged Ireland into more death and destruction.

Hardly had thousands of mourners left the Londonderry gravesides when a howling throng of 30,000 stormed the British Embassy in Dublin and set it ablaze with gasoline bombs.

A fierce firefight between British troops and guerrillas erupted in Belfast. Army headquarters said one gunman was slain-the 234th victim of violence since the grim autumn of 1969.

Terrorist bombs blasted a path of destruction through the Northern Ireland capital, shattering automobiles and shops.

In London, Defense Minister Lord Carrington pledged before the House of Lords that Britain would make no concession to violence and terrorism in Northern Ireland.

He said the British Army would break up a civil rights march planned for this weekend. It was a similar march in Londonderry, broken up by paratroopers, that led to the deaths of 13 men and teen-age boys last Sunday.

Under skies as black as its mood, Londonderry slumped into mourning for Sunday's dead. Shivering crowds, estimated at 10,000 people, packed narrow streets and converged on the hillside where 11 bodies were interred. Two victims were to be buried separately.

The cortege wound its way slowly from St. Mary's Church high in the Roman Catholic Creggan district, to the cemetery on a steep hill lashed by sleet borne on the winds from Lough Foyle.

Commercial and business life was at a standstill in the city where 40,000 of the 56,000 population are Catholic. It was a civil rights campaign by Catholics, a minority to Protestants in Northern Ireland as a whole, that first exploded into violence in Londonderry 2 1/2 years ago.

One woman was carried away, overcome by grief, as the coffins passed.

N.Viets Ready To Negotiate When Key Conditions Are Met

SAIGON (AP)-The Viet Cong said Wednesday it could begin immediate discussion with the Saigon government toward a political solution of the war if President Nguyen Van Thieu resigned now and the United States set a troop withdrawal deadline.

In calling for Thieu's immediate resignation, a national Liberation Front radio broadcast said, "Thieu and his oppressive machinery, instruments of the U.S. Vietnamization plan," are the "main obstacle "to a political solution."

It said the United States, by setting a date for the complete withdrawal of all allied forces and giving up all U.S. bases, could win freedom for the American pilots held in North Vietnam.

The broadcast called these demands "the two key points" of the National Liberation Front's seven-point plan for ending the war. The front is the Viet Cong's political arm.

The broadcast said that once these requirements were met, the Viet Cong's provisional revolutionary government-PRG-would be ready to discuss establishment of a "national reconciliatory government" to organize elections and an "official government" for South Vietnam. "If the two said conditions could be agreed upon, the other problems could be solved easily," the broadcast said.

The eight-point allied peace proposal disclosed by President Nixon a week ago included a proviso that Thieu would resign a month ahead of an election, with a caretaker government to serve in the interim.

It did not provide, however, for any dismantling of the government machinery nor rule out Thieu as a candidate in the election.

Various Communist broadcasts and statements have indicated that this is the most objectionable portion of the proposed political solution, saying this would be only a repeat of last October's one-man election in which Thieu won a second four-year term.

The broadcast said that if the preliminary conditions including Thieu's immediate resignation were met, the National Liberation Front "will discuss immediately with the Saigon administration the setting up of a national reconciliatory government composed of three parts to organize a general election to elect a National Assembly, set up a constitution and organize an official government for South Vietnam."

Processing Of Checks Spedup

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Federal Reserve Board adopted guidelines Wednesday aimed at speeding up the nation's check-processing system, saying it will make it possible for Americans to use deposited paychecks sooner.

Another by-product of the system, when it becomes fully operative in about a year, will be that Americans will know sooner when their checks bounce.

The guidelines direct the board's 12-bank system and regional offices how to establish and operate new regional clearing houses in communities across the nation.

For individuals and businesses making and receiving payments by check, this new system will mean earlier receipt of funds due to them or earlier payment of funds they are transferring to others, the board said.

Most payroll checks will be cleared and employees will have the use of their deposited pay within a day after they put it in the bank, the board said.

"Similarly, a check written to pay a bill, or make a purchase, will be debited within a day after the check is deposited in a participating area bank," it said.

In Brief...

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Securities and Exchange Commission moved Wednesday to tie the nation's stock exchanges into a single central market system and to permit large institutional investors to be members of stock exchanges.

LONDON (AP)-The dollar sank to new lows and the price of gold rose to nearly $50 an ounce in Western Europe on Wednesday. Dealers said doubts were growing about the health of the U.S. economy and some holders of dollars sought to get ridof them.

WASHINGTON (AP)-The White House indicated Wednesday it is willing to pare down its ambitious welfare-reform plan and settle for an experimental effort like one suggested by Sen. Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn.

Hartke Accuses McGovern Of Being A "Copy Cat"

CONCORD, N.H. (AP)-Sen. Vance Hartke of Indiana Wednesday accused his Democratic colleague from South Dakota, George McGovern, a rival in the New Hampshire presidential primary, of being "a copycat."

Hartke commented in an interview shortly after McGovern, campaigning in nearby Franklin, proposed revamping the Social Security system, and increasing benefits by 20 per cent.

A proposal to increase benefits by 20 per cent, Hartke said, is part of legislation he has drawn up. "He's a copycat," Hartke said, repeating his challenge to debate "any and all of the presidential candidates on any issues."

Hartke also maintained that he was instrumental in "getting the last 15 per cent increase passed" two years ago. He added that "all the pending Social Security legislation is mine."

Hartke also said that he has drawn legislation to increase minimum Social Security payments to $180 a month and to eliminate wage limitations.

Hartke, campaigning for votes in the March 7 first-in-the-nation presidential primary, said he would spend 10 days in the state and "I'll be asking the people who is the real advocate of Social Security benefits."

New Hampshire Is The Test

CONCORD, N.H. (AP)-Sen George McGovern said Wednesday night his performances in the New Hampshire and Wisconsin primaries will probably determine the fate of his campaign for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Speaking informally to newsmen, McGovern said, "We can't get snowed in New Hampshire and expect to rise again in Florida." McGovern is entered in both the New Hampshire and Florida primaries.

He said, "I would certainly have to finish no worse than third" to have any chance at winning the nomination.

McGovern said that after New Hampshire his next most important contest would be the Wisconsin primary.

He said, "We no longer consider the Florida primary as important as it had once appeared because of the fractionalization there." He pointed out that nine candidates are vieing for the Democratic nomination in the Florida primary.

Coming Home From World War II

TOKYO (AP)-Soldier Shoichi Yokoi came home from World War II on Wednesday with his rifle, a salute and an apology to Emperor Hirohito.

Rather than surrender to his American enemy, Yokoi held out for the last 28 years in the jungles of Guam. He was found there last Thursday, fishing for his food. He is now 56 and this is his first look at his homeland since the war.

"I have returned although I feel shame," he said. "I've come back to report to the Japanese people about the fighting and my experiences in Guam because I don't know what wars we may encounter again.

"I brought back the rifle entrusted to me by the honorable emperor which I want to return. I want to report that I am sorry I did not serve his majesty to my satisfaction."

Yokoi was extended a hero's welcome as he walked down the ramp from a jetliner that flew him from the tiny Pacific island. It was his first visit home in 31 years, having been transferred to Guam from the Manchurian front.

On Guam, Yokoi lived in a tunnel he dug in the jungle undergrowth and survived on breadfruit, coconuts, snails, rats' livers, shrimps and frogs. He made his clothes out of tree barks.

He kept time by marking a tree trunk every full moon. He stocked his cave with coconuts, which proved invaluable during typhoons.

After his capture, Yokoi told officials he was aware of Japan's surrender in World War II from leaflets and newspapers scattered about the island. But he refused to surrender. He obeyed the old imperial military code to die rather than live in disgrace as a prisoner.

Accompanying Yokoi back home were the ashes of two of his wartime buddies-Mikio Shichi and Satoru Nakahata-who died from malnutrition eight years ago.

He said his first plane ride was like riding in a train and the first sight of Mr. Fuji brought tears to his eyes.

Asked what he thought of the war, Yokoi pounded a table and said, "Japan lost the Pacific war because it lacked arms, warships and planes and not because of any lack of fighting spirit."

Yokoi, his eyes red from tears, told newsmen when he recovers his health he will console the souls of the war dead and visit families of comrades who died in Guam.

From the airport news conference Yokoi was taken to the Tokyo National Hospital where he will undergo medical observation for some time before he returns to his home town in Nagoya in central Honshu.

Yokoi has back pay of about 50,000 yen awaiting him. At today's exchange rates this is worth $162. But he already has received an outpouring of gifts and cash donations that amount to more than $162,000.

Pay Hikes Asked For Teachers

BOSTON (AP)-Gov. Francis W. Sargent has submitted legislation that would provide retroactive pay increases to some 130,000 Massachusetts teachers and other municipal employees who lost pay as a result of the wage-price freeze.

The municipal employees were included in the congressional exemption from the wage-price freeze approved by the Cost of Living Council Jan. 27, but specific restrictions in the Massachusetts municipal finance statutes prohibited the payment of retroactive pay to city workers.

Lt. Gov. Donald L. Dwight announced the filing of the special legislation Thursday. Gov. Francis W. Sargent is vacationing in the Bahamas.

The bill, which amends the municipal finance law, drew the strong support of the Massachusetts Teachers Association, MTA.

A spokesman for the association said the bill would enable teachers to receive wages which were withheld from their paychecks during 1971.

An MTA spokesman said about 50,000 Bay State Teachers would be affected by the law and would receive "an average of about $180."

"That's a real "ballpark" figure, however," the spokesman said.

"It is a matter of equity," Dwight said, adding that municipal employees "should not be singled out as solitary martyrs when other public and private workers receive pay increases negotiated, but not received, prior to the President's freeze in August."

"It is perfectly clear that immediate action in behalf of our teachers and other city employees is easier than further delay, and, even more importantly, it will be less expensive," Dwight said.

"Immediate payment will result in considerable saving of interest on the money due the teachers, interest which a court might legitimately award," he said.

MACLEAN

House Speaker David Bartley announced Thursday the appointment of Rep. William G. MacLean, D-Fairhaven, to the House subcommittee on Ethics. MacLean replaces Paul Murphy, who resigned to become presiding justice of the Roxbury Municipal Court in Boston.

COLLEGES

Rep. J. Laurence Golden, D-Framingham, testified before the joint Committee on Education Wednesday in support of a bill he filed "to provide equal opportunity for public higher education" to all state residents.

His bill proposes a combination of higher tuitions and substantial financial assistance in the form of scholarships, loans and employment.

Golden told the committee that inadequate tuition rates at state colleges and the growing financial problems of private colleges demand an increase in the present $200 tuition charged by the state.

He said parents are being forced to send their children to public colleges because of the high cost of private education and state colleges are finding it difficult to handle the student load at the present rates.

His bill would have state colleges determine the average cost of educating each undergraduate and charge a tuition of between 35 and 40 per cent of that cost.

March 6 Is Number 1; It Loses

WASHINGTON (AP)-By rare coincidence, March 6 drew No. 1 in Wednesday's draft lottery and the following day, March 7, No. 2, putting men born those days in 1953 first in line for next year's callup.

In the safest spot with the highest numbers were those born July 23 with No. 365 and Sept. 9 with No. 364. But draft officials expect draftable numbers to fall far below the 125 of last year.

Draft Director Curtis W. Tarr started the drawing by saying: "We do not as yet know what the draft call will be in 1973."

"Nor," he said, "do we know as yet what the call will be for the remainder of 1972, but we do expect calls to be lower than they have been in recent years."

Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird has said there will be no calls at least until April.

In contrast to the first three draft lotteries, there were no protesters outside the Commerce Department auditorium, where the lottery was held.

Inside the atmosphere was more relaxed than in past years, apparently because this could be the last year for a lottery that counts.

The administration hopes to have an all-volunteer army by June 30, 1973, when the current draft authority expires.

There are plans to hold standby lottery next year for those turning 19 in 1973.

One drum contained red capsules with birth dates and the other had the blue capsules containing the numbers.

One capsule was pulled from each drum simultaneously and handed to two announcers who called off the date with the number of call.

Four young men and two women-three whites and three blacks-drew the capsules out. They are members of state Selective Service Youth Advisory Commissions in Maryland, Virginia and Pennsylvania.

The drums were rotated after each 20 draws, when the pluckers were changed.

There was the usual suspense waiting for No. 1 to be pulled, and it didn't come until the lottery was almost over.

Stephen R. Hartley of Cumberland, Md., picked March 6 and Robert E. McDonald of Harrisburg, Pa., No. 1. That was shortly after No. 2 was matched with March 7 on the 271st draw and No. 4 with April 21 on the 273rd draw. No. 3 went to Aug. 3 on the 11th draw.

The lottery Wednesday affects only men turning 19 this year. Those in previous lotteries will keep their numbers until they are no longer eligible to be drafted.

Tarr told newsmen the Pentagon hasn't told him what the draft needs will be because defense officials may not know themselves since so much depends on the economy.

Part of this depends on the job situation, since unemployment in civilian life would induce men to enlist. Military pay was raised twice last year, especially for men in low ranks and another increase is in the works for next Jan. 1.

Selective Service Answers Some Questions About The Draft

(Editor's Note: See Draft Counselor's Corner, page 7, for further information.)

WASHINGTON (AP)-Here are some of the questions that 19-year-olds involved in Wednesday's draft lottery might ask and the available answers:

Q. What is the highest number expected to be called in 1973?

A. Draft Director Curtis W. Tarr says he has no idea now. But it's expected to be far below last year's No. 125. Another factor is that the draft authority expires in mid-1973 and is not expected to be extended.

Q. If I don't get drafted under this lottery what happens?

A. You keep the number you received as long as you're exposed to possible draft, normally up to age 26. If you are not drafted next year and you are 1A you drop into a less vulnerable category on Dec. 31 and can't be called short of a major national emergency such as World War III. If you have a deferment and keep it you would be vulnerable to a draft, if there is one, in the year you drop the deferment.

Q. If I am drafted when might I be called?

A. You have to be given at least 30 days notice to report.

Q. How do my chances in this lottery compare with my chances if I had been in last year's lottery?

A. Your chances of being drafted are considerably less.

Q. What about the next lottery?

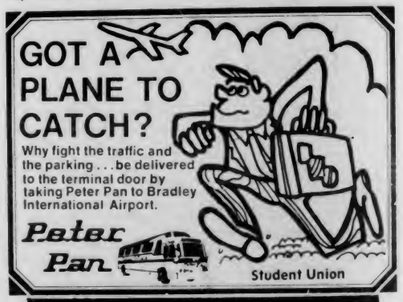
A. Plans are now to hold a standby lottery early next year even though the draft authority probably will expire. Plans at this time are to give the usual mental and physical exams to men with low numbers.

Q. Are there any prospects for a Volunteer Army?

A. President Nixon is sticking by his promise of a zero draft by July 1, 1973, and all sorts of lures have come into being to try and achieve this. There were two pay raises for the military last year, especially for low ranks. The military is trying to provide better living conditions both for barracks and family housing. Many of the old chores, such as KP and grass-cutting, are being turned over to commercial operations.

Q. Now that they are giving no more student deferments what sort of deferment may I get?

A. The principal one is for hardship. Also there are deferments for those who join Reserve components although some limits have been placed on this.



Q. I do not have a student deferment although I am in college and will graduate in June, 1973. If my draft number comes up in January or February what happens?

A. You'll be permitted to graduate before being called.

Draft Counselor's Corner

The Lottery-New And Old

By GILBERT J. SALK

Yesterday was lottery day for those born in 1953. From the reactions I watched as the numbers were posted, it was both a rude awakening and a time of confusion. Hopefully, most of the general questions can be answered here and laid to rest. For those who got their numbers in earlier lotteries, perhaps some myths can be dispelled.

Numbers '72

(Ed. note-Well here they are. If you don't like it you know what to do.)

WASHINGTON (AP) — Here is the 1973 draft lottery calendar as drawn today for two-million men turning 19 this year:

JANUARY: 1. 150, 2. 328, 3. 42, 4. 28, 5. 338, 6. 36, 7. 111, 8. 206, 9. 197, 10. 37, 11. 174, 12. 126, 13. 298, 14. 341, 15. 221, 16. 309, 17. 231, 18. 72, 19. 303, 20. 161, 21. 99, 22. 259, 23. 258, 24. 62, 25. 243, 26. 311, 27. 110, 28. 304, 29. 283, 30. 114, 31. 240.

DECEMBER: 1. 170, 2. 90, 3. 56, 4. 250, 5. 31, 6. 336, 7. 267, 8. 210, 9. 120, 10. 73, 11. 82, 12. 85, 13. 335, 14. 30, 15. 137, 16. 187, 17. 294, 18. 13, 19. 168, 20. 149, 21. 80, 22. 188, 23. 252, 24. 155, 25. 6, 26. 351, 27. 194, 28. 156, 29. 175, 30. 281, 31. 164.

First, for those who got their numbers yesterday:

None of you can be drafted before January 1, 1973. This means that you have nearly a year's grace. It also means that the maximum number reached this year, 1972, has absolutely nothing to do with you. Your draft is the 1973 draft.

It is impossible to make any predictions about next year's draft call. The election will be over, and who knows what direction our foreign policy will take then? You can be sure that any probable cut-offs announced by the Selective Service will be padded by political necessity. This is important. Nixon knows that all of you can vote, and he doesn't want to announce high draft calls until after the elections, so keep this is mind when you read official estimates of "safe" numbers. to be perfectly safe, anyone who received a number below 200 should consult a draft counselor to explore possible deferments. There are qualified, free, draft counselors at Draft Counseling Services in 923 Campus Center. There will be counselors in John Adams Lobby from 7-10 tonight. The Valley Peace Center in the center of Amherst provides free counseling. If your number is below 200, it would be to your advantage to spend some time talking to one of these people.

It is important to remember that no matter how low your number, there are legal alternatives to going into the Armed Forces. So even if you're a March 6 baby, don't give up hope.

Now, for some general stuff for everybody:

The number you get when the lottery for your birth year is drawn is yours for life. It never changes. The following year is the first year you can be drafted. If you are 1-A and your number is called, you will be drafted unless you manage to flunk the physical. If you are 1-A and your number is not called, you will be free. (You will also be reclassified 1-H.) If you have a deferment the call for that year does not effect you in any way. You retain your number. When you finally become 1-A, the number reached in that year is the one which applies, not the one reached the year you turned 20.

There's a lot of confusion about this, so let's trot out an example. Say I got my number in the first lottery. It was 150. I was first eligible to be drafted in 1970, in terms of age, but I had a deferment. So, even though they drafted up to 195, I wasn't called. In 1971, the call only went up to 125, so I dropped my deferment in December. On January 1, 1972, I automatically entered the second priority group and became free of the draft. That's how it works, folks. Any questions? Check with a draft counselor for more explaining.

Normally, I don't like to tell people not to trust their friends, but the draft is confusing enough without subjecting yourself to mythology, semi-accurate information, and shared (understandable) paranoia. Draft counselors are trained, try to keep up with changes by reading the regulations, (instead of newspaper or Pentagon accounts of the changes,) and are sympathetic with your reluctance to discard all or part of your life in the military. If you have questions, please, see a draft counselor

Elvis Given Narc Badge

WASHINGTON (LNS)--Elvis Presley, the great rock singer whose defiant style helped signal the beginnings of youth rebellion in the middle fifties, has been given a special honorary federal narcotics badge by special order of President Nixon.

Deputy Narcotics Director John Finlator had invited Presley to tour the Narcotics Bureau offices, in hope of enlisting his influence in Presley asked Finlator if he could be given a Narcotics Bureau badge. Finlator explained that unfortunately, that was impossible.

Elvis swallowed his disappointment, but later, while speaking to President Nixon, he asked the President if maybe he could arrange it. Nixon said of course and immediately had a Narcotics Bureau badge ordered for Elvis. In his excitement, the singer hugged Nixon. When Finlator arrived to bring Elvis the badge, and promised to issue him special "consultant" credentials, Elvis was reportedly overcome with emotion.

Six Months For A Flag

BOSTON (AP)-The state Supreme Court said Wednesday that 21-year-old Valerie Goguen of Leominster must serve out the remainder of a six month jail sentence for wearing the U.S. flag stitched to the seat of his pants.

The court upheld the conviction and sentence imposed in a Worcester Superior Court trial on Goguen, who was arrested in January, 1971, on the Main Street of Leominster and charged with showing contempt for the flag.

Goguen contended wearing the flag on his pants constituted "symbolic speech" and was protected under the First Amendment right to freedom of speech.

The court did not accept that argument. It said in its ruling, "His communication, if any, was so thoroughly inarticulate as to lack the slightest redeeming social value."

Goguen, convicted originally in Ap[illegible]ved eight days of his term in Worcester County House of Corr[illegible]tion before he was freed pending a decision on the appeal to the S[illegible]preme Court.

The Sound Of Music

Though philosophically we disagree with the Adminstration's rulings of two days ago with regard to a spring concert, we are forced to recognize that they have many valid points; points which we are unable to dispute. The issues have been explained in depth in other articles in the Collegian , so we won't go into them here. However, the reasons for discouraging a concert of the caliber of last year's held by Bowditch Lodge escape us.

It may seem that the problems associated with the successful operation of a concert are insurmountable; however, the spring concerts of last year were conducted in an orderly and relatively problem-free manner. With this in mind, then, we are strongly in favor of conducting a concert comparable in size and talent as the one held last spring.

According to Dave Poisson, last year's Concert Committee chairman, money is still left in last year's committee account. Skip Olmstead reported the amount to be roughly 3,000; some $6,000 was removed from the account recently for the purchase of the SES Company. It now looks as though the Senate will not be buying SES, in which case the monies would be returned to the account. If this should happen, we suggest that the Senate return the money to the Concert Committee for use in the production of a concert this spring.

Questions have also been raised as to whether or not the Administration has been leading on members of the Concert Committee. It is felt by some, if not all, of the members that the decision not to have a concert was made long ago by the administration. This decision was not reported to the committee in an alleged effort to prevent appeals and re-negotiations on behalf of the concerts. Although this may well not be true, we feel it is one of the facts of the concert negotiations that warrants clearing up.

Who Is Howard Hughes?

WASHINGTON--There is far more at stake in the Howard Hughes-McGraw Hill-Life magazine affair than whether Mr. Hughes did or did not sell his autobiography for publication.

The American people, who have been reeling from one credibility crisis to another, are now being asked to decide whether two of the most distinguished publishing companies in this country or one of the richest men in the world are telling the truth.

The evidence is strong on both sides. Howard Hughes in his famous telephone interview says there is not a shred of truth in it. McGraw Hill and Life both insist they have the real thing and plan to go ahead and publish the autobiography no matter what Mr. Hughes says.

The problem for the public, which up until this time has remained neutral, is that Mr. Hughes is such a mystery man that we don't even know what he looks like any more, and it's causing tremendous paranoia in everyone's home.

For example the other night my family was watching the news, and suddenly Hubert Humphrey came on the screen to announce he was once again a candidate for President.

"You know," my wife said, "it's funny, but I get the feeling that that isn't really Hubert Humphrey."

"How can you say that?" I said, looking closer at the screen.

"Suppose," she said, "just suppose, that person was Howard Hughes."

"Impossible," I said. "I know Hubert Humphrey. That's his voice. Besides why would Howard Hughes want to be Hubert Humphrey?"

"Nobody knows why Howard Hughes does things," she said. "It would be a perfect disguise for him. Everyone would think he was locked up in the Bahamas, and all the time he would be going around the country making speeches and meeting people and looking for new things to invest in."

"I can't believe it," I said, with my face pressed as close to the screen as I could get it.

"Well, we all know Humphrey has no money. It's very interesting that he would announce for President right after Howard Hughes denied he had sold his autobiography."

"I'm sure it's just a coincidence," I said. "You have to come up with something more concrete than that."

By then Hubert Humphrey had faded from the screen, and after a commercial we were shown films of Sheik Mujibur Rahman being welcomed in Bangladesh by his supporters.

My wife said, "Did you notice his fingernails?"

"What's wrong with his fingernails?" I said.

"They're short. Howard Hughes said in his press conference that he had short fingernails."

"Lots of people have short fingernails. Wait a minute. You don't think Sheik Mujibur Rahman is Howard Hughes?"

"I'm not saying he is, and I'm not saying he isn't. But look at his hair. Howard Hughes said he cuts his own hair. The sheik looks as if he cuts his own hair, too."

"You're going bonkers," I said.

"Well, why didn't he say that he wasn't the sheik in the interview?"

The news program went to another commercial and then gave an interview with Ralph Nader. I watched my wife carefully. Finally she shook her head and said, "No, he's too young."

The final segment of the show showed pictures of Africa, natives dancing, drums beating and eventually the camera closed in on Mrs. Richard Nixon wearing a native dress and a towering headdress.

My wife sat up in her chair and said, "Of course. Why hadn't I thought of it!"

"My God," I cried. "You don't think Pat Nixon is really Howard Hughes?"

She just smiled. "I'm not ruling it out. Everyone knows the real Mrs. Nixon hates to fly."

A Look At Nepotism

The University's nepotism policy has been involved in a number of issues over the years, the latest being the Salzman case at UMass Boston. There have also been indications that a similar problem is about to surface here, so it was thought that a look at the past and present trustees' rulings on nepotism would be of value at this time.

First, in 1962 the University was granted autonomy in certain areas by the Massachusetts legislature. One of these areas involved nepotism and hiring practices. Therefore the usual policy concerning state employees is irrelevant to the University system. We are only concerned with Trustee rulings and decisions handed down by the Universities' Presidents.

Starting back in 1963 under President Lederle, Trustee on Faculty and Program and Study, discussed the problem and agreed that because it was becoming increasingly difficult to hire only one member of a family, where both are academically qualified for collegiate teaching.

At a meeting of the Trustee Committee on Faculty and Program of Study in December of 1963 nepotism was brought up and discussed. The University President, then John Lederle, explained to the Committee that, "there is a growing difficulty in hiring only one member of a husband and wife family where both family members may be professionally qualified for collegiate teaching. A basic problem is to avoid hiring of such teams within the same department, although exceptional circumstances such as a Dr. and Madam Curie, might warrant special consideration." The minutes of the meeting then record "The president indicated that he may be required to exercise discretion when confronted with tenure proposals involving individuals in the same family so long as their appointments are in different departments. In view of the fact that we have a great need for qualified faculty...it may be necessary to decide these cases on an individual basis in order to maintain the quality and continuation of certain University programs."

The consensus of the committee was the "The President should use discretion in handling this type of situation." In other words probably no members of the same family would be hired by the University except in "exceptional circumstances", no matter whether or not they were in the same department. Also, the President of the University was given power to do whatever he wished with each case.

The committee then changed their name to the "Faculty and Educational Policy Committee" and in June of 1967 again considered the subject of nepotism. It was stated that, "certain rare exceptions should be made from time to time involving unusually qualified husband and wife teams, both of whom are proven scholars and both of whom have held professional posts in other universities of quality." This is basically the same statement made in 1963, though perhaps could be interpreted as presenting a slightly more favorable attitude towards the hiring of husband and wife teams in the same department. No mention was made of husband-wife teams working in different departments.

Now we have the Trustees latest statement, as of December, 1971. What follows is not a policy statement, but a motion that was voted on and passed by the entire Board of Trustees.

While the statement doesn't mention nepotism it does say, "that the principal criteria for decisions...shall be demonstrated qualifications for, or performance of the duties and responsibilities of the position involved."

So what we have is a statement that a husband and wife team not be employed by the University except in the case of academic excellence on the part of both, and a motion that says performance should be the basic factor in any decision concerning the hiring and firing of University employees. The two statements seem to create an ambiguity that, as has been seen by recent events, needs clarification.

A Good Student; The New Critic

(Editor's Note: This is the fourth in a series on Teacher Evaluation.)

By NICK APOSTOLA

The history of Teacher Evaluation programs on this campus, and almost any other campus, is one of student initiated programs. They were started by the hands of students and died when they lost interest or graduated, as every good student does.

The first was a very silly evaluation that appeared in the College of Arts and Sciences in 1959. What they did was to write essays about the faculty; it was sketchy and not very reliable. It died a slow death in about two weeks.

In 1964 Mark Cheren, another student, started a subjective evaluation booklet; it was called "Critic." What they did was to publish essays compiled from comments made about a teacher by his students. There was no statistical analysis conducted, so there could be no guarantees about the truth of the evaluations; but they were something to guide the students. The program lasted for about two years until Mark Cheren left, when it died.

That was the last heard about Teacher Evaluation until Tom Filmore was appointed Chairman of the Academic Affairs Committee in May of 1970. At that time he set out to establish an evaluation system that would be reliable and that students could use for information.

Filmore started out by holding meetings to get a staff. He held four meetings, with three people showing up at each; a friend who was also working on the experiment, and the Collegian reporter who was very interested. After those enormous successes, he decided that the only way he was going to get a staff was if he hired one. It was at this point that he asked and received from the Provost enough money to hire a staff. Filmore had already been given money by the Student Senate to operate the Office and to publish a book.

He developed his own form and started evaluating sections in the fall of 1970. The Office of Teacher Evaluation continued until this semester when students again have decided to discontinue the service. The reason this time is that the Academic Affairs Committee has decided that it is about time that the Administration take over what they should have been going all along. It should have never been the responsibility of students to initiate an evaluation program of the faculty hired by the Administration. This is not to say that they shouldn't ask the student what they think of the faculty; there is no other way of evaluating teachers except to ask the ones being taught.

The students have started the program, and now it is time for the Administration and the faculty to follow up. The Administration should be finding the money and hiring the staff to operate a large and efficient office, something that this will demand. And the faculty should stop trying to block evaluation and should start trying to make an Office of Teacher Evaluation and Improvement work. It is in their best interests. They should work to achieve what will be of use to them rather than have something which is of use to no one imposed on them.

Letters To The Editor

Two Way Street

To the Editor:

To say that I, along with other students that I have talked to, was disappointed to hear the news about the spring concert would only serve to corroborate UMass' nickname as a "hotbed of apathy." I was outraged to hear Dr. Gage's concern for his little concrete baby. Alumni Stadium is not made out of paper mache and will surely survive through a concert.

What I really find difficult to believe is that after being FORCED to pay, like every other first year student, a $10.00 Physical Education Fee, and the "Athletic Fee" (paid by all student's) among many other indirectly related fees, I, as a student, am being refused use of the very facilities which I support, but otherwise never use.

As far as I can tell, a very well planned proposal has been presented to the administration. It is not a privilege to be allowed occasional use of the facilities, as Dr. Gage seems to think. It is our right to use, in a responsible manner, what we help to support. Our support for facilities is not voluntary, it is obligatory. The administration's cooperation on their use, therefore, should also be obligatory.

Play It Again

To the Editor:

As today's college students' social views are changing, so are those of campus Greeks who are unjustly cast as "cliquey," "rah-rah," etc. The ratio of Greeks to Independents has decreased considerably in the past few years, but those involved in the Fraternity-Sorority system truly appreciate and derive much from the Greek life style. The novelty, status, and social security no longer exists as in the past.

Being a Greek is an opportunity to be involved, to live and enjoy times with people who will identify with one another, while they express themselves as the individuals they want to be and remain.

Being a brother or a sister means establishing relationships with individuals having streaks of common traits AND differences. Greek living is a kind of communal living based on the meaning of people as well as exchanges and Hell Week. True, all of the ideals of love, friendship, and unity are not always upheld because we are human and at times, can disappoint each other. Realizing this and coping with it is a lesson in living.

The Greek Rush deserves a good look and a fair chance by many students on this campus. You may start thinking that you can't always believe everything you hear.

Secure The Heads

To the Editor:

This is in response to the recent decision to all but abort the possibility of a spring concert.

The "most effective means of security", as suggested by Mr. Scanlon, was one "similar to a technique used by U.R.I. A pattern using three police-bound perimeters must be passed through in order to gain entrance to the stadium." The first proposal called for an "outer snow fence on the north and south sides of the ten foot barbed wire fence surrounding the stadium, along with a security patrol awaiting and expecting climbers..."

It's nice to see that the impression imprinted upon the UMass student is not offensive. Anyway, with such meticulous strategy, it seems that the question of security has been taken well into account.

Dr. Gage also stated that such a concert would only give the campus a name, whether good or bad. And what of it? I, for one, would be proud to say that UMass is holding a spring concert, which I also believe would take place in good taste.

Therefore, rather than let the students show what is often called student apathy, I ask for your support in favor of Bill Staton and company in continuing their work on this issue.

No Way

To the Editor:

It was nice. Well, it was O.K. The food was generally bad, but what can you expect. At least, thank god, it was quiet. Blissful, relaxing silence. Sigh. Indigestion is a fair price to pay for a quiet meal at days' end. Few people were there--something had to be done to increase patronage--better food????

Progress!! A bar!!!! Cocktails by the pitcher. Slurp. Slurp. Two (2) television sets. Dark lights, Money is rolling in!! A successful experiment. But last night, even more progress--a 12 by 12 FOOT T.V. screen blaring the news out through auditorium size speakers. Wonderful. Of course the two (2) sets in the "bar" were blaring out also--on different channels, of course. Of course. Media, media. All sorts of media bouncing off the Potatoes O'Brien, and the meager deli sandwiches, etc. Constant stimulation. More Progress.

Farewell Blue Wall--or did they change the name too?

Last Week

British army - 13; Demonstrators - 0. That was the score after Sunday's demonstration in Belfast, Ireland. Foreign troops, occupying a subject territory, ostensibly to keep the peace, while murdering the civilian population. Shocked calls for an impartial investigation by those ultimately responsible. An unpopular government, tied hook, line, and wallet to a foreign imperialist power. Independent political and military organization progressing along parallel lines among the subject population. Sound familiar?

The British army claims to have come under fire before unleashing the barrage Sunday that left the street littered with 13 dead and 16 wounded--all Irish. Only the army heard the sniper fire. Why were there no soldiers killed in the alleged surprise attack? Apparently British soldiers are trained to detect sniper fire in much the same way as the Ohio national guard.

Rather than having thrown back the struggle of the Irish people, Sunday's massacre has steeled the population in implacable resistance to internment, to British occupation, to the Stormont government, and to British rule. Former Irish moderates and liberals have, due to the inevitable advance of historic circumstances, become embittered fighters for Irish freedom. As in American history, when the reform slogan of "No taxation without representation" gave way under frustration and political pressure to the revolutionary Declaration of Independence, the Irish people have been welded, by the intransigence and brutality of the British government, into a concerted force, bent on complete independence.

Sunday in Ireland was a grim sequel to events in Rhodesia last week. The government of Ian Smith, in council with the British, attempted to impose an indefinitely extended legal sanction on racist white minority domination. Another imperialist effort to "win the hearts and minds" of a colonial people ended with death of many resisters.

The victorious people of Bengla Desh are beginning to rebuild, but the political-military situation remains tenuous. The Indian army is still there, and shows nosigns of leaving. The first act of Sheik Rahman, the recently released leader of the Awami League, was to call for the disarmament of the Mukti Bahini (Bengali liberation forces). If the Bengali people support the Awami League, then what has the Sheik to fear? The people of Bangla Desh are understandably angry; the captured West Pakistan soldiers were allowed to maintain their arms; the Indian army is, of course, well armed; and most of the present Awami League government spent the war in India, sipping tea while in consultation with the Indian government. The demand that the Bengalis disarm allows the capitalist press to characterize any resistence to disarmament as "left wing extremist terrorism", thus justifying any proposed repressive measures. The plight of the Bengalis is not over.

The mass slaughter of the Vietnamese, Cambodians, and Laotians goes on. The bombing continues. But the incredible resistance of those people grows. Their heroic determination and absolute confidence has never been shaken. Their historic example is being followed in Ireland, Bengla Desh, Rhodesia, South Africa, Latin America, Ceylon, and Palestine. From Newark to Cairo, Ill., America is hearing the rumble. Unsuccessful attempts to imprison a spirit are made from the "tiger cages" of South Vietnam to Palo Alto, California.

It is extremely difficult in a brief editorial to give even a glimpse of the wide and expanding world revolution. Columns to follow will deal with some of these events in greater depth. But for now, a quick overview should give cause at least for thought; thought on the role of U.S. capitalism in world politics, and the tasks that places on us, here in the heartland of imperialism. It is, here at UMass, deceptively quiet.

Shredni Vashta

Talk to me my Queen.
I've sat to hear you purr:
Your constant prowling to and fro' entranced me years and years ago.
When you stop to stare beside me,
Are there thoughts within you that don't show?
I swear, you act as though you're waiting for an answer, the question how to ask you do not know.
Impatiently implying that it's I who fails to understand the wherefor of the star crossed eyes within your head, and how for years they manage still to glow.
Set aside my words and fill my mind with thoughts of softly singing morning birds
Dear fetine, so gently soft fur-lined, reveal to me the bible in your heart.
If the world leaves no place where to go, tell me first...I'll be the first to start anew.
I'll search behind your searching yellow yes
I'll search behind your searching yellow eyes for some tapping, heartly beating, wordless code.
I'll crack the door a bit to let the breeze to rush upon us and around us as it flies
You will stop your prowling long enough to stare at me impatiently and ask me why
I'll wonder what you're thinking of, but turn away in my frustration, in my foreign deafness...in my false disguise.
Lost beginning happiness will hang suspended there between us, waiting to begin, to ask us why.
How we will to answer, we'll just turn and stare, I, prowling, purring, you.
Talk to me my Queen.
I will take your soundless words and paint them endless pictures on my eyes.
Photographs to ponder in my sleep...

Stories with their meanings much too deep.
The rimes and how you pace will now or later enter into all the problems that we always somehow seemed to fail to face.
Weren't we once together thinking how your thoughts might possibly be sheltered from without us from within, and how the spaces in the walls that were your cageon home might must as sure be filled with emptiness that steals the soundless words that hopelessly begin to float to me, but don't because they're caught among the branches of some spider's web?
Nothing you say is bound to incite me
the way your eyes do invite me.
Might you be sleep-walking, emptily sleep-talking...talk to me my Queen.
Sleep-fill my wanting brain.
I've never been more tired...more alone...
more content to sit before your throne, and watch you while you prowl, and watch me while I watch you while you purr.
Listen, Shredni Vashta, while I speak your lonely name...how long do you plan to keep me locked outside your cageon home?
How long do you plan to keep me outside of the glow within your eyes?
When, if ever, do you plan to talk to me my Queen?
When, if ever, will you please release me from your side?
When will I be let into your confidence enough to let me understand your presence in my pacing mind... your meaning in my life?

I used to sit...What hours disappeared along the way. Before the start of every day... before the shine or endless rain.

I'd dress but starve my self, and sit with you to feed my selfless brain.
Clouds might hide the sun or not,
there is no sun as far as I'm concerned.
I'm up before it's up on one side,
I'm down before it's down the other...
in and out and in before it's out again.
My stool is worn to rocking on one side,
the end of which your cageon home now hides.
Were it tipping to and fro',
the listing toward each changing, the changing of the pacing where you go,
I'd roll my head to left and right,
my eyes reflecting yours behind their glow.
Whatever happenings within you,
I'm sure my mind will let me know.
Were you listening yesterday evening when I asked you of your name?
Shredni Vashta is peculiar... unique within its godly frame.
Tell me how you came before me,
how you're me while I not am.
I somehow feel alone without you,
as if I really am not here.
Could it be quite possibly that you are but a part of me?
Or just an early destination... someone I shall soon become...
a premature reincarnation?
The pacing that you do, will I?
The sun I do not see, will you?
The yellow from your shining, searching eye
Will my sun become that yellow glow?
Must we be but halves unknown until one or the other's gone?
Can our secrets not be shared
'til one of us is left, alone?
Answer, please, these pressing thoughts.
Please talk to me my Queen.

UMass Student Found Guilty In Counterfeit License Case

NORTHAMPTON — A 20-year-old University of Massachusetts student and a Northampton teenager were both found guilty on possession of counterfeit license charges Tuesday in Northampton District Court in connection with this State's first color photo license counterfeit ring.

Special Justice Raymond R. Cross imposed a $200 fine and six-month sentences to the Hampshire County House of Correction on Kevin Moriarty, 18, of 8 Fourth Ave., Northampton.

Philip F. Riley of Lowell, a UMass junior, was fined $300.

The cases of UMass sophomore Michele D. Cunningham of Revere, charged with counterfeit license possession, was continued to Monday.

Riley was bound over to the Hampshire County Grand Jury on charges by UMass Police of possession of marijuana and possession of marijuana with intent to sell.

Moriarty had his probation revoked on charges of breaking glass and assault and battery with a dangerous weapon and was ordered committed to the county jail for 9 months.

They both said they plan to appeal Judge Gross' decisions.

Riley's girl friend, Janet W. Friedman, a UMass sophomore from Brockton, pleaded guilty last month to four complaints of making counterfeit licenses in District Court and received suspended concurrent six-month sentences to the Hampshire County House of Correction.

Riley and Miss Friedman were both arraigned in Court on Nov. 28 while Miss Cunningham was arrested a week later by members of the Massachusetts Registry of Motor Vehicles special investigation section headed by Carl J. Catalano.

The investigation and subsequent arrest came as the result of a month long investigation. All three UMass students lived in John Quincy Adams dormitory on the university campus.

Miss Freidman admitted that she made the licenses for the procurement of alcoholic beverages and not for pure profit.

Catalano said the Registry was in favor of a suspended sentence because there was no real evidence that the licenses were used otherwise than for illegal procurement of liquor.

Montague Opposes Boston Garbage Dump Disposal

"We don't like the idea of having a dump in our backyard. But we'd rather have a dump in our backyard than a dump in our water supply, and Boston wants to put a dump in our water supply. We just don't buy that," says Joseph E. Bonnette, Chairman of the Board of Selectmen of Montague.

The Department of Public Works, at the suggestion of Reclamation Systems, Inc. (the only garbage-compacting company in Massachusetts) and the Boston and Maine Railroad, wants to use the 1,500 acre Montague Plains for the world's largest sanitary landfill. The Plains, 15 miles north of UMass, are owned by Charleston Waterfront Facilities, Inc., a subsidiary of the B&M.

From view of eastern Massachusetts, the idea is great. Boston would save $11.50 per ton of garbage and solve its trash problem for 15 or 20 years; RSI would get a contract worth about $5 million a year, and the bankrupt B&M would make money on hauling the garbage (about $18,000 a day) as well as selling the sand and gravel which now make up the Plains.

But Montague wants nothing to do with it. Dr. Ward Motts a hydrologist at UMass, and, recently, Kennedy of the Mass. Department of Natural Resources, Division of Water Pollution Control, have criticized the study done for Boston by Whitman and Howard for ignoring the threat of pollution of the water which the Plains now collect and purify. Some of that water supplies the town and private wells of Montague and neighboring town; some of it supplies the famous Fish Hatchery; some of it flows into the already-polluted Connecticut River. Once buried garbage begins to contaminate the underground rivers of Montague there is no known way to stop the pollution. Until Kennedy's attack on the DPW last week, no one in Boston would even admit the danger.

Despite some encouraging signs, however, Montague Plains are still threatened. The town has organized against the threat; they hired Dr. Motts to study the geological features and are looking for aid from the Environmental Defense Fund. They hope to raise $50,000 in order to pay for studies and possibly a court challenge to the DPW. Students, using the word DUMP (Don't Upset Montague Plains) for their slogan, have organized a massive petition campaign. The Coalition for Environmental Quality (CEQ) has copies of the petition.

S.W. Assembly Establishes Community Relations Board

By CHRIS WEST

A Southwest Community Relations Board and the University's policy of damage replacement were the main points discussed as the Southwest Assembly had its first meeting of the semester last Tuesday night.

At the beginning of the meeting, Charlotte Newell was elected to the post of treasurer, succeeding Lon Dexter, who resigned. Previously Pat Zuch had been elected to the position of treasurer to replace Cindy Hopkins, who also resigned.

The Southwest Community Relations Board, according to the bill as passed, would consist of a permanent membership of three undergraduate residents, one Administrative Services representative, one Director's Office representative and one Staff representative.

The people collectively will be accorded the status of an individual living in Southwest, thereby being accorded all the rights and privileges this position has.

The functions of this board as conceived would be many and varied. Among the functions would be for the SWCRB to act in the person of its six permanent members as an ombudsman who will hear complaints or suggestions from any member of the Southwest community affecting personal or community welfare. The board will be able to respond in a community relations fashion to these complaints and suggestions and it can make appropriate referrals where the matter is best addressed elsewhere.

The board will refer to the Southwest judiciary the cases falling under the heading of "Endangering". This category includes throwing objects from dorms, especially the towers, improper use of BB guns, pellet guns, air guns, firearms, knives, and other weapons, fireworks, the taking of screens off windows, hanging objects out of the windows, and theft of University and personal property.

The list is not limited to these cases and also includes all behavior potentially injurious to the health and safety of the members of the Southwest community.

The Assembly in later business voted to send a letter to the proper authorities demanding the replacement of all broken or damaged articles in the dorms as it is University policy that retribution for damages by students must be immediately paid, but the University does not fix the damage equally as fast.

During the meeting the Assembly also voted to subsidize the silver-smithing colloquium to be held in George Washington lower.

In earlier meetings the Assembly passed a bill that called for the recycling of the tremendous amount of paper that the group uses. It also passed a bill which brought into existence the Southwest Tenants Association. The members of this organization are all the people living in Southwest. Its purpose is to serve as a negotiating body for rents, to promote the community in Southwest, to serve as a liason between tenant and landlord and to fund community development programs.

Pres. Wood To Participate In Minority Problems Forum

CAMBRIDGE (AP) — A national forum that will focus on the problems of blacks and other minority groups will be held at Harvard University April 5-7, it was announced Wednesday.

The conference, aimed at restructuring national priorities to meet the problems, is expected to draw 500-700 persons, including national and community leaders in education, law, employment, housing, health and communications.

The forum is being sponsored by the 13-member Black Congressional Congress, Harvard's Institute of Politics and four newspapers.

The invitation to the conference reads:

"Black America and White America are more separate and more unequal than ever. The American Dilemma is not a relic of history. It deeply disturbs our present and is a grave menace to our future.

"Neither blacks nor whites can afford to let the dilemma worsen. We must continue to talk about it, to call attention to it and to try to do something about it."

The Black Congressional Caucus will present position papers which will serve as the take-off point of the forum.

Among those who have said they will participate are: Dr. John Knowles, president-elect of the Rockefeller Foundation; Edgar F. Kaiser, chairman of the board of Kaiser Industries Corp.; Dr. Robert Wood, president of the University of Massachusetts; the Rev. Jesse Jackson, national president of the newly formed People United to Save Humanity; and Ramsey Clark, former attorney general of the United States.

Welfare Department $18 Million Richer

GREENFIELD, Mass. (AP)-The state Welfare Department collected $13 million in 1971 under a new, get-tough crackdown to force absent fathers to support their welfare children, according to John R. Thompson, western Massachusetts regional supervisor for the department's support unit.

Thompson said Tuesday the $1.7 million was collected in the four western Massachusetts counties last year: $1.8 million in Hampden, $740,000 in Berkshire, $280,000 in Franklin and $220,000 in Hampshire.

"We're out to get nonsupporting fathers to support their families, "It's as simple as that," said Thompson.

He said when the crackdown began in July 1970, there were 1,250 fathers in the four western counties contributing support to children receiving additional welfare aid. Today, he said, there are 3,350 fathers.

He said 145 AFDC Aid For Dependent Children cases, representing a total cash outlay of $35,000 a month, have been closed out due to the crackdown.

He estimated that 80 per cent of all AFDC cases could be removed from the rolls if father were caught and made to pay. That would mean 8,000 of the 10,000 AFDC cases in western Massachusetts.

He predicted that savings to taxpayers would be tripled over the next few years, due to the support unit's work, resulting in a $40 million saving.

Representative of the amounts collected from nonsupporting fathers, he said, were $371,818 repaid in Springfield last year, $199,235 in Pittsfield and $160,000 in Holyoke.

He said under a new state law, the department does not need permission to go to court to force fathers to pay. Most of the collected payments are coming as the result of court orders for support and back payments.

Poll Shows McGovern Behind

CONCORD, N.H. (AP)-Sen. George McGovern broke from the Democratic presidential gate first, but finds himself running with the field as the track comes into view.

In a poll copyrighted by the Boston Globe last month, Sen. Edmund Muskie outstripped McGovern by 65 per cent to 18 per cent.

The poll was made by the Becker Research Corp., which telephoned 945 New Hampshire residents who said they planned to vote in the March 7 primary.

"I really wasn't too surprised by it," McGovern said Wednesday. "I'd say, as far as polls go, it wasn't too far off.

"But I don't think polls are of much use in primaries. In general elections, though, they're usually pretty close to right."

In the Globe poll, Los Angeles Mayor Sam Yorty received 6 per cent, Sen. Vance Hartke of Indiana one per cent and under-aged candidate Edward Coll of Hartford, Conn., one per cent.

Other candidates received one per cent and 8 per cent said they were undecided.

Asked if Sen. Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts had indicated any support for him, McGovern replied lightly, "Well, he just gives me free advice."

He said he did not expect Kennedy, who has been as busy removing his name from primary ballots across the nation as the battery of Democratic contenders have been trying to get their names on, to make any support statements before the convention in Miami in July.

McGovern restated his opposition to continued high spending on the space program. "I think that money should be diverted to more pressing needs, such as cleaning up pollution and creating transit systems in the cities," he said.

He referred to the space shuttle program recently endorsed by President Nixon as "an unnecessary frill" of the space program.

McGovern was to leave New Hampshire Wednesday night for Chicago.

Tonsils Tied In Red Tape

MADISON, Conn. (AP)-A 19-year-old Air Force enlistee says he'd been trying to get rid of his tonsils for the last four months, but all the Air Force does is tie them up in red tape.

Airman 1.c. Michael R. Dyer of Madison went to Westover Air Force Base in Massachusetts Tuesday in his latest attempt to have his tonsils removed. This time, after a call to his congreeman, he thinks he may be successful.

It started, Dyer says, during his 12-month tour of duty in Southeast Asia as an Air Force welder. After nine months in Vietnam he went to Thailand and was soon hospitalized. He said at one point he was unable to swallow water because of swollen tonsils.

Dyer says he was given penicillin and a recommendation for immediate surgery while in Thailand, but was told doctors there didn't have the equipment for surgery. They told him to seek an operation at a military hospital in Vietnam of the Phillipines, he said.

Dyer's mother, Mrs. Thomas Dyer Eimutus of Madison, says the Air Force "postponed" those recommendations, though, and instead assigned her son to a base in Michigan and sent him home on a 30-day leave.

When he got home last week, she said, the family tried to contact local military authorities. An Air Force recruiter in New Haven told them to go to the nearest service base, but the Navy's submarine base in Groton said they didn't have the right equipment, she says.

The sub base recommended the nearby Coast Guard Academy in New London, but there the surgeon was on leave and had a heavy schedule, they were told.

So Mrs. Eimutus took her son to a family doctor-who, she says, told her son the tonsilitis was very bad and switched him from penicillin to another antibiotic.

She says they made an appointment for Wedsday at Yale-New Haven Hospital in New Haven, but then the doctors there told her they'd need permission from military authorities at Dyer's next post, Sawyer Air Force Base in Michigan.

They couldn't reach the proper authorities at the base, Mrs. Eimutus says.

"My son's condition was getting worse," she said. "He has red spots developing on his feet, bronchitis and galloping pink eye."

The next inquiry was to the Red Cross which suggested Westover. There, too, they couldn't contact the right authorities, Mrs. Eimutus says, but they got some help after calling Congressman Robert N. Giaimo.

Tuesday morning Dyer was called by Dr. James Worth, a throat specialist at Westover, and the young airman left for the base Wednesday morning.

According to Mrs. Eimutus, Werth told her son he may have become so weak during the long wait that he'll need two more weeks before he's strong enough for the operation.

Saagpakk Assisted By Professor Jarvesoo

By MICHAEL FOX

In the December 7 issue of the Collegian, Paul F. Saagpakk of the English Department was cited as "The Noah Webster of Estonia" for his work on an Estonian-English dictionary. It was recently learned that a close collaborator to Saagpakk was also a member of the UMass faculty.

Prof. Elmar Jarvesoo, a member of the Department of Agricultural and Food Economics, has been associated with Saagpakk and his lexicographic efforts since the early 1950's. Jarvesoo produced the first volume of Saagpakk's dictionary, published in 1955, with his name listed as one of the technical advisors to the author.

Soon after the idea of the dictionary was conceived and a need for it ascertained, Saagpakk contacted Jarvesoo as an expert in the fields of agriculture, agricultural economics and economics.

Jarvesoo has also contributed by proposing additional Estonian language reference words for includsion in the dictionary, and verifying the accuracy of other translations.

Jarvesoo explained to the MDC that Saagpakk has also acknowledged expert help from other Estonian specialists, including a linguist, a specialist on Estonian literature, an historian and a medical doctor.

"Color Painting" Exhibition At Amherst

The phenomena of human color perception as practiced by artists of the last fifteen years will be the focus of a Color Painting exhibition at Amherst College.

The showing will be in the Mead Art Building through Friday, March 3. Viewing hours at the museum are from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

A joint venture between the Art Department and the staff of Problems of Inquiry 3, the introductory general education course in the natural sciences at Amherst College, the exhibition is an effort to extend students' experience somewhat beyond scientific particularity to an applied realm: the eccentric and synthetic uses of the phenomena of human color perception.

Infections Due To Drug Ban?

WASHINGTON (AP)-At least 23 hospitals across the country have reported infection outbreaks in their nurseries since they stopped washing babies with hexachlorophene, a top level meeting of federal officials and baby doctors was told today.

An outbreak is defined as two or more cases of staphylococcal skin infections which, in rare instances, can prove fatal if bacteria spread into the bloodstream.

A Food and Drug Administration spokesman said the one common factor in all 23 hospitals is that they stopped washing babies with a three per cent hexachlorophene solution after a government warning of possible health hazards late last year.

The hospitals were not immediately identified, but the spokesman said at least eight were university-affiliated.

The infection reports were gathered in a nationwide survey begun Jan. 19 by the National Center for Disease Control NCDC in Atlanta.

The FDA spokesman said there were indications that hospitals had misunderstood the government warning, and had also discontinued using hexachlorophene to scrub the hands of doctors and nurses who handle newborn infants.

The meeting brought together 24 persons representing the FDA, the NCDC, the Environmental Protection Agency and the American Academy of Pediatrics to discuss the problem and consider recommendations to overcome it.

Price Investigation Asked

SPRINGFIELD (AP)-A group of 20 companies owning 250 supermarkets in Massachusetts has asked the price commission to investigate rising food prices.

COSMA, Inc., standing for Consumer-Oriented Super Market Association, representing about 40 per cent of the total food business in the state, formed a year ago to let the public know that food suppliers and distributors are responsible for hikes in grocery prices.

In a letter sent Tuesday, COSMA asked the Price Commission to stabilize and roll back food prices.

It listed 320 items whose prices have increased since the state of Phase 2, and asked if the increases should have been allowed.

Western Massachusetts members are Food Marts, Inc. of Holyoke, Big Y of Chicopee, and Adams Super Markets in the Berkshires.

Portland Fires Coach

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP)-The Portland Trial Blazers, facing low team morale and a dismal record in their second National Basketball Association season, fired head coach Rolland Todd Wednesday.

He was replaced for the remaining 26 games of the season by Stu Inman, director of player personnel. The search for a new coach started immediately, the club said.

Harry Glickman, executive vice president, said in announcing the change, "I have always said my only reason for firing a coach would be if he lost control of his players. I believe that is the situation in which we find ourselves."

Although Glickman said no specific incident prompted the firing, it came just hours after a loss to Phoenix in a game marked by protests from two players.

Sidney Wicks, rookie All American from UCLA, played little defense in the game, ignored Todd during timeouts and on one occasion talked and laughed with a Phoenix player after a free throw.

Wicks and Charles Yelverton rookie from Fordham, who sat during singing of the National Anthem Tuesday night, were protesting the placing on waivers of Willie McCarter, Wicks' roommate.

Earlier in the season, Wicks and Geoff Petrie, co-rookie of the year in the NBA last season, said the team was not playing together and had low morale.

"Recent comments by our players are not responsible for this situation but did point out a problem that has bothered us for some time, namely the absence of discipline and communication between coach and players," Glickman said.

Portland has a 12-44 record this year after compiling a 29-53 mark as an expansion team last year.

Inman, head coach at San Jose State from 1955-66, has been with the Trail Blazers from the start. His primary responsibility has been player selection. He conducted basketball clinics around the world after leaving San Jose.

He agreed to act as interim coach on the condition "that he will return to his present position...and will not be considered for the coaching position permanently," Glickman said.

Faherty Sampling Interest In Women's Crew Proposal

Varsity Crew coach Mike Faherty is currently sampling interest in women's rowing on campus. Women's rowing is old hat at some schools like Wellesley and Smith but only recently have the larger public institutions begun the sport. Last year's women's nationals were held in Connecticut and attended by 20 clubs from locations as distant as Washington State and California.

Faherty is apprehensive about the proposed venture: "Women's rowing would certainly add another dimension to the sport at UMass. I have contacted a potential private donor to help support the effort. Initially, it would put a real strain on our equipment, but anything is possible. To dispel an misconceptions, we won't be looking for amazons, simply girls interested in a team sport in which previous experience or skill won't indiscriminately restrict their involvement."

Reportedly, the women's program could be managed under the auspicion of the UMass Rowing Association. Anybody interested in more information should contact Faherty in Room 211 Boyden, 52801, or drop down the Tank Room in WoPE during the afternoons and talk to some of the squad personnel.

BUT, WHERE WILL WE GET THE BATHING SUITS?--Pictured is the 1970 UMass crew team, who were the New England champs for that season. The latest proposal is to form a women's crew team. Taking a look at this successful, if less than mod, aggregation, a feminine crew might just do a lot to brighten up the Connecticut River.

Judo Team Repeats As N.E. Champs

On January 9th at Cabot Gymnasium at Northeastern University, the UMass Judo team successfully defended its status as New England Collegiate Judo team champions. Judokas from fifteen colleges participated in the event. In the finals, UMass defeated a strong and determined Northeastern University five-man team to win the championship.

Members of the UMass team consisted of brown-belters Carl Berger, Alan Spekin, Steve Foose, and Bob Tomolillo. Gary Norman, a white belt in Judo filled the fifth spot.

Each college would select a five-man team, and submit an order in which each man would fight. There were no weight or belt classifications in this type of tournament.

Judo is not only practiced as a sport, but as a means of mental as well as physical development. Anyone interested is invited to Boyden wrestling room Monday through Thursday nights from 7-8:30.

Because of limitations set by the Massachusetts Department of Safety, UMass student admissions to hockey games held in Amherst College's Orr Rink for the remainder of the year will be limited to 1200 persons. It will be necessary to stop admitting students when the tournstile counts reach that figure.

The understanding and cooperation of everyone concerned would be appreciated according to a request made by Amherst College.

Wrestlers Stun Springfield

By JOHN BOCK

Everybody has a Sword of Damocles hanging over his head at one time or another. Oklahoma had its Nebraska and Miami its Dallas. Rarely, though, does this Sword reappear in the same form every year, but for the past five years the UMass Wrestling team felt its presence whenever the match with the Springfield Chiefs rolled around.

Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Past is the key word as the Redmen grapplers handed the Chiegs their first defeat at the hands of a UMass wrestling team and thus accomplished a feat that is setting the New England wrestling world on its heels.

A few facts are in order to tell this tory that ended at the Memorial Field House Tuesday night. Fact 1) Springfield came into the match with a 10-2 record. Fact 2) UMass came to Springfield 4-5-1 and Fact 3) No matter how good the Redmen did in the New England Tournament they had never come close to beating Springfield in a dual match, i.e. Last year UMass first in the New Englands and the Springfield match went down the drain 27-8.

It almost looked like the same would happen again as Springfield picked up seven points in the first two bouts. Dave Amato, 118 pounder for UMass, got off to a slow start as Springfield's Meyer took him down twice. That did not keep Dave down as he came up to his feet and went back to work and had Meyer to the point where the tables could have been turned and the clock ran out.

At 126 Barry Godowsky ran up against the only man to accomplish the impossible for Springfield-beat a wrestler from Penn State (soon to be rated fourth in the nation) at the dual match wrestled at Penn State earlier this year. Fenton beat Weber of State and managed enough points against Barry to get four team points for Springfield.

Coming to rescue the hopes of the UMass fans was Russ Chateauneuf at 134 lbs. Russ, a little weak from cutting weight, did not wrestle an impressive first period but came on in the next two to leave Sugarmeyer of Springfield way behind at 11-8. Russ' Granby roll that helped him win State Champion and New England Schoolboy titles got him out and around for an escape and then a takedown. Score 7-3 Springfield.

Clay Jester came on with an excellent performance as he bested Madsen of the Chief's 5-2. Clay controlled the match from the second period and displayed remarkable riding skills as he reversed his man in the second period and rode for the rest of the match.

Shelly Goldberg, UMass Captain and the man the Springfield fans hate most, out-finessed Stan Sotherden 5-2 in the 150 lb. match. Cool and collected was the best way to describe Shelly as he took Sotherden down twice and showed him one has to be pretty tough to hold Shelly Goldberg down for any length of time. Shelly came off the victor and the gleam in his eye held the promise of things to come for Springfield.

And come they did as Chris Cadwallader won a tie by continuing the trend that UMass has established: Ride tough and if the man can't be turned over then get the point for riding.

Mike Duffy, Redmen 167 pounder, still felt the effects of a sideline first semester but showed Springfield that no matter how far he is down he always has a few tricks in his bag. These came in the form of a very nicely executed fireman's carry takedown from an escape situation. At this point Duffy almost pinned his man but lost the same. Score 13-11 Springfield.

Bruce Buckbee also displayed takedown and riding prowess as he beat LeRoy 4-0. Bruce set his man up from the start and once on the top worked so hard for the fall that LeRoy stalled the last period away keeping off his back. Bruce put UMass back in the lead 14-13.

John Connolly came on at 190 pounds and fell into an unfortunate five point move in the opening seconds of the bout but kept his head and rode his opponent out in the second period, escaped twice in the third and took his man down, and was on the way in a point shy of victory, for another when the buzzer sounded the end of the match and the entrance of the deciding bout.

At heavyweight for UMass was Carl "Drexel Hill" Dambman, defending heavyweight New England Champ. The Chiefs fielded Bob Hill, 250 pound freshman and two-time winner of the New York State Heavyweight title. A scoreless first period ensued but the crowd came jumping to their feet when Hill suplayed Carl right on his back and off the mat. Said Carl about the move that gave Coach and team alike heart failure, "I knew that we were off the mat so I just rolled with the move and knew that I could beat him right there." And beat him he did as Carl rode the hapless Hill out for more than four minutes with a "Coach Barr Ride".

That final bell was sweet music to some twenty happy wrestlers and the handful of fans that came to see UMass look respectable but saw instead the Sword of Damocles vanish for a long time.

Outstanding in the JV bout were John Mulvihill, 118 pound freshman from Melrose, who recorded a fall at 5:49. Steve "Tony" Rome, the pride of Springfield Classical High, demolished his opponent 10-2 and made the Springfield grapplers sorry that they ever let him practice with them. Chuck Myrglot pinned his man and Tom Callaghan decisioned his to make up the rest of the Little Redmen's points.

Hoopsters Home vs. UNH

Frosh Tap-Off At 6:00

By EARLE BARROLL

This is the time of season when the numbers on the won and lost sides of the record start getting bigger and bigger. What has gone unnoticed particularly since the beginning of this semester has been the UMass record which now stands at 10-5.

But during the next two games beginning tonight and continuing on Saturday afternoon on the ECAC game of the week on television, the Redmen will be facing teams with bigger numbers on the left side and smaller numbers on the right side and just to boot more numbers in the national team statistics.

What this all adds up to is problems for Jack Leaman as he and his Redmen embark on their toughest competitive stretch of the season.

New Hampshire, 11-4, is the opposition tonight at Curry Hicks Cage beginning at 8 p.m. And it can be assured that this will be unlike past Huskie teams. This year they are really a "team" and a good one at that.

This has been "the year of basketball revival" at UNH under the guidance of second year coach Jerry Friel and for the first time in many years the Wildcats are bearing down heavily on the Yankee Conference leaders, UMass.

Nationally UNH is fifth in team defense which will present a problem for UMass no doubt. They're small, on the size of last year's Fordham team and they have another similarity to them in that they press continuously. (That's where it ends.)

The Wildcats play a relentless type of ball and the player who makes them go is the biggest gunner of them all, 5'10 guard, Gary Farangy. According to freshman coach Fan Gaudette, "once he starts shooting he never stops, if they're falling he's awful tough, but if they're not, he'll still keep shooting."

Farangy joins returning center Dave Pemberton, 6'5, to form the UNH two-man offense. The other three starters are on the court, but this has been the UNH trademark this season. Farangy and Pemberton clear out to one side, Farangy picks off Pemberton. If he's clear he guns, if he's guarded he feeds Pemberton who takes it to the basket.

Leaman has a lot of respect for this team. "They're playing very well," he said, "but they have been off two weeks for exams and we have no idea if they've changed personnel or are doing something different on the court. So they could have a surprise for us or they could be unsharp.

"Coach Jerry Friel has done a good job and Pemberton is as good a ballplayer as there is in New England. What this team most reminds me of is the UMass team of four years ago and this scares me."

Syracuse is 13-3 and looking for revenge for last year's pounding they received at UMass when Julius Erving had 36 points and 32 rebounds. This game will be big both record wise and for the TV exposure both will be getting. The game begins at 2 p.m.

The Orange return four starters from last year's team and they're four excellent ballplayers. The two guards, Dennis Duval and Greg Kohls are one of the best tandems in the east. Kohls is in the top ten in scoring in the country at around 28 points per game. Both are quick and aggressive, they shoot extremely well and are big guards at 6'3.

The forwards are Mike Lee and Mark Wadach, both 6'3, and both returnees. Leaman pointed out that Lee was the only Orangeman who successfully took the ball to Erving last year.

Like UNH they're a zone team and they also use a full court and half court trap press.

The key to both games will be if UMass can handle the press. For the answer to game one go to Curry Hicks Cage tonight. And then tune in Saturday for the answer to game two.

Redmen Host Merrimack

By ALAN WRIGHT

The following is a short sequel concerning a pair of "Jacks" (not of the playing card variety). Think about it.

Hockey Coach Jack Canniff's team skated against a perenially powerful Vermont team in their last weekend game, before the largest crowd of the season. They played mediocrely and lost.

Basketball coach Jack Leaman and his ball club met nationally acclaimed Providence in their last weekend game before the largest crowd of the season. They, too, played mediocrely and lost.

However, in their next tilt on Monday night, the hoopers didn't let themselves get down, played a little better than mediocrely and beat Springfield College--a good team that's never known for being creampuffs, regardless of what sport they engage in.

Tonight, at 8:30 in miniature Orr Rink, the pucksters also get a chance to redeem themselves against a good team--Merrimack College, the small men's school from Andover, Mass. that is always noted for their hockey prowess.

Merrimack brings an 8-2-0 Division II record with them, as well as a 10-5-0 count overall. A couple of the big upsets that they have engineered were against Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute 1-0, and an overtime win against Bowdoin Tuesday night 5-4. On the other side of the statistics sheet, they have been weak at times, especially when Boston University beat them a while back 13-1. But, then B.U. beats almost everybody in hockey--even UMass 6-4 which of course is a much more respectable showing.

The major problem that the Redmen had to face in their last defeat was an outstanding Vermont goalie with glasses who stopped an ample supply of UMass shots. It's hoped that a more generous Merrimack man will mind the nets this evening.

Here are the top Redmen scoring leaders thus far this season:

Player	Goals	Assists	Total
Keenan	22	12	34
Reidy	6	14	20
Edwards	5	10	15
Riley	8	6	14
Bartholomew	2	11	13
Lowe	2	9	11
Coleman	5	5	10
Sullivan	3	7	10
P.J. Flaherty (goalie)	32 goals against	247 saves

Medeiros On WMUA

Be sure to tune into sports talk on WMUA, 91.1 FM at 10 p.m. Sunday night as Marty Kelley and Ken Best will host a discussion on the Athletic Council, currently one of the hottest issues on campus.

Only last Thursday the Faculty Senate defeated a motion which would have revised the makeup of the Council. However, a dispute over the validity of the vote has emerged, so that the question of student participation will not be resolved until the next meeting of the Senate, next Thursday, February 10.

Guests will include Lee Sandwen, President of the Student Senate, Professor George Richason, Chairman of the Athletic Council and Bob Medeiros, New Editor of the Collegian.

No JV Hockey

There will be no JV hockey game played at Orr Rink tonight. The varsity game remains on the schedule at the same starting time.

AHL Prophecy

The Boston Braves, who at one time were out of sight of the rest of the team in their division, are now just three points up on the Nova Scotia Voyageurs. Watch for the Vees to finish at least 10 points up on the Braves.

Tuition Hike Before Legislature

By MDC STAFF

Proposed tuition hikes at all state and community colleges, including UMass, were the subject of a Education Committee hearing of the State Legislature Wednesday.

Lee Sandwen testified in opposition to the bills. Also present at the hearing were members of the University and State Communications Council (USCC).

Two bills dealing with tuition were heard. The bills, sponsored by Represenative J. Laurence Golden and Representative Robert A. Belmonti, both from Framingham, are similar in nature.

The Golden bill suggested that students be made to pay between 40% and 60% of the total cost of their education. For the UMass student this would mean a tremendous jump in price.

At present the total predicted cost of an education at UMass Amherst is $2,400. If the Golden bill were to pass, it would mean that students would pay approximately $1,200 annually on tuition alone. All other fees--room, board and activities--would be added to this figure. The other bill advocates students pay between 35% and 55% of the cost of their education.

In stating his objections to the bills, Lee Sandwen emphasized the hardship and havoc higher tutions would create with students. Sandwen said, "Economic conditions within the Commonwealth have put increasing pressure on students, many more search for work than there is work available for; 81% of the students at UMass Boston work at least part-time throughout the year." Sandwen also stated that because UMass is a public institution, the school should serve those students and individuals who cannot financially afford to go to a private college.

In discussing a solution to the need for more money, Sandwen said, "Raising tuition should not be a way of raising money, the tax structure does a better job of this. Taxation should be used to solve the present inequity."

Also testifying in opposition to the bills was the President of Lowell State College. He stated that only 3% of students at Lowell come from families with incomes over $20,000 a year, while the rest fall far below this level.

Speaking in favor of raising the tuition rate was its sponsor, Representative Golden and a legislative council for the Massachusetts Taxpayers Association, Francis Keene. The Taxpayers Association was one of the prominent proponents of a tuition hike last year and they appear to be following the same line this year. Keene stated that as long as a substantial financial assistance program is instituted, all students should pay "their fair share" of educational costs. He stressed the point that his plan would provide for a comprehensive student financial aid program without further legislative appropriations. However, he failed to go into detail on how this would be accomplished.

Other tuition hearings are scheduled for March 7th. At this time the Education Committee will vote on whether to give the bills a favorable or unfavorable committee report.

Members of the Education Committee include Chairwoman Mrs. Mary Fonseca (D-Fall River), Michael Daly (D-Boston), Edward McColgan (D-Northampton) and Mrs. Ann Gannet (R-Wayland).

Panel To Discuss Campus Narcs

On Saturday, February 5, 1972 at 2:00 P.M. in Thompson 102, Room To Move will be sponsoring a panel discussion revolving around the use of undercover narcotics agents. The members of the panel will be District Attorney John Callahan, Judge Raymond R. Cross, Dean William Field, Dr. David Lewis, a nationally known figure in drug education, John Stevens, the originator of the Student Senate undercover agent bill, Attorney Richard Howland, E.T. Mellor (from Room To Move) and the moderator will be Peter Sherrard (from the Sylvan Area Human Relations Center).

The issues which will be dealt with will include: should undercover narcotics agents be used on the UMass campus; what are their objectives and what affects do they achieve on the drug traffic and on the community as a whole; what rights should the community have in the decision-making process of whether or not undercover agents should be used to control drug traffic; what other means of drug control are available and how would they compare; what kinds of community control would be possible and effective; the value of enforcing victimless crimes; should drugs be legalized and what is the scope of the drug scene here on campus. The format of the discussion will be fairly unstructured and questions from the floor will be encouraged.

Although we only received seven hundred and fifty (750) ballots on the undercover agent issue we feel that the eight to one ratio is fairly representative of the total student body. Six hundred and sixty five (665) people voted "no" on whether undercover agents should be used on the UMass Campus eighty five (85) people said "yes". Five of the people who said "yes" stipulated that only large pushers of heroin and speed should be arrested.

Of the people who said no we received some interesting results on the second question of what form of control would they endorse. One hundred and fifty two (152) people felt that there should be no form of control. Ninety three (93) people felt that education is the answer. Eighty (80) people maintained that community control would be best.

Individual control was endorsed by fifty one (51) people. Seventy one (71) people felt that drugs should be legalized. Forty seven (47) people maintained that treatment centers would handle the problem.

We're sure Saturday will be an interesting event and we at Room To Move urge all those interested to please attend.

Gene Shepherd On "The Finger" Monday

"You know the obscene sign one angry motorist makes to another with his finger? It's really an American art form, executed with the same skill and beauty of a Balinese dancer. And it's subtle. Only an American can understand it."

This is the voice of Jean Shepherd one of America's most interesting humorists. He has accomplished what most men dream of- he has succeeded in making a living by talking about whatever comes to mind. In Jean Shepherd's case, what comes to mind is an endless stream of colorful, usually convoluted tales that demonstrate and celebrate the hopelessness and haplessness of the human race and the total absurdity of life on earth. Through the fabrication of such yarns, grounded in experience but heavily embellished with imagination and fantasy, Jean Shepherd has become, in his late 40's, a sort of anti-establishment guru to a large cult of fans who cut across all age groups. Anyone who grew up anywhere seems to find a great deal in common with Jean's tales of growing up in a grimy steel mill town in the Depression, surrounded by his father's bowling balls and his mother's red cabbage and peanut-butter-and-jelly sandwiches, by friends with names like Flick and Schwartz and Farkas and girls with names like Daphne Bigelow, Wande Hickey and Josephine Cosnowski.

Besides broadcasting to a fanatically loyal WOR (New York) radio audience (aired in Amherst on WFCR at 11:00 p.m.), he has acted for Broadway and Hollywood, hosted his own TV show, conducted University seminars on humor and satire, and taught a graduate course in media communications at New York University. He has written numerous magazine articles for Playboy, Mademoiselle, and Car and Driver. But whatever the medium, Jean will have thousands of fans hanging on his every wacky word. Yet his less sophisticated fans describe him as weird and "demented", a misconception somewhat reinforced by his on-stage manner and occasional penchant for gross exaggeration. In this vein on his radio show, he yelled, "OH MY GOD, THIS IS FANTASTIC!!!" - a pronouncement he claims caused chaos at a girls' school in New Jersey. After hearing the remark, booming forth from dozens of radios and echoing through the courtyard, appalled housemothers allegedly conducted a room-by-room search for a solacious male.

Jean Shepherd will be performing at a Distinguished Visitors Program Monday the 7th of February at 8:00 PM in the Campus Center Auditorium. There will be no admission charge.

Consumer Council To Meet

The UMass Cooperative Extension Service and the State Consumers' Council will sponsor a Northeastern Conference on Unit Pricing at the UMass Campus Center March 13 and 14.

Co-chairmen of the conference are Professor Theodore W. Leed of the University's department of agriculture and food economics and Dermot P. Shea, executive secretary of the consumers' council.

The Northeastern states are being invited to send representatives from government, industry and consumer organizations. The states of Maryland and Connecticut and the City of New York, who have unit pricing laws, are expected to participate.

Massachusetts is the first state to pass a unit pricing law. It became effective January 1, 1971. The conference was prompted by requests from consumer organizations and industrial groups interested in promoting the uniform unit pricing laws and creating effective means by which to convey the value of unit pricing information to the consumer.

Shea said "Unit pricing is not only a fact but is the law in Massachusetts."

GOP Counters Muskie's Criticism

(ASSOCIATED PRESS) The Nixon administration, which moved rapidly this week to counter Sen. Edmund S. Muskie's criticism of the President's latest Vietnam peace move, will continue its criticism of the Maine senator's position at least one more day, a source close to the White House said Thursday.

Interior Secretary Rogers C.B. Morton is prepared to speak out against the Democratic presidential hopeful when Morton appears in New Hampshire Friday to help initiate the Nixon Re-election Committee's campaign there for the March 7 state primary election.

"He might be pretty tough on Muskie and will pretty much follow the position of the others," the source said.

The "others", beginning a matter of hours after Muskie's speech to 150 churchwomen, Wednesday, included White House Press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler, Defense Secretary Melvin R. Laird, several Republicans in Congress and William P. Rogers, the generally mild secretary of State who strongly denounced Muskie, Thursday.

Rogers labeled Muskie's Vietnam stand as "most inappropriate and harmful to the nation's interest."

He said it would encourage the Vietnam Communists to believe the U.S. public is divided over Nixon's offer and therefore would dissuade them from serious negotiations.

Muskie replied several hours later that "it is apparent that the other side will not accept the terms the administration has set. Hanoi's official newspaper said so last Saturday and today's developments in Paris comfirm it.

"I believe they would respond seriously to the terms I have suggested."

Muskie's attack on Nixon's eight-point peace plan announced last week apparently was seen in the administration as a political mistake to be exploited.

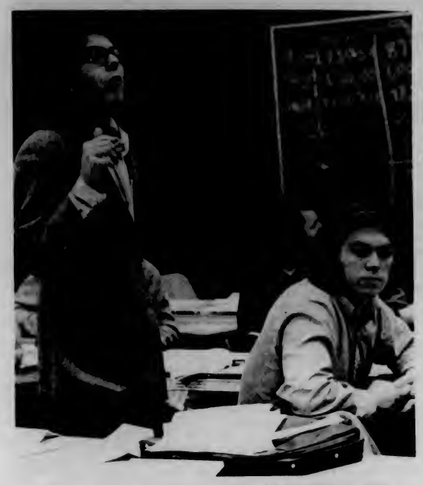
"I was obvious Muskie didn't do his homework," said a spokesman at the Committee for the Re-election of the President in Washington Thursday.

"It was inappropriate" Muskie had said the United States should set a firm date for withdrawal of all men and weapons, seeking in return only the safety of the withdrawing forces and a return of the prisoners of war.

Unlike Nixon, Muskie said he would not require a ceasefire agreement nor the President's other conditions of an over-all peace plan, including rules for free elections.

Muskie said the United States should only urge South Vietnam to reach some sort of political accommodation with all elements in the country.

In addition to Republican opposition to the statement, Democratic Sen. Henry M. Jackson of Washington, told a Washington audience, Thursday, in response to a question, "I was sorry to see Sen. Muskie take the position he did."



In an apparent reference to the escalation of the war under former President Lyndon B. Johnson, Jackson said, "The Democrats have a special responsibility to help get" the war over. He said some candidates "are treading on thin ice" in their opposition to Nixon's Vietnam policy.

SUG Board To Continue

By JOHN DONNELLY

On Thursday night the Student Union Governing (SUG) Board defeated a bill "to amend the constitution of the Campus Center Student Union Governing Board by deletion." The motion would have disbanded the SUG Board. The necessary two-thirds vote was not obtained, but the role call gave 9 affirmative and 7 negative votes leaving a majority in favor of the amendment.

The bill was raised by Phil Cohen, an ex-SUG Board member. Cohen did not think the bill would pass, but hoped that enough discussion would arise to help unify the Board. Rocky Hodgeson, SUG Board Vice President, added, "The bill will be used to raise (student's) interest so the university will know they have to deal with us in a better way."

The meeting opened last night with an address from the SUG Board President Bob Nims. Nims said, "I feel that we do provide a service to the student body." He proceeded by citing many facilities, which he believed would not have been fostered without a student governing board. He finished by saying, "I don't feel that the way to change it (SUG Board) is by eliminating it."

Under their constitution SUG Board was given governing power over the Campus Center and the Student Union. Hodgeson said, "I really don't think that SUG Board has ever been anything at all...We should examine the merits of whether we want to be an advising board or a governing board. "The students are purchasing this building by patronizing the various shops and by the Campus Center Fee, yet the Board has kept its advisory role."

A question of ownership arose. The UMass Building Authority legally owns the Campus Center, and the students may not run a State-owned building. The governing power was given to the University Chancellor Randolph Bromery by the Trustees.

Dr. Robert W. Gage, Vice-Chancellor, proceeded saying, "The Trustees must have the right to have the last word. There are certain powers which the chancellor cannot divest."

SUG Board member Guy Ross then commented on the Board's frustrations saying, "The sham that we are a governing board is detrimental to the students. We are not in a position to set policies and yet we are blamed for them."

SUG Board wants more power, but how to get it has not yet been resolved. Renewed student interest was said to be a partial solution, and one member suggested a possible proposal of abolishing the Chancellor's veto power. Until the Board is unified it will continue to, as Guy Ross said, "do anything as long as the University wants it done."

Judge Admits Loan

BOSTON (AP) — Chief Justice G. Joseph Tauro of the state Supreme Judicial Court says he once loaned former Judge Edward J. DeSaulnier an interest free $5,000 to tide him over a financially "rough period."

It was Tauro's court which last month disbarred DeSaulnier after an investigation of allegations by a convicted stock swindler that he once paid $35,000 to obtain probation in a fraud case in Massachusetts.

Tauro told the story of the loan in a letter hand-delivered to the Boston Globe, which had asked him about the loan.

Senate Replies To Concert Ruling

By DON BISHOP

In their meeting Wednesday night, the Student Senate responded to the Administration's rejection of the Concert Committee's proposal for a large spring concert in the Stadium. The "large" concert would have allowed admission for 15,000-20,000 students from the 5-College area, with ticket prices from $3-5 for a "big name" group, or groups.

The Senate's response came in the form of a lengthy bill condemning the Administration's action and calling for the Administration to limit capacity at future home football games to 5,000 people and to limit attendance at such campus events as graduation and convocation by an unspecified number. The exact wording of the Senate bill was as follows:

"Whereas the student body has overwhelmingly demonstrated its approval for a spring concert and

"Whereas, after thorough research, the Concert Committee reported that a one-day concert in the student's Alumni Stadium is feasible

"Be it resolved that the Student Senate condemn the administration for their "small concert" policy and that the Student Senate reiterate its steadfast support for a decent, student-supported concert, and

"Whereas the Student Senate and its Committees have taken an extensive amount of time to research the feasibility of a spring concert and have reported favorably of this program, and

"Whereas we have been told by the Administration that a proposed crowd of 15,000 to 20,000 is too dangerous on this campus

"Move to recommend that the Student Senate request that the Administration and the Faculty-Alumni controlled Athletic Council, who claim to own our Stadium, limit the crowd capacity at football games to 5,000 and allow only second-rate teams to play in order to insure this quota.

"Be it further resolved that this practice be extended to such infamous activities as graduation, convocation, and large DVP engagements."

The sponsors of this bill include Senators Gomes, Shimkoski, Staton, Sherman, McGrath, and Mulligan. This reporter spoke to two of the sponsors, Senators Gomes and Sherman, who as members of the Concert Committee attended the unsuccessful meeting with Administrators: Gage, Scanlon, Field, and O'Neill.

The purpose of the bill according to Senator Gomes was "basically to show the Administration that we can be as irrational in this matter as they can be." By irrational, Gomes was referring to the request that attendance at home football games be limited to 5,000.

Gomes went on to say that in his opinion the Concert Committee had presented a viable proposal, which in his words contained a "good security plan". This is contrary to the opinion of Mr. O'Neill, who at Tuesday's meeting contended that the planned concert would need more security than the Committee had allowed for.

As for the status of the spring concert, both Gomes and Sherman agreed that a "major" concert is out. However, they are both optimistic about the possibility for some form of a concert in the Stadium. Gomes stated that in a conversation with Dr. Gage yesterday, he received an "oral agreement" from Gage for permission to hold a concert for up to 7,000 students. Permission will also have to come from other Administrators, in conjunction, including Acting-Chancellor Bromery. Bromery yesterday told a member of the Collegian, that allowing for further discussion, he would agree to a concert on a small scale.

Another problem needed to be worked out is the matter of funding for the concert, and the price of tickets. Senator Sherman stated that he will make a motion at next week's Senate meeting, which would request that several thousand dollars from the Senate account containing money for the stalled SES purchase be transferred for use in the hiring of groups by the Concert Committee. If the Committee gets the money there is a possibility that the concert could be a "free" one. If this Senate money is not available then admission will be charged.

Senator Gomes feels that it will be at least a month before definite plans on the "small-scale" concert are drawn up. In the meantime he hopes for considerable support from the student body for the tentative concert and he and the other members of the Concert Committee welcome and urge student suggestions for possible groups.

Nixon Continues To Shun Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — A news study committee says "President Nixon has come close to killing off the presidential press conference as a public institution during his term of office."

The report, prepared by the Washington News Committee of the Associated Press Managing Editors Association, noted Nixon held nine news conferences last year while recent presidents had averaged 24-36 yearly and added:

"It is obvious that the President's relations with the press are more restricted and controlled in his behalf than those of any other modern day president."

A newsman, noting the APME study, asked Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler at the regular White House briefing Thursday if Nixon had come close to eliminating meetings with the press corps.

"I don't think so," Ziegler said.

Asked when the next conference would be held, Ziegler replied: "There's none set at this time. We'll be having press conferences from time to time. We'll let you know when they're set."

The APME is an organization of editors representing newspaper members of The Associated Press. The APME's study committees keep tab on news operations generally. The report was issued by Courtney R. Sheldon, chief of the Washington bureau of the Christian Science Monitor and chairman of the APME's Washington News Committee.

"As of Jan. 31, the most recent presidential press conference was on Nov. 12," the report said.

Viet Cong Present Revised Peace Plan

BULLETIN, (AP) U.S. officials find some hope in Viet Cong Paris proposals.

PARIS (AP) — The Viet Cong placed before the Paris talks Thursday its revised peace plan calling for the immediate resignation of Nguyen Van Thieu as South vietnam's president. But the United States suggested the Communist side take another look at President Nixon's eight-point plan as the basis for ending the Indochina war.

U.S. Ambassador William J. Porter made no detailed response to the Viet Cong plan but in Washington a State Department official said there seemed to be some hopeful elements in it.

The Communists told Porter they do not accept the plan disclosed last week by Nixon on television and put to the North Vietnamese by presidential aide Henry A. Kissinger last Oct. 11.

Porter replied: "This seems to indicate a basic misunderstanding of the negotiating process generally and of what our proposal is designed to do specificially."

Under the U.S. plan, he added, the United States is prepared to begin troop withdrawals and prisoner exchanges while other points are negotiated.

"Ours is a proposal which is fully consistent with the principle that the political future of South Vietnam will be left for the South Vietnamese people to decide for themselves, free from outside interference," Porter declared.

He said the plan was not submitted on a take-it-or-leave-it basis but is open for negotiation.

But the North Vietnamese and the Viet Cong appeared to be abandoning any further consideration of the Nixon plan, which is backed by South Vietnam, and going on to an elaborated version of the Viet Cong's seven-point plan presented last July.

Changes include a demand for the immediate resignation of Thieu and insistence that the United States "set a specific terminal date" for troop withdrawal.

"This specific terminal date will also be the terminal date for the release of all military and civilian prisoners," the Communists said.

Previously the Communists had demanded that the United States cease supporting Thieu and had asked that the United States get out by the end of 1971.

Porter did not address himself to the Viet Cong plan, but in Washington William H. Sullivan, deputy assistant Secretary of State for East Asian and Pacific affairs, told the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee there seem to be some elements of interest in it.

Sullivan said that for the first time the enemy appears to be separating military problems in the negotiations for political problems by addressing the subject of troop withdrawals to the United States and the subject of Thieu's resignation to Saigon.

"We will certainly have to explore it in great detail," Sullivan added.

TALKING IN PARIS—North Vietnam's delegate to the Vietnam peace talks being held in Paris, Xuan Thuy, and his American counterpart William J. Porter, right, arrive for Thursday's weekly session. Thuy told newsmen as he entered that President Nixon's latest peace proposal was "part of his election campaign" and a "smokescreen". (AP)

No Fault Lawyer Intimidated

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) — The president of the American Trial Lawyers Association said Thursday he would not be intimidated by someone close to President Nixon and would continue to speak out freely against no-fault automobile insurance legislation.

Marvin E. Lewis, a San Francisco attorny and president of the ATLA, asked what "justification is there for a cabinet member to write to a bar association asking for sanctions against someone for speaking out."

Lewis was responding to a letter sent to the American Bar Association by Virginia Knauer, special assistant to the President for consumer affairs.

Mrs. Knauer said that techniques being used by the ATLA in its efforts to defeat federal and state no-fault legislation "could appear to be so devious, misleading and blatantly self-serving, as to cast a long shadow over the integrity of the entire legal profession."

The president of the ABA, Leon Jaworski, responded Wednesday saying the ABA had no authority to question the ATLA's actions.

The trial lawyers association is an independent group of attorneys and is not represented in the ABA House of Delegates. "Why doesn't Mrs. Knauer say the insurance industry is blatantly self-serving," asked Lewis, who was in the capital city to appear before a legislative committee studying a form of no-fault legislation for Vermont.

"We have not paid one dime for advertisements," he said of the trial lawyers.

Lewis claimed advertisements being published by the insurance industry were false, yet he added, the consumer advocate for the nation made no statement against them.

Drug Abuse Bill Passed

WASHINGTON (AP) — A $411 million bill authorizing a three-year attack on drug abuse was approved by the House Thursday after a fight over the best way to control treatment programs for veterans.

The bill, which passed 380 to 0, will set up a special White House action office for drug abuse prevention.

It will be up to a congressional conference committee to settle on final terms because the Senate had voted 92 to 0 last December in favor of a $1.5-billion, five-year appraoch.

Both bills would create the special office under the President to pull together scattered federal antidrug programs and determine unified federal policy.

By 196 to 174, the House rejected an amendment offered by Rep. Olin Teague, D-Tex., chairman of the Veterans Affairs Committee. His idea was to strip reference to Veterans Administration drug-treatment programs from the legislation.

Teague argued the head of the new office might become a dictator.

State to Buy Pennsy Track

BOSTON (AP) — The state signed a formal agreement Thursday to buy 145 miles of railroad rights of way from the Penn Central Transportation Co. for $19.5 million.

Plans to buy the track were announced by Gov. Francis W. Sargent Dec. 30 following five months of negotiations.

Final acquisition, however, still depends on approval of the federal court overseeing reorganization of Penn Central and agreement by the federal Urban Mass Transit Administration to help finance the project.

Flu Epidemic Continues

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) — The mortality rate because of influenza is above the expected level throughout the nation for the fourth straight week of the current flue epidemic, the Center for Disease Control reported today.

Influenza or respiratory illnesses of some type now are occurring in all 50 states, according to Dr. James Sprague, chief of the influenza surveillance unit at the CDC.

Exercise Can Be Harmful

CHICAGO, Ill. (AP) — Not all exercise is good, and some exercises can be harmful, in spite of the claims of health clubs, says the magazine Today's Health, published by the American Medical Association.

The failure of health clubs' exercise programs "to result in the promised success is dismaying enough" the magazine says in its February issue in a survey of health clubs.

"But worse, of course, is the possibility of suffering actual physical harm," it adds.

No. Ireland Prepares For Sunday's March

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Britian ordered a battalion of army reinforcements to Northern Ireland Thursday. Defiant civil rights leaders refused to call of an illegal protest march set for Sunday near the border with southern Ireland.

The troop movements, which will bring army strength in the province to 15,000 men, were announced after another day of gun battles and explosions in the streets of major northern Irish cities.

Over the border in the Irish republic, Prime Minister Jack Lynch pledged tough action to crush insurgents "seeking to overthrow the institutions of the state."

He accused outlaws of leading Wednesday night's destruction of Britain's embassy in Dublin and warned such men were endangering "our institutions of freedom and democracy."

In London, the British foreign secretary, Sir Alec Douglas-Home, demanded full compensation from the Irish government for the destroyed embassy and told Dublin it must change its present attitude to the crisis.

Otherwise, he declared, it "could do the most serious damage and lasting damage to the relationship between our two countries."

In Dublin, Lynch said he had promised Britain full compensation.

An advance party of the 55-man 2nd Battalion Light Infantry flew out of England during the day. The rest will leave by ship Friday.

Army headquarters said the reinforcements were dispatched as "a precautionary measure" for the civil rights' silent protest march planned for the tough border city of Newry on Sunday.

March organizers said the demonstration is intended as a tribute "to those who died for democracy" during a similar march in Londonderry last Sunday. Thirteen men and boys were killed in clashes with British paratroopers.

More paratroopers are also being sent to Northern Ireland, but as replacements, not reinforcements.

The paratroopers have borne the brunt of civil rights accusations of brutality while breaking up marches staged in defiance of emergency laws against processions.

British Prime Minister Edward Heath appealed to Lynch, William Cardinal Conway, Roman Cathlic primate of all Ireland and John Cardinal Heenan, the British primate, to intercede with civil rights leaders to have the Newry march called off.

Northern Ireland's Security Committee, comprising provincial government, police and army chiefs, warned the march is illegal and "measures will be taken to enforce the law."

March organizers said they expect at least 15,000 people from both sides of the border to attend the demonstration, planned to take place in total silence. They said any blood-shed would be the responsibility of the army.

Newry, nicknamed "El Paso" after the violence it has seen from its position on the frontier over the past 2-1/2 years, was hit by a rampage of burning, stoning and looting in 1969 when a civil rights march got out of control.

Gun battles between British troops and the Irish Republican Army, which is fighting to bring Protestant-dominated Northern Ireland under the rule of the mainly Catholic republic, crackled through the streets of Belfast most of Thursday.

British troops, ordered to remove burning barricades of cars and trucks in Catholic districts, repeatedly came under sniper fire, army headquarters said. Asked if the troops returned fire, the spokesman said: "Yes indeed, rather."

The Catholic ghettoes of Falls Road, Andersonstown, Turfe Lodge, Ballymurphy and Ardoyne reverberated to the crack of guns from 11 a.m. well into the night. The army believed one gunman was hit.

The last of the 13 Londonderry victims was buried before a crowd of 4,000 mourners. He was William McKinney, 27, whose funeral was delayed a day for far-flung relatives to arrive.

In Washington, Secretary of State William P. Rogers said the United States would be willing to play a useful role in the Northern Ireland dispute, but "personally I don't think we can."

The secretary said President Nixon had expressed deep concern over the recent events Rogers also told newsmen after a meeting with Foreign Minister Patrick J. Hillery of Ireland that the United States would not intervene in the situation and is not "in a position to."

A coffin of one of 13 persons shot dead in Londonderry is borne shoulder high as it arrived at the burial site here Wednesday after funeral service attended by thousands of mourners. (AP)

G.M. Nets $1.9 Billion

DETROIT, Mich. (AP) - General Motors Corp. reported Thursday that 1971 was its second most profitable year in history, with earnings totalling $1.93 billion on record sales of $28.3 billion.

GM's record profit year was 1965, when earnings were $2.12 billion on sales of $20.7 billion.

GM's previous record sales year of $24.3 billion was 1969.

The world's largest manufacturing enterprise's 1971 earnings topped those of strike-beset 1970 by more than $1.3 billion. GM's 1970 earnings were $609 million.

Earnings per share over last year were $6.72, compared with $2.09 in 1970 and $7.41 in record 1965. They were $5.95 in 1969.

GM also disclosed Thursday that its January sales topped those of last year's same month by 13.2 per cent.

Chairman Richard Gerstenberg and President Edward N. Cole said in a joint statement that President Nixon's 90-day wage-price freeze had a favorable effect on auto sales, "but reduced the extent to which cost increases could be recovered in prices."

No. Vietnamese "Ready To Die"

SAIGON (AP) — North Vietnam is ready to lose one-fourth of 50,000 men it has poised to attack in the central highlands, and many of its troops "have already resigned themselves to death," the region's top U.S. adviser said Thursday.

"The enemy feels it necessary to show he is really still in this war," said John Paul Vann, senior American adviser in the 2nd Military Region that covers 47 per cent of South Vietnam.

"He's getting rather desperate that the United States will pull out of here without negotiating an agreement," Vann added.

Vann told a news conference in the central highlands city of Pleiku, that one enemy body in five is found with a chest tattoo: "Born in the North to die in the South."

The veteran adviser said the offensive expected around the mid-February Tet new year celebration would probably hit his region hardest in mountainous Kontum Province. Other heavy attacks have been predicted in the northern tip of South Vietnam.

Vann estimated the North Vietnamese have committed 15,000 men to the Kontum campaign. Main targets are expected to be fire bases in the Ben Het-Dak To area, east of reported buildups of troops and tanks. This is where the borders of Laos, Cambodia and South Vietnam meet.

The North Vietnamese probably will harass the highlands province capitals of Kontum and Pleiku, Vann said, but he does not expect any serious attempt to capture them.

Although the two South Vietnamese army divisions guarding the two cities are reputed to be the country's worst, Vann declared: "I don't expect to lose anything.

"In this offensive the enemy will be killed by overwhelming artillery and air support," he said. "I'm enough of a realist that I'm not going to ask the ARVN-Army of the Republic of Vietnam-to do what they won't do."

Vann's statement that he did not expect an attempt to seize a province capital differed somewhat from a radio interview six days ago. He said then he believed the enemy's main purpose would be an attack on Kontum to "grab headlines around the world."

At the Pleiku news conference Vann stressed: "I can't tell you what the enemy is going to do, only what he says he is going to do."

Court Grants Irving A Delay

NEW YORK (AP) — Author Clifford Irving has obtained another delay of his appearance before a federal grand jury, while a Danish singer was quoted as saying it seemed impossible that Irving could have met Howard Hughes during a 1971 trip to Mexico.

Irving, who claims to have written Hughes' autobiography with active help from the recluse billionaire, declined to say why he did not go before the federal panel Thursday. He has gotten two postponements this week. His wife, Edith, and his lawyer also refused to comment.

Nina van Pallandt, a Danish folk singer, was quoted by the Los Angeles Times as saying she and Irving were apart "one to 1-1/2 hours at the most" during a trip to Mexico at the time Irving has sworn he first met Hughes in February, 1971.

The Times said the tall, blonde 39-year-old entertainer asserted she never saw Hughes or anyone resembling him during the trip and that Irving did not tell her he had seen Hughes. Irving said the meeting occurred on Feb. 13 and 14, 1971 in remote locations in Mexico.

Miss van Pallandt, interviewed by telephone from the Bahamas, told the newspaper she would come voluntarily to New York to appear before the federal grand jury investigating the case for possible mail fraud.

The postponement of Irving's grand jury appearance was obtained by his lawyer, Maurice Nessen. U.S. Atty. Whitney North Seymour, Jr., gave no explanation other than to say that he was "talking only for today."

Also winning a postponement was John Meier, of Albuquerque, N.M., a one time scientific consultant to Hughes. Seymour also would not say why Meier, a candidate for the Democratic Senate nomination in New Mexico, had been excused.

Publisher McGraw-Hill denied a report that Irving's lawyer offered to return $500,000 if a group of New York publishers would agree to drop all prosecution against Irving and his wife. The firm had given Irving $650,000 for payment to Hughes for what it believed was the billionaire's autobiography.

Irving has said it was his wife who, using the name Helga R. Hughes, deposited three McGraw-Hill checks totaling $650,000 in a Swiss bank and later withdrew the money and deposited $442,000 in another bank in Zurich.

The checks were made payable to "H.R. Hughes" and endorsed with the same signature. A handwriting expert retained by the publisher said the signature was that of Howard Hughes.

Irving had sworn in an affidavit that he delivered checks for $275,000 and $50,000 to Hughes personally and a third for $325,000 to a man he knew as a Hughes representative named "George Gordon Holmes."

Holmes has never been located and Irving has denied a published report that the man was actually Meier, the former Hughes employee.

Hughes reportedly lives in all but inviolable seclusion in a hotel penthouse in the Bahamas.

Charges To Be Dropped Against Beach Protestors

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP)-

Deputy Atty. Gen. Richard S. Cohen said Thursday his office will file Friday for dismissal of charges against 31 persons arrested during the Snowy Beach military maneuvers at Georgetown.

Cohen said the request for the dismissals will be presented to Sixth District Court Judge Paul A. MacDonald at Bath. MacDonald will have the final say as to whether the misdemeanor charges are dropped.

When contacted Thursday, MacDonald said he felt too much had been said about the cases already, and he would act upon Cohen's motion when it was filed. The judge declined further comment.

Meanwhile, at Georgetown, the town harbor master said he would "resort to every legal means available" to prevent the charges from being dropped.

Samuel P. Crosby said he would seek legal action against Republican Atty. Gen. James S. Erwin if he followed Democratic Gov. Kenneth M. Curtis' request to drop the charges.

Curtis asked Erwin to stop prosecution because "neither violence nor property damage resulted," and those arrested "were making a symbolic gesture of citizen protest against the military operation."

Erwin reluctantly agreed to the request, saying he was "sorry" Curtis had made it, and adding "it is certainly no defense to a criminal prosecution that someone was taking a politically or socially popularon."

Two legislators made floor speeches Thursday decrying Curtis' action.

Sen. Frank W. Anderson, R-Ellsworth, said the governor's pressure for dismissal represents "a slap in the face to our law enforcement officers and the court."

Rep. Edward C. Kellcher, D-Bangor, told the House that Curtis "didn't do his office justice or the people of Maine."

All those arrested were charged with violating state park regulations by entering Reid State Park after it had been closed to the public for a Navy and Marine cold-weather exercise last month.

More Arrests In Brazil

RIO DE JANEIRO (AP) — A wave of arrests of suspected subversives in Brazil spread on Thursday, and at least four Rio newspaper reporters were in custody. A source in the military-run government said more than 200 persons had been rounded up since last weekend.

Most of those in jail were students, including the son of Brazil's ambassador to Paraguay. Lawyers said authorities even arrested a 77-year-old woman, accusing her of giving money to a student suspected of subversive activities.

Under Brazil's military regime, basic civil rights do not exist. The armed forces and police can arrest anyone on suspicion of "endangering national security" and hold him as long as they want.

There were mass roundups of this nature in 1969 and 1970. One was to avoid agitation during New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller's state visit. Another, called Operation Birdcage, was to get possible troublemakers off the streets during congressional elections. Others followed the kidnappings of foreign diplomats by political terrorists.

The current wave of arrests was the biggest operation of its kind in Brazil in more than a year. Army, navy, air force and local police units all were participating.

Grow It In Your Cellar

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP) — Marijuana and opium poppy growers soon fall victim to the space narc-an orbiting satellite capable of detecting drug fields from 100 miles up.

An earth resources satellite scheduled for launching in May or June could provide the first evidence whether the idea is feasible. The U.S. Treasury Department's Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs is spending about $2 million dollars to find out.

The money will pay for a one-year project aimed at determining the peculiar "signature" of the marijuana plant so that large crops of it around the world can be detected by remote sensing devices in satellites.

The signature is the pattern by which a plant reflects heat and light during various phases of growth and under different soil and climate conditions.

Candidates Go For Hicks Seat

BOSTON (AP)- Two men have announced their candidacies for the 9th congressional district seat now held by Louise Day Hicks, D-Mass.

Hubert E. Jones, former director of the Roxbury Multi-Service Center, came out for the office Thursday. The other candidate is Melvin B. Miller, publisher of Bay State Banner, a black oriented

Both are black, but a spokesman for Jones says negotations are underway to have only one black candidate oppose Mrs. Hicks in the primary. She has not announced but has indicated she will run for a second term.

Notice Tampering Suspected

A Jan. 18 special meeting of the Planning Board which gave approval for sewerage, water facilities, and roads for the 1,300 unit development of Otto Paparazzo Associates has touched off a fresh controversy here.

Critics say that there was virtually no notice for the meeting and that no one was present except for members of the press and proponents of the Paparazzo project.

Today Town Clerk Estelle Matusko stated that notice of the special meeting had been posted in the Town Hall Jan. 18 at 3:35 p.m., but she suggested the possibility that "someone removed the notice."

Reporters who regularly cover Planning Board meetings plus representatives of the Amherst League of Women Voters found out about the meeting only the day before.

In addition, representatives of the Amherst Growth Study Committee which opposes the Paparazzo project complained yesterday that they knew nothing of the meeting until they read about it in the newspaper. Last night committee member Arthur Wright asked the planning board to hold a full hearing on the subject. Wright argued that the items approved by the Planning Board were exactly those that the Zoning Board of Appeals had refused to consider when the board gave its approval to the project Dec. 23. At the ZBA hearing preceding that approval chairman Kenneth Rosenthal told Paparazzo opponents that they would have an opportunity at a Planning Board meeting to discuss problems of water, sewerage, roads, and traffic created by the Paparazzo project, Wright said. It was not within the province of the ZBA to rule on such factors, Rosenthal told Paparazzo opponents.

At the Jan. 18 meeting, however, the Planning Board gave full approval to the water, sewerage, and roads in the 333-acre project. The board went on to approve a road proposed to run through the southern half of the project, despite the fact that it was not part of the 1,300 unit project approved by the ZBA and, previously, by the October Town Meeting.

At that time Planning Board members Robert Plattner and Alice Epstein protested approval of the additional road. "I don't want to see the road under the circumstances," Plattner was quoted as saying. He argued that the placement of the road would be inconsistent with town meeting's decision to approve a development of only half of the 640 acres originally proposed by Paparazzo Associates.

"The land is going to be subdivided, whether it's birdfarms or one acre lots or whatever the town will let us do," Otto Paparazzo was quoted as telling the board. "We're not fooling the town. We're showing where the road will go in."

Yesterday, the dispute continued over which town board-if any-has the jurisdiction to actually rule on the sewer, water, and road facilities of the project. Plattner repeated his objections to the Planning Board's approval to the road in the southern half of the project, but went on to question whether the board can actually approve the sewer, water, and road facilities, except on highly technical grounds. Plattner said he did not think that the board could rule on the broader question of the ultimate effect of the huge development on the town. This is the question that the Amherst Growth Study Committee has raised both in hearings of the Planning Board and the Zoning Board.

Last night the Planning Board said that it would study the Growth Study Committee request for another hearing on the development. However, the Planning Board has received a legal opinion that another hearing would not be required, member Theodore Bacon said today. "We've considered the Paparazzo project at 15 meetings throughout the year," Bacon said. "The public has been welcome at any one of the. The fact that the opponents didn't come to the Jan. 18 one is their own business. There are only five or so people who are really concerned about this.

New SEC Proposals Help Small Investors

NEW YORK (AP)-New proposals by the Securities and Exchange Commission to change the way Americans buy and sell stocks are expected to bring better prices for the small investor and a reshuffling of trading patterns on the various stock exchanges.

They may also reduce income for some brokerage firms while giving big investors a break on their commission fees. However major changes may not come for several months.

The SEC, The federal regulator of securities operations, said Wednesday it wants by the end of the year some form of unified system that will show investors the daily prices and trading volume for stock traded on all the different markets.

"This will put the little man on a nearly equal footing with the large institutional investors," commented John Smith, a partner of the New York brokerage firm of Fahnestock & Co.

It will allow him to shop around and buy his stock in the market offering the lowest price, an option previously available only to large institutions, such as mutual and pension funds.

Prices on the over-the-counter market, among dealers and brokers outside the exchanges, and in the different regional exchanges are sometimes lower than New York Stock Exchange prices.

The SEC also plans to require brokers to negotiate their commission fees on all transactions worth more than $300,000. The reduction from the current $500,000 level will permit large investors to trim their trading costs, and lead to a drop in earnings at some brokerage houses heavily dependent on large block trades.

The chief operations manager at one such firm said profits might consequently fall "by as much as 25 per cent."

James A. Rogers, (left), of Fritzsche Dodge & Olcott presents his companies award to Clifford Starr, UMass undergraduate in Food Science. The $1,000 scholarship was presented to Starr for his 4.0 grade average. The award was presented recently at the Arthur D. Little Co. in Cambridge.

Life Concert
Next weekend
FRI. Feb. 11 - SUN., 4p.m.
MARK Meadow Gym. - S. of Ed. - 7p.m.

You are invited to a Life Concert with the understanding that you will be contracting with everyone else who comes to take full responsibility for yourself from the moment you arrive until you choose to leave. We will not suggest anything for you to do. A Life Concert is moments and space and life apart from our conditioned, interdependent world of survival fears, burdensome responsibilities and goal striving, where one may more easily be at one with himself, others, the world and what's happening. Life Concerts differ according to the contract for living together and self-discovery which all participants make with each other. Last fall we conducted a Life Concert where the contract was to not talk. Nearly a hundred people enthusiastically participated. Remaining with the community without anything planned to do, we found ourselves being what we had been endeavoring to become. We also became aware of assumptions upon which we were operating but of which we had been previously unaware.

Bring instruments, food, candles, whatever you like.

Financial Hassle

If Governor Sargent's budget proposals are accepted, this University will probably be hit with belt-tightening budgets in fiscal 1973 and 1974. He has already indicated that tight budgets will be sought all around. This may leave the University facing a couple years of austerity such it has never seen before. What could happen here to solve a money shortage?

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery has indicated that there is a strong possibility of a faculty hiring freeze next academic year. This would throw the 15 to 1 student-faculty ratio off kilter. The University, as already committed, must grow by 1500 students each year. Holding the above ratio requires the creation of 100 new faculty positions each year. New faculty could only come in as replacements during a hiring freeze. Many of them have already been recruited for these positions which would not materialize in a money shortage.

Also, financial aid programs may also be cut back during a year of austerity. This would force many students to leave school, which would be contrary to the whole idea of a low cost, high quality, public higher education.

We urge each student, especially those who now have vote power, to write to his or her state representative and state senator in support of funds for the University. If we don't let them know how we feel, then probably no one else will either.

We also urge the Student Senate as a whole to support its constituency in such action.

'On the other hand gentlemen, we must not lose sight of the fact that we are seeing a much better class of unemployed person than ever before.'

Too Many Points For Peace

WASHINGTON—One of the reasons that it is so difficult to get a settlement in Vietnam is that there are so many peace proposals on the table that no one knows which one anyone is talking about.

Even President Nixon, in discussing the secret meetings with the North Vietnamese in Paris, stumbled over the different plans that have been submitted.

I am certain that this is what is happening in the White House at this very moment:

"Mr. President, the North Vietnemese have just given an answer to our peace proposal."

"Good, Henry. Is it a response to our reply to their public seven-point plan or our private eight-point plan which we submitted to them?"

"We're not certain. As you know, in 1967 they offered us a four-point plan and we came back at them with a 14-point proposal which they rejected outright. Then on May 14, 1969, we came back with our eight-point public plan which they countered by submitting a 10-point plan on July 8, 1969."

"What about our five-point proposal of Oct. 7, 1970?"

"They responded to that by publicly submitting the National Liberation Front's seven-point plan."

"What does that make the point spread, Henry?"

"I'm not too good at mathematics, Mr. President, but I believe on points they're slightly ahead. But if you add our eight-point secret plan, then we're ahead."

"Do you believe they'll come up with another point proposal when they realize they're behind?"

"I'm sure of it, Mr. President. They were very angry that we added a point to their seven-point proposal of July, and considered it an act of bad faith."

"The only reason we did it was because the seven points did not cover all the proposals."

"I know that and you know that, but they don't know it."

"I have a good mind to bomb them tomorrow morning."

"Wait a minute, Mr. President. I think we ought to study their reply to our response to their proposal first. There may be something in it we've overlooked."

"Well, why can't we bomb them while we're studying their response?"

"Because if we respond to their answer with bombing, they could say we're not serious about our eight-point proposal."

"Is that the secret one or the public one?"

"It was the secret one, Mr. President, until you made it public."

"Oh, yes, that's right. Well, is their response to our secret uh, public eight-point proposal, secret or public?"

"Publicly they have denounced it, but secretly they've indicated they're studying it."

"Well, why don't we bomb them publicly, but secretly let them know we're looking for a peaceful solution?"

"I believe, sir, we'd have to come up with another proposal before we do. How about a 35-point peace plan? That could really throw them into a swivet."

"That's not a bad idea. But before we do that, what was their response to our eight-point secret proposal which I made public the other night to show all Americans that I had gone the extra mile?"

"My people are sending it up to me now. Here's one of my aides. Thank you."

"Henry, you've gone pale. What is it, Henry?"

"Oh, my God, Mr. President! The North Vietnamese want to change the shape of the table."

Move To Reconsider

Last Wednesday evening the Student Senate voted against funding the Student Mobilization Committee. Several points need to be made concerning the debate and discussion which preceeded that vote, and the political atmosphere under which the decision was made.

To begin with, the mood of the Student Senate could in no way be characterized as tight fisted that night. S.W.A.P., widely acknowledged to be little more than a place "to get drunk, get high, or get whatever you can", and which had met with questionable success in meeting its rather broadly defined goals, was funded. "The Senior Committee of the Class of '73", which has yet to be formed, whose purpose is to organize Senior Day, and whose sole spikeswoman voiced reservations as to its feasibility and value, was funded. The question of whether to fund The Student Mobilization Committee to End the War in Southeast Asia was the next order of business.

Strangely enough, major opposition did not come from the right. The arguments of conservative spokesmen that night, Matt Tackeff and someone named Neil, were nothing short of fatuous. If the war were not so deadly serious an issue, Tackeff's insincere accusation that SMC's wide and consistent leafletting activity was a detrement to the environmental health of the University would have appeared comical. Even if the SMC were to be held responsible for what students did with leaflets after reading them, Mr. Tackeff's new found ecological concern would be better directed at the already advanced destruction, caused by the war, on the environmental balance on an entire subcontinent. Tackeff, before sitting down, felt the need to insert his foot still further into his mouth by pretending to defend the rights of the individual against compulsion i.e. student funding of the SMC. Larry Ladd, in what was nearly the only display of political clarity and personal integrity seen in the chambers that night, stood up and pointed out the compulsion of taxation, the draft, and a war that continues against the will of the American people. Neil's original statement that the Mobe is in favor of the war was met with laughter. Finding that position untenable, the senator thought it expedient to alter that accusation. Then, according to Neil, some members of the SMC, notably myself, are in solidarity with the Vietnamese revolution against foreign domination. Speaking only for myself, I very proudly plead guilty to that charge. But far from taking the trouble to examine the SMC's goals and principles which are clearly stated in the group's constitution, and in arrogant disregard for the Mobe's long fight for immediate withdrawl, Neil sank to slander in his characterization of the entire SMC. Never once having attended an SMC meeting this year, if ever, Neil stated that the Mobe is controlled by a clique. The paranoia of the senator was reflected in his contempt for the intelligence of the entire membership of the SMC. In an organization that has new elections each semester, immediate removal from office by simple majority vote, and whose day to day work is based on democraticly made decisions, excactly how such control could be exerted was not explained by the senator. To top off this shameless conglomeration of ludicrous and empty charges, Neil included a cheap remark against Sid Finehirsh, a former chairman of the SMC and a tireless fighter against the war. So much for the political content of the right opposition.

Of considerably greater significance was the activity of the liberal majority of the Student Senate. Several senators during the debate stated that they supported the SMC and agreed with its goal, yet would vote against funding. Here we have a concrete example of crippling lip service. It is blant hypocricy to expound verbal support while dealing a violent financial blow to the antiwar movement. In effect, what occurred was a somewhat distorted reflection of what occurs in the U.S. Senate. There, antiwar speeches may occasionally be heard, but when the key to the war's continuation ie. the money needed to perpetuate it, is brought up, that antiwar sentiment finds no fulfillment in action.

The very real pressures of another election year on already long extended struggle against the war were evident. Vague, poorly expressed, very general anti-SMC sentiment was expressed from the liberal camp, as well as fomplaints of fatigue and boredom with the mass action perspective. Exactly what, we might ask our senators, do they think they are fighting when they join the antiwar movement? The war is no mistake. It has always been, and remains, a concerted effort on the part of the U.S. govt. to maintain imperialist domination in S.E. Asia. Not until that fact is understood, and with it the realization of how far the U.S. govt. is willing to go, will the UMass Student Senate or anyone else be able to wage the long implacable fight necessary to end that war.

Most people, I think, are willing to lay blame for the war where it correctly belongs; far, certainly, from the UMass Student Senate. But at the same time, we must understand that in succumbing to the tremendous pressures on the antiwar movement, the Student Senate's refusal to fund the SMC was a criminal abandoment of the Southeast Asian people. It should be clear that the Vietnamese, Cambodians, and Laotians were the losers at Wed. evening's Senate meeting. Even as you read this, U.S. bombers are raining death and destruction on them. But as long as they resist, as long as they continue their heroic struggle, people of vision, courage and dignity in America will carry on a relentless campaign with equal determination, until the antiwar movement grows powerful enough to end U.S. involvement in Southeast Asia.

Move to reconsider SMC funding.

Less Than Temperate Fears

To the Editor:

The preponderance of the time reason seems to urge peaceful men to confine their arguments and disagreements to gentler forums than the media. The coincidence of the current Athletic Council debate and the general ban on concerts raises the fundamental question of control of one's own resources and the assumed right to dictate one's own destiny by the use of those resources. It is the very question, put in fundamental terms, which led (we are told) Chancellor Tippo to resign and which alternatively prompted President Wood to precipitate that resignation or at least to allow the forces that precipitated it to go unchecked with that risk in view.

At the same time the Faculty Senate exhibits pubescent tendency toward acquiring and exercising some sort of political power over its conglomerate life. It manifests this awakening by its belated and regrettably timid posture toward the Board of Trustees and by its adolescent behaviour toward the Athletic Council issue. The latter marks a recent nadir of the Faculty Senate's sophistication in that it is responding to naked assertion of legality by the NCAA and its resident proponents when a most cursory reading of the NCAA Constitution would have led people to protest. "To sin by silence when they should protest makes cowards of men," as President Lincoln so aptly suggested.

If one constructs a syllogism from Dr. Gage's less than temperate fears of mob scenes, incipient injury and whatnot due to a crowd of people at Alumni Stadium (apparently conceding a rather alarming amount of crowd controls anyway), then one is inevitably led to the conclusion that large groups of people, at least at Alumni Stadium, poses a threat to the Community. Now, if indeed such an aglomeration of people does pose a threat to the Community, then clearly the owner is under a duty to his tenants to see that such a threat to the public welfare is diminished a safe level. Accordingly, if the tenant were to complain and achieve no satisfaction within a reasonable period of time, then the tenant would perhaps have the right, if not indeed the legal obligation, to withhold his rent by paying the same into Court pursuant to Chapter 111 of the General Laws. Of course, if the tenant were an unwilling tenant who was forced to pay the rent for an edifice that was being used in a manner that was or was likely to be a threat to the public weal, then perhaps the tenant should refuse to continue the tenancy.

The recent disclosure that televised football satiates massive sexual needs of the store-variety American male suggests to the novice in this area that live football may have even greater sexual import the like of which would turn the golden dome of Massachusetts' venerated state house a true purple (other states' capitals notwithstanding). Alas, the inevitable conclusion is that one orgy must be quite alike another. Either the stadium is for people or it is not. Either the people have meaningful control over their destinies and resources or they should withdraw those resources. I think the problem of the Athletic Council, concerts, and Alumni Stadium needs some hard rethinking and some substantial repositioning both in Whitmore and in the Herter caucus rooms.

Gak!

To the Editor:

At approximately 9:40 on Wednesday morning, a friend of mine was in Hampshire Dining Commons, eating breakfast. She went to the counter and picked up a box of cold cereal, casually glancing at it. Upon seeing a hoard of tiny black bugs crawling around in the cereal, she immediately (and understandably) became extremely revolted, and called it to the attention of a Dining Commons Attendant. The woman looked into the box, muttered a barely audible "Again?!", and, shrugging her shoulders, removed the cereal from the counter.

Need I say more?

B.S.S. Donation Time

To the editor:

So many people talk about the things that should be done in our society today - about helping others when they are not as fortunate as themselves. They talk about helping their brothers and sisters who have problems, so that life will be a little bit more pleasant. But often that's all they do - talk. Well, the residents of Coolidge Lower have decided to do, rather than talk this time. We are holding an auction on Saturday, February 26 at 10:30 in Hampden Dining Commons. A professional auctioneer will preside. All the proceeds will be donated to Belchertown State School for toys and equipment. If you have something you no longer want or can use, please donate it. If not, come to our auction and maybe you'll find something you'd like, while at the same time making a contribution to a worthy cause.

Articles can be dropped off at the horseshoe in Southwest on Thursday, February 17 from 3:00 to 6:00, and on Tuesday and Wednesday, February 22 and 23, at the same time and place. Signs will be posted around the horseshoe telling you exactly where to go. Articles can also be dropped off at the Stop and Shop in Hadley on Friday night, February 18, from 4:00 to 8:00, and on Saturday, February 19, from 10:00 to 2:00. If you have any questions, or you have articles that you want to donate but can not deliver, please call Joyce at 546-7971.

Letters To The Editor

As in previous years the MDC will continue to print letters to the editor. The only requirements are that they be typed at sixty spaces, double-spaced and absolutely no longer than two pages in length. All letters must be signed and the author's address and telephone numbers must be included. No letter will be published without this information. Also, no letters will be printed without the name of the author. Please note this change in policy.

All letters are subject to editing either for content or space according to the judgment of the editors. Also, due to space limitations, we do not guarantee that all letters will be printed.

Plasticity

You've shown me, though you know it not, your plastic form, your mould, your way of saying, "Things aren't how they seem."
I asked you, though you heard me not,
with plastic words that flowed a steady stream, "Are you searching with me?"
You answered me, though you meant it not,
with plastic thoughts that melted in the heat of falsity, "I'm here."
The plastic letters floated by upon the sky, wherefrom they melted, dripped, and ran away, thereupon the phrases, words, and thoughts became a lie.
You melted there, though you know it not,
a neon sign, and tallowed letters from your fingers, softly, gently, fading.
Melt away, I now you want, and stay away until I recogniize you not, for I need to be saved from your plasticity.

As It Stands Now

Ed. Note: This is the fifth in a series on teacher evaluation.
By NICK SPOSTALA

When Provost Gluckstern sent out the Report of the Ad Hoc Committee on Teacher Evaluation and asked the faculty and the Student Senate to comment on it, the whole matter was committed to the Academic Affairs Committee for study and recommendation to the Senate. After much discussion in the committee and outside of the committee, with faculty and students, it wars recognized that some major adjustments had to be made in the recommendations of the report.

The first item that the committee thought needed revision was that of the mandatory use of the Illinois form. It became obvious that many students as well as faculty, disliked that form. The committee saw a need, though, for some sort of computerized form so that the results could be published easily. Because of those reasons, the committee suggested that when the staff for the Office of Teacher Evaluation and Improvement was hired, they could develop a number of forms for use by the faculty. The committee also encouraged use of essay evaluations and short questionaires that could be used by the professors part way through the semester. By doing this, the instructor could receive immediate feedback, and hopefully begin to change the course to help the students in it.

As for the matter of publication, the committee wanted immediate publication of all results, but they realized that the faculty should be given some time to accustom themselves to the evaluation process. As they were unwilling, however, to be as wishy washy as the Ad Hoc Committee on this point, they reworded the Ad Hoc Committee's recommendation to read, "For instructors without tenure, the data should be released in al classes after the faculty member has been previously evaluated for four semesters. For faculty members with tenure, the data should be released in all cases after the instructor has been previously evaluated for two semesters." Thereby insulating, for a time, all instructors; those without tenure get more time because of their vulnerability, and those with tenure get less time before the evaluations are published.

The Academic Affairs Committee endorsed strongly the concept of the Office of Teacher Evaluation and Improvement, stressing the need for teacher improvement. Realizing that the faculty would want to have some part in the management of the Office and that students, who had been running the program up until now, would want to stay a part of the operation, said, in a new recommendation, that "There should be established with the Office of Teacher Evaluation and Improvement, a Review and Appeal Board, composed of students, faculty members, and administrators, in equal number, which shall meet on a regular basis. This Board will review and be responsible for policy decisions of the Office for Evaluation and Improvement of Teaching, and will report to the Faculty and Student Senates, and will hear specific grievances from those affected by the policy implementation." This type of Board managing the Office would ensure that the policy was in the best interest of all those concerned, not as is proposed now by a majority of departments, that an evaluation program be run on a departmental basis, where there would be no student representation and there would be no publication of results.

As it stands now, there are few departments that have allowed students seats on their personnel committees. Teacher Evaluation has been the only voice that Undergraduates have had on most committees; the only voice that the importance of teaching has had on those committees. And just know, when the University community as a whole is to get involved in Teacher Evaluation, the faculty say that they will run the programs and that only they will look at the results. That means that students and Undergraduate teaching gets the shaft again.

General Strike Called In Rome

ROME (AP) — Hundreds of thousands of Roman workers went on a 24-hour general strike Thursday to press for reforms from a government yet to be formed. Despite Italy's political crisis and a sagging economy, they turned the day into a semi-holiday.

Trains serving the capital, local public transport, factories, offices, banks and the government bureaucracy came to a halt. Hospitals treated only emergency cases. Airlines canceled some flights.

But the mass walkout over unemployment and administrative troubles gave the public an opportunity to take advantage of open stores, restaurants and espresso bars, and to enjoy a stroll on a warm and sunny day. Even a demonstration by more than 10,000 striking workers had a carnival atmosphere.

The relaxed approach contrasted with Italy's stark political and economic situation.

Scores of plants have folded in recent months. Eleven of the closed factories, including a Coca Cola plant, have been occupied for months by workers who hope the government will take over and

As a result of faltering production many factories have either laid off workers or put them on a shorter week. Time lost due to such layoffs amounted to 200 million hours in 1971, triple what it was the year before.

Last year Italy's industrial production, once "il boom" of Europe, dropped 3 per cent, the first decline since the war. Investments also fell in 1971, by 9 per cent.

At the Quirinal Palace, President Giovanni Leone continued his search for a man able to end the political crisis by forming Italy's 33rd government in the last 25 years.

Italy has been without a government since Christian Democrat Emilio Colombo's 17-month-old center-left alliance resigned on Jan. 15.

Old coalition partners--the Socialists, Democratic Socialists and the Republicans--refuse to be coaxed into another alliance unless the church-supported Christian Democrats promise efforts to avoid a planned referendum on divorce.

If a solid government does not emerge, Leone may have to dissolve parliament and call for a general election a year ahead of schedule.

Most parties want to avoid premature elections, fearing economic and social unrest can only aid the Neo-Fascist Italian Social Movement. The party, riding backlash sentiment, more than doubled its votes in local elections last June. It is pressing for immediate general elections.

Sen. Hartke Sees Himself A Winner

SALEM, N.H. (AP) — Indiana Sen. Vance Hartke plugged his record as a winner before high school students and a local television audience Thursday, and said he was the first to break with his party over the Indochina war issue.

The senior Hoosier senator told students in Portsmouth and Salem he won the mayoralty of Evansville and three elections to the Senate because he is a winner, and said he is the only Democratic contender who can defeat President Nixon.

"I will tell you, I can beat him," he said in Portsmouth. "They the other Democratic contenders can't beat him."

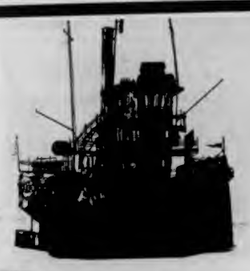
He also has raised the challenge of a debate with his opponents in the March 7 New Hampshire primary, saying he has accepted an invitation from the state's educational television network for a debate.

However, Neal Seavey, network news director, said debate invitations were issued only to Sens. George McGovern and Edmund Muskie, whom he says are the frontrunners. Seavey said Hartke and other candidates would be offered equal time later, because trying to include all in one program would not allow adequate time for discussion of issues.

Hartke had said earlier that he would like to debate McGovern, charging McGovern was campaigning on several issues which he, Hartke, had sponsored in the Congress-notably increased social security benefits.

Told of the Hartke statement, McGovern said he would be glad to debate Hartke, but added, "Bluntly, I'd rather take on Muskie than Hartke because I see it as a contest between myself and Ed."

Responding Thursday, Hartke said, "I don't blame him. It's easy to debate a powderpuff Muskie."



But the debate charges and counter charges probably are moot anyway because Muskie's Washington office said Thursday he will be campaigning in Florida Feb. 16, the date mentioned for the ETV telecast.

Hartke was asked by a student at Salem what he would do about granting amnesty to those who left the country or were jailed over the Vietnam war issue during the 1960s.

"You've just heard people say they are against amnesty or for it," he said. "I say that's a cheap trick."

He said those who left the country on the issue might be granted amnesty if they would return to the United States and agree to put in some term of service other than military, mentioning the Peace Corps, Vista and other such organizations.

Jewish Life Series To Be Held At Smith

A new series of programs entitled "Want in the Midst of Plenty: a Critique of American Jewish Life" begins at Smith College Tuesday (Feb. 8) with Arthur Waskow, who will speak at 7:30 p.m. in the Browsing Room of the Neilson Library.

His topic will be "Want in the Midst of Plenty: a Radical Jewish Perspective." Sponsored by the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundations at Smith and Amherst Colleges, the series is open to the public.

Mr. Waskow, a resident fellow of the Institute for Policy Studies in Washington, D.C., is a noted lecturer and the author of numerous books including "The Freedom Seder" and "The Bush is Burning."

A graduate of the University of Wisconsin, Mr. Waskow helped found the Conference on Peace Research in History and the Radical Historians Group. An initiator of new approaches and lifestyles in the Jewish community, he is the founder of a Jewish counter-cultural center in Washington.

Singer Tells It To Nixon

WASHINGTON (LNS) -- "I think she ought to be torn limb from limb," said noted pacifist Martha Mitchell. The other members of the audience of 150 including Pres. and Mrs. Nixon less articulate at first sat in stunned surprise when Carol Feraci, a member of the Ray Conniff Singers pulled a sign saying "Stop the Killing" from the top of her dress, and disrupted a musical program in the White House.

The entertainment followed a dinner in honor of Mr. and Mrs. DeWitt Wallace, founders of the Reader's Digest, the little pocket-sized homey right-wing magazine "which is read in 13 languages and in 170 countries." Now in their 50th year of publication, Nixon wanted to present them with a Medal of Freedom Award. They in turn printed an exclusive interview with Nixon in their 50th anniversary issue; as well as reminding their readers that "Reader's Digest, more than any other mass circulation magazine, has consistently exposed the evils of Communism and has consistently portrayed the blessings of the free-economic system."

So who should be invited for the entertainment, but the Ray Conniff Singers? As Nixon himself said when introducing them, "They're to music what Reader's Digest is to literature," (he meant it as a compliment).

Then, just as they were about to start their first song, Carol Feraci pulled the sign from the top of her dress. She stepped forward and looked straight at Nixon, who was sitting in the front row directly in front of her.

"President Nixon, stop bombing human beings, animals and vegetation," she said with feeling. "You go to church on Sunday and pray to Jesus Christ. If Jesus Christ was in this room tonight you would not dare to drop another bomb. Bless the Berrigans and Daniel Ellsberg."

Someone from the elegantly gowned and black-tied audience, which included Sec. of State Wm. Rogers, Att. Gen. John Mitchell, Treasury Sec. John Connally, Bob Hope, Rev. Norman Vincent Peale, Billy Graham, and Donald T. Regan, president of Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner and Smith, yelled, "I think you ought to throw her out." All over the audience guests started booing and took up the cry.

Ray Conniff turned to her and said, "I think it would be better if you left." With that she turned and left. She was surrounded by Secret Service men, questioned and then allowed to leave.

Later she told reporters, "I thought that it would make a nationwide impression if an oobie-doobie-do girl like myself made this protest on a stage inside the White House." She said she had joined the Ray Conniff Singers because she knew they were going to play at the White House.

She was facing Nixon when she made her protests. "He looked a little shocked, but he was obviously trying to keep his smile."

After she left the program continued, ending with the singing of "God Bless America."

The next day, Nixon's communication chief Herb Klein said that Carol Feraci would not be arrested.

Customer Is Always Right?

By TONY GRANITE

DORM VACANCY SIGNS UP at Univ. of Miami, caused several floors of dorms to be shut down, according to intelligence received though the Daily Reveille of Louisiana State (which shows the lengths the MDC goes to for the latest poop).

Miami's housing director says that most of the students who checked out scored staff members for failing to keep order. The remainder said the rules were "too strict and confining."

How long will it take 'em to find out the customer is always right, anyway?

STUDENT COPS ON THE TAKE,TOO? A letter to the editor of Lex, the student newspaper of the John Jay College of Criminal Justice in NYC, complains about the epidemic of shoplifting that has been noted in the local bookstore.

The managers of the Lex Book Exchange, Inc., revealed in their letter that "within the past several months, a disturbingly large number of students have been apprehended, arrested and convicted of willful concealment or petty larceny, the two separate charges associated with shoplifting..."

Their warning included a Persian proverb: "An Egg-Thief soon becomes a Camel-Thief."

Which should keep anybody honest.

IN THE EYE OF THE BEHOLDER...Life of Central Michigan U. put the headline, "Art presentation has naked ladies," on the story of a student show they advertised as "Motels, Landscapes and Naked Ladies."

Must have been a reavealing display.

SPEAKING OF EXPOSES reminds that the Vidette of Illinois State U. devoted three full pages of a recent issue to a study of poor housing conditions for off-campus student residents.

Their traveling photog found a dead rat (pictured on page one) in the basement of one ISU-approved off-campus house. But that wasn't the big news. Seems that the house is owned by an attorney in partnership with the chairman of the University's Academic Senate.

Conflict of interest? Or is the rat trying to tell something?

HEADLINE OF THE WEEK from page one of the Modesto Jr. College (Calif.) Pirate's Log: "Don't Make Someone a Thief, Protect Your Property."

MEANWHILE, at Indiana University, the Daily Student has reported that there's a revolution brewing in the home ec department there. Seems that the traditional HE concept of needles and pins and pots and pans is being restructured to place more emphasis on family and consumer affairs and to offer a non-career-oriented program.

As Gloria Steinem might say, "Right On."

MEANEST THIEF STORY comes from Erie Community College (Buffalo, N.Y.) Element, which has announced the theft of the galley proofs of the literary magazine, Collage.

In her appeal to the thief to return the galleys "which could not have been of any real importance to this person," Editor Deb Joyce explained that production of the mag came to a halt as a result of the theft.

Wonder if they were worth stealing?

PUBS BURIED at Mankato State (Minn.), this month, include two mags and the yearbook, according to a page one story in the Daily Reporter.

The only survivor of the Publications Board coup is the student newspaper. The PB decided as an alternative to the three pubs to produce one "general interest" magazine of unspecified frequency. The proposed mag would be devoted to in-depth treatment of current topics decided by recognized campus organizations.

Weather Need Question Mark

WINDSOR LOCKS, Conn. (AP)-The weather bureau at Bradley International Airport keeps a Farmer's Almanac hanging on the wall.

Both the bureau and the book predict the weather, neither with total accuracy. One uses a less-than-perfect theory based on climate, the other a less-than-perfect computer.

According to the meteorologist-in-charge at Bradley, M. Roland Laro, people are happier not knowing for sure what kind of weather next week will bring.

"One hundred per cent accuracy would be monotonous," he said in an interview.

He did talk with pride about the weather service being right 84 to 85 per cent of the time when it predicts the next 36 hours' weather.

"But to even approach 100 per cent accuracy would require a computer many times faster than that currently being used," Laro said. "The cost would have to be financed by the government, and it would be astronomical.

"There are so many more things that need financing today-the poverty program for one-that weather forecasting must take a low priority...

"And do we really want 100 per cent forecasting?

"If we knew the week before Christmas there would be no snow, who'd want to buy skis? And the sports shops would suffer. If we knew a week ahead of time that Miami would be cloudy during our vacation, we'd be disappointed and might not have gone."

The weather bureau, technically the National Weather Service, gives weather "outlooks" up to five days in advance. But Laro stressed that the accuracy of a five-day "outlook" is much lower than that of a 36-hour "forecast."

The Farmer's Almanac, which the bureau has on hand just as a point of interest, makes its predictions months in advance.

Laro says it does so by looking back over the records of past years.

This information and ground observations are fed into a computer in Washington, and maps are made showing high-and-low pressure areas, warm-and-cold fronts and other weather phenomena across the nation.

With the help of larger bureaus in New York and Boston, the Bradley bureau prepares the forecasts for the state of Connecticut and the Springfield, Mass., area.

The country has had a national weather service only since 1870. Records at Bradley date from 1904, when the bureau was set up in Hartford at the corner of Pearl and Main Streets. With the growth of aviation, it moved to Bradley Field.

Now, Laro says, with the growth of communications, the trend is to move some bureaus back into cities, since pilots can get full information just as fast by telephone and other electronic instruments.

The bureau sends its information by teletype to the state police and to the news media that subscribe to its service. Periodically through the day, the meteorologists turn broadcasters, reading the weather to stations for broadcast.

Gonorrhea, What It Is And What To Do If You Get It

(Ed. note-The University's Health Education Department will be presenting a regular column in the Collegian on health matters relevant to the University community. They ask that the student body submit any questions they might have in the area of health, both physical and mental, for use in the column. Questions may be sent to the Health Education Department, at the Infirmary.)

By BARRY SLATER, M.D.

Question: What is gonorrhea?

Answer: Gonorrhea is one form of venereal disease. It is transmitted during sexual relations. It is caused by a bacteria, the gonococcus, that can survive and multiply in the genital tract of man.

Question: What are the symptoms of gonorrhea?

Answer: The symptoms are variable. They depend upon the sex of the patient, the site of exposure, and the spread of the organism. Symptoms are caused by inflamation or abcess formation at the infected area. Most women, however, who carry the gonococcus organism in their genital tract have no symptoms at all. Some women develop a vaginal irritation with a foul smelling, yellow discharge. Less frequently women develop pelvic inflammatory disease which presents as abdominal pain following a menstual period. In this illness, the gonococcus has invaded the fallopian tubes with possible consequence of sterility.

Men who have the disease almost always have symptoms of stinging and burning urination with a yellow penile discharge occurring several days to several weeks following exposure.

Gonorrhea can involve other sexual structures and can, if untreated, cause sterility. The gonococcus can be respondible for diseases other then gonorrhea. In both men and women it is rarely responsible for a form of arthritis, pharyngitis, and, very rarely, a form of meningitis.

Question: If most women don't have symptoms, then how does a woman know when she has gonorrhea?

Answer: This is a difficult problem. It is important to keep in mind, that gonorrhea, although considered to be epidemic, still effects only a small percentage of the population. Most health services, for practical reasons, seek out only those patients with known or suspected exposure to gonorrhea rather than try to detect the reservoir of patients without symptoms. The Infirmary is currently investigating a means of having females obtain their own cervical samples for culture. This program will be aimed at asymptomatic carriers.

Question: How do you treat gonorrhea?

Answer: The gonococcus is susceptible to certain antibiotics. Penicillin is the antibiotic most commonly used. In recent years the gonococcus has developed some resistance to penicillin. Larger dosages are needed to eradicate this bacteria. Tetracycline, another antibiotic, is used in paients allergic to penicillin or resistant to penicillin treatment.

Question: What do you do when you see someone who suspects they have gonorrhea?

Answer: The first thing I do is take a history in order to find out whether that person's suspicions are justified. If they have had sexual relations with someone who has had gonorrhea, or if they have symptoms of gonorrhea, I examine the urine and the discharge for the gonococcus and signs of inflammation. I will treat the suspected case with either penicillin or tetracycline, and have the patient come back for a follow-up to make sure that both the symptoms have resolved and the culture is negative.

Question: How can someone who is sexually active present getting gonorrhea?

Answer: There is no complete protection. There are however, some precautions that can be taken. First, it is important not to have sexual relations with anyone who has any undiagnosed genital infection of any kind, particularly if a discharge is involved. Second, the use of condoms will decrease the chance of exchanging gonorrhea between participants. Third, to prevent complications one should consult a physician if one suspects gonorrhea, or has questions concerning it.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

The Scorpio woman can be warm to the point of passion, practical to a degree that approaches penuriousness and charming enough to often almost any faults. She can be criticized, but hardly ignored. She is especially good, in a financial sense, for men born under Libra. Some famous Scorpio women include Princess Grace of Monaco, Indira Gandhi and Margaret Mead.

Gymnasts At Home Against Pittsburgh

By MICHAEL CUSACK

On Sat. Feb. 5, beginning at 2 p.m. the UMass gymnastics team will take on the squad from the Univ. of Pitt in the Boyden Auxiliary Gym. The Redmen are currently sporting a 3-1 record, while Pitt is seeking their first win of the year. However, the UMass squad is considered to be much stronger than their Pitt counterparts. No trouble is anticipated as the Redmen go after victory number four.

Coach Warren Neiger's Pittsburgh team has been scoring in the 130 range in meets thus far this year. Although the team lacks depth, they have several gymnasts who will be contesting with the Redmen for individual honors. Most notable among these are two of their all-around men, Len Gracik, and Dick Pribis. Gracik has been scoring very high on pommel horse, and is quite capable of scoring in the nines. Pribis performs his best on floor exercise and longhorse vaulting.

The UMass team hopes to perform well, as this meet is considered to be a crucial jumping off point for next week's meet with arch rival, Springfield College. The toughest team in the E.I.G.L. is Penn State, again, but in no way does this put a damper on the rivalry between the Redmen and the Chiefs.

Redmen coach Erik Kjeldsen will be changing his lineup for the Pitt and Springfield meets in an effort to produce the best team effort possible. Saturday's lineup will hopefully be a shift to consistency, giving the Redmen greater potential for a higher score. While the highest output for the Redmen this year is 152.5, Kjeldsen hopes to have his squad score in the 155 range against Pittsburgh, thus showing that they have the necessary power to defeat Springfield next Wed.

Representing the Redmen in the all-around event will be senior co-capt. Tony Vacca, junior Steve Scuderi, and sophomore Rich Seikunas. Scuderi, who's progress was hampered by a back injury, has been working hard to regain his position in the lineup. His presence and performance in the all-around should be a great aid to the team.

Both of the UMass floor specialists are not in top physical condition, but should be able to give a good account of themselves. Kjeldsen will be looking for a top score from senior John Calabria, who has been a victim of an ankle injury. The Redmen will also be counting on junior Jack Berner for a good score. Despite lack of practice due to injured wrists, Berner led all Redmen scores on floor for the last meet against Penn State.

On pommel horse, the addition of Len Aubrey brightens what has otherwise been a dim picture. The Redmen need three scores of 8.0 or better if they are to be in contention in their close meets. Scuderi should provide one of these, while Aubrey will hopefully come across with another. Junior Steve Nelson, who finally began to realize his potential in the team's last outing, should deliver the other score.

While the sidehorse team has been strengthened, the ring squad will be somewhat thinner than normal. Vacca will have to come through with one of the top three scores for UMass. The specialists will be juniors John Oliver and Jay Aronstein. Kjeldsen will be looking for a mid eight routing from Oliver, while Aronstein should be in the low nines.

On longhorse valuting, Kjeldsen will go with sophomore Jay Thomsen and Calabria. Behind the vaulting of Thomsen, who should score his usual 9.2, the Redmen will have a good event total.

This year has seen the introduction of a new rule which limits the number of competing gymnasts per squad to twelve. Due to this change, the Redmen will only have one specialist in each of the last two events. Senior co-capt. Dave Genest will go on parallel bars, while Tom Mysliicki will handle the horizontal bar specialty.

This Sat. will be a big test for the Redmen, as they hope to show themselves and their fans that they have the ability to score the necessary points for victories in close meets.

Girl Swimmers Outclassed

By JANIS AHMADJIAN

"Look at the size of the pool!" everyone on the UMass Women's Swim Team said the moment they stepped into the pool area at Springfield College. If you ever saw their 50 meter long Olympic size pool with four diving boards plus a diving platform you'd know why were were in awe. To go along with this superior swimming facility, Springfield also has an experienced, highly aggressive women's swim team which downed UMass 98-14 Wednesday night.

Springfield displayed its tremendous power which sent ten of its girls to the Nationals last year. The young UMass team competed to the best of their ability. Everyone dropped their times. High point of the meet was when freshman Laurie Seluk won a first in the 100 yard Individual Medley with a time of 1:14. She also placed a third in the 50 yard Butterfly and the 50 yard Freestyle.

Other third place wins included Claire Briana in the 200 yard Freestyle and the 100 yard Breastroke, Sue White - 50 yard Backstroke, Mary Beth Stanne - 50 yard Breastroke and 100 yard Butterfly, Jan Reid - 100 yard Freestyle, and Roxanne LaCoste - 100 yard Backstroke.

Coach Pat Griffin after the meet said "I'm very proud of you all. We have a lot to work on before our next meet, but, we gained much by competing with this strong Springfield team."

Enthusiasm is high as the team prepares for the upcoming meet with University of Vermont next Friday nite, February 11th.

Schuba - "Unbeatable"

SAPPORO, Japan, (AP)-Beatrix Schuba, who draws school figures with the precision of a draftsman's compass, said on the eve of her Olympics gold medal bid that she is unbeatable.

"I don't think anyone can catch me," said the controversial world figure skating champion from Austria. "I'm really prepared. I'm at my peak."

Miss Schuba, the 21-year-old daughter of a widowed Vietnese woodshop keeper, has the build of a lumberjack, the pulse of a well-oiled clock, and - compared to others - the free-skating grace of a camel.

Her composure, concentration and mechanics make her a champion on judges' marks in the compulsories, a lacklustre event by spectator standards. It is in the eye-appealing freeskating competition-ballet on ice - that she creates consternation among the crowd because she is outclassed.

But each segment counts equally in the final analysis. In six national, two European and one world championships, she built up such an overwhelming margin in the compulsories that no one could catch her.

"Julie Holmes would come closest," the 5-foot-9, 148-pound athlete said of her Winter Games medal chances. "I haven't seen her skate this year, though. I'm basing it on what I saw of her last year."

Crew Faces Tough Slate Frosh Have Openings

The UMass Rowing Association is beginning more intense preparation for its spring season. Volunteer freshman coach Charles "Lenard" Leonard is looking for more freshman prospects to compliment the fine group he is already training.

"Essentially, we are looking for good size people, at least 6' and 170 lbs., the bigger the better, who have played some sport before and are cognizant of the sacrifices necessary to win. Only one of this year's squad rowed before college, so we're really working with new talent. Of course nobody is on scholarship, so there is no preferential treatment."

This year's schedule has been beefed up considerably to now include MIT, Columbia, Princeton, Northeastern, Boston University, and an invitation to compete at the Intercollegiate National Championships has already been received.

A spring vacation trip is also in the works.

Leonard sees the problems of freshman crew at UMass as simply lack of contact. "Too many freshman either don't know we exist or if they do, they have so many misconceptions about rowing that it scares them away. As a result they never inquire about the opportunities. Rowing isn't for everyone but a lot of people should try it to find out what boat racing is all about."

The crew's weight and tank room in WOPE is open most afternoons and evenings. Anybody interested should drop by or call Mike Faherty in 211 Boyden at 5-2801.

Poor Gary Wichard

GREENVALE, N.Y. (AP)- The pro football scouts came that horrible week in Mobile, Ala., and they saw, and Gary Wichard, press clippings and all, was conquered.

"If Gary had been drafted in the first three rounds, as we originally thought he would be, he probably could have had a six-figure contract," said Bob Woolf, the Boston lawyer who represents numerous athletes. "But now..."

After hanging around a local newspaper, his coach's office and the C.W. Post College dormitory for the better part of two days waiting for the phones to ring, the Little All-American quarterback finally was picked by the Baltimore Colts late Wednesday afternoon in the 16th and next to last round of the National Football League draft, and 412th of 442 players selected.

"A couple of clubs told me during the season they were thinking of drafting me high," said the 6-foot-2 quarterback who completed 53.9 per cent of his passes for 2,287 yards and 23 touchdowns. "I was thinking of the first two rounds."

Keenan Paces 8-3 Win

By JIM PINSKY

After spotting Merrimack College three early goals, the UMass Hockey team came back to record an 8-3 win. The brave crowd of 800 was really treated to two games. The first lasting about eleven minutes of the opening period, and the other being the rest of the game. Merrimack after being 45 minutes late opened with a boom. They opened the scoring at 3:09 when Bob Boucher scored on a slapshot. They added another at 4:25 and 11:09 to give Merrimack a 3-0 lead. During this period they outskated the Redmen and played much better hockey. The comscoring in the first period with an assist from Jim Coleman.

The second period didn't see a score until 11:51. Although the Redmen completely dominated they couldn't seem to score. Finally Bob Shea score unassisted. Pat Keenan added his second of the night at 12:45 with assists from Captain Brian Sullivan and Dan Reidy. At this point the outcome of the game was in little doubt as UMass completely dominated. Merrimack fell apart and its downfall was an inability to clear the puck. UMass came back again at 17:40 when Don Riley scored from Eric Scrafield and Bob Shea. Dan Reidy finally got a goal of his own after two assists to end the second period.

The most exciting aspect of the third period was seeing if the whole game could be played without a penalty. Finally goalie P.J. Flaherty got called for slashing at 14:29. Going 54 minutes of college hockey without a penalty must be a record. Don Lowe finished out the scoring to make the final 8-3.

It had to be a gratifying win for Coach Jack Canniff after seeing his team fall behind 3-0. Following the game Coach Canniff said, "We couldn't afford to drop this one. After coming off a loss to Vermont this is a really big win. Merrimack had just beat Bowdoin and after plexion soon changed and UMass finally scored at 13:01 with Jim Coleman doing the honors. The Redmen then came back again at 16:37 when Pat Keenan scored assisted by Dan Reidy. Charlie Donovan closed out the Redmen the start I was really pleased with the way we came back."

The hockey team plays its next game away at the University of Connecticut at Storrs on Tuesday, Feb. 9. They return home Feb. 12 against Northeastern.

Runners At Storrs

By SANDY LAWN

Today at 4 p.m., UMass will be in Storrs trying to break UConn's present string of 23 straight victories in indoor meets. NYU will also be there to complicate matters as the Redmen bring a 1-1 slate into their first conference meet. In respect to the conference title, this is their most important meet as UConn is rated with UMass as the YanCon's best. Coach Ken O'Brien was quick to point out the rivalry between the two squads. "Last year they beat us indoors and we beat them outdoors. We're up for this one."

UMass will be counting on a lot of points in the sprints and hurdles which have been strong this year. Coach O'Brien thinks the middle distance relays may be the key however. "At Dartmouth, we lost both relays and lost the meet, at Brown, we won both and won the meet." Asked about the strengths of the other two teams, O'Brien felt UConn was solid right down the line while NYU, "has some outstanding individuals but is not particularly strong as a team." NYU's strong points include the throwing and distance events. O'Brien was particularly concerned with the distance where they "might be able to rob some points from us".

All in all it's UMass vs. UConn with NYU playing spoiler. Said O'Brien: "On paper, UConn is a slight favorite, but these boys may be agree with that"

Controversial Sports Talk

Marty Kelly and Kent Best will host sports talk this Sunday at 10 p.m. on WMUA in what should be the most controversial show of the season.

Revision of the Athletic Council has been in the limelight since the beginning of the year and still continues to be surrounded by misconceptions and misinformation.

Guests will include Professor George Richason, chairman of the Athletic Council, Lee Sandwen, president of the Student Senate and Bob Medeiros, News Editor of the Collegian.

UNH 11th Victim

By EARLE BARROLL

If a Mennan's after shave advertising agent was at Curry Hicks Cage last night he would have come up with a great idea for another commercial.

All he'd have to do is come up with a new brand for the cager, like the "one-three-one" and when things are on the downswing, just apply it to the team and take it from there.

That's just what Jack Leaman did last night at Curry Hicks Cage. He added a little "one-three-one" to his team and some three minutes and fourteen points later he turned to assistant Fan Gaudette and said, "Thanks, I needed that."

As a matter of fact the entire Cage crowd needed that as the Redmen exploded and turned a boring game into a crowd pleaser they went on to easily defeat New Hampshire, 83-50 in a big Yankee Conference win that keeps UMass ahead of the pack with a 3-0 slate.

UNH was noticably hurting from a two week layoff and Leaman was quick to make note of this. "They weren't sharp like I've seen them previously," he said. "Anytime you're off

UNH was noticably hurting from a two week layoff and Leaman was quick to make note of this. "They weren't sharp like I've seen them previously," he said. "Anytime you're off two weeks it hurts. They're a better team than they showed tonight."

Up until the point of no return UMass and UNH were having their troubles, but Leaman insulted the half court trap press (one-three-one), added Rick Vogeley for the foul plagued Al Skinner and the combined efforts of these two with Chris Coffin, John Betancourt, Peter Trow and Tom McLaughlin sky-rocketed the lead to 15, 30-15.

Vogeley, who set a UMass record by hitting his 24th straight foul shot (it's still running), perhaps summed it up the best when he said, "I tried to end it as quickly as possible. "It wasn't as simple as that but the jist of the statement sets the explosion in its proper perspective...quick and efficient.

Said assistant coach Fan Gaudette, "The half court trap creates action in the ballgame. There's no way the opposition can run an offense."....this is just what happened.

In the second half UMass completely dominated play and ran off spurt after spurt that completed the demolition in convincing fashion.

Leaman was happy with the play of Betancourt (22 points) Trow (19), McLaughlin (11) and Coffin (12 and 11 rebounds and also held Dave Pemberton (top ten in scoring and second in rebounding in New England) to seven points and a dozen caroms.

Leaman also said, "We ran our offenses well, especially in the second half and it was maybe then that we found ourselves.

"This was a big win for us. We were afraid of this game, even after we jumped on top at the half, but we did play well in the second half. I was surprised that we didn't have to full court press, but it was probably the size of their guards (5'10, 6') that made our trap effective."

The only Wildcat who gave UMass fits was little Erie Faragne who gunned his way to 20 points and several times in the first half kept the Redmen from blowing the Wildcats out of the game.

Tomorrow at 1 p.m. on channel 22, the ECAC game of the week features UMass at Syracuse.

The stock on UMass basketball has risen...so will Mennan if that agent takes a hint.

Frosh Beat AIC

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

For the second time in three days, the UMass freshmen basketball team was confronted by a JV squad, this time defeating AIC 94-70 last night.

Coach Fan Gaudette's charges, after some early mistakes, settled down to work the ball inside for the easy basket. 3 1/2 minutes later, the big men, with Tom Gillams scoring two buckets, John Murphy one, and Bill Endicott one established a commanding lead of 8-2. AIC switched to a full court press, but there was no stopping the cagers, as the whiz from Clinton threw to the Somerville master for an easy lay up. Along with a super offense, featuring the hitting of the open man, the little Redmen played a tenacious defense which continually harassed the outmatched Yellow Jackets.

Over a two minute period, the dribblers from UMass outscored AIC 8-0 to take an overwhelming 18 point lead with just over eight minutes to go. A feature of this spurt were two steals by Mike Flanagan and Jim Burke within fifteen seconds.

Gillams and Murphy continually blocked shots and made things difficult for the smaller and slower Jackets. At half time the frosh went into the locker room with a very comfortable 52-26 lead.

The second half started with more of the same, with Gillams tapping to Murphy and Burke for the shot underneath. The Redmen accumulated points rapidly as Endicott hit from the corner; Gillams, Murphy and Flanagan laying them in; and Burke getting the ball into the big boys.

Coach Gaudette substituted freely the last twelve minutes, as there was no doubt as to who would win, but rather what the final score would be. The crowd once again came to life, in the final minutes exhorting the frosh to reach the century mark, but were denied satisfation as time ran out with the final score 94-70.

Dribblings: Bill Endicott led the frosh hitting 11-14 shots for 22 points. He was followed by Gillams with 20, Flanagan, 14, Murphy, 11, Boron, 10, and Burke, 9. Gillams and Murphy led all rebounders with 13 and 12. AIC was outrebounded decisively 52-24 and were outshot from the field, as the little Redmen shot 52.4%, as opposed to 36.4%.

This Saturday, the frosh will be traveling up north to Dartmouth to oppose a much improved team, which Coach Gaudette says is playing totally different than the team which lost in the Cage at the beginning of the season.

Wrestling Saturday

By JOHN BOCK

Any sports fan that has access to either the AP or UPI teletype anxiously awaits that time of the week that the wire comes alive with the weekly football or basketball polls. The same fan must suffer with the knowledge that the poll is a vote of members of the wire service sports staff, some of whom are not reknowned for their knowledge of the sport in question.

Wrestling fans, on the other hand, don't suffer this weekly anxiety for they know that the poll that comes out is one that has been constructed with respect to the voting of knowledgeable wrestling coaches and writers.

New England wrestling fans, in particular, will be pleased to know that as of the February 3rd NEIWA poll, the University of Massachusetts has risen to the top of the list, from fourth place, by virtue of their remarkable victory over the Springfield Chiefs.

So the "second season", recently spoke of, and running with UMass in the lead. It continues this Saturday at 2:00 in Curry Hicks Cage when the Redmen host the United States Coast Guard Academy. Coast Guard has a typically tough academy team and should never be underestimated. Last year the wrestlers travelled to New London and came back stinging from a one point loss to Coast Guard. They then went on to finish fourth in the New Englands and have their freshman team finish first.

It is the same defeat that keeps coming back to haunt the grapplers as it marred an excellent 16-3-1 record. Coach Homer Barr, when queried as to whether or not the big win over Springfield might not make the team overconfident, replied, "I think that the win will make us tough, particularly when we remember last year. The boys might be a little let down after Springfield but we have not slacked up in practice."

Stepping onto the mat for the Redmen wrestlers are Dave Amato at 118 lbs., Barry Godowsky, 126, Mike McGlaughlin, 134, Clay Jester, 142, Capt. Shelley Goldberg, 150, Chris Cadwallader, 158, Mike Duffy, 167, Bruce Buckbee, 177, John Connolly, 190, and Carl Dambman Heavyweight.

A formidable task looms ahead of the team. Can they continue the success of their "second season" and still be ready for the New Englands?

The answer lies in almost the same form for any Cage match. You had better get there early.

Faces, anyone?

The Day The Music Died

By STEVE COMOLLI

(The following commentary is a rationale for a large spring concert written by a member of the Concert Committee. The proposal in question was rejected by the Administration that action was consequently condemned by the Student Senate and for further details of that action see today's Collegian.)

The Who or The Faces (with Rod Stewart) will not be able to perform the greatest show of UMass's history in front of 15,000-20,000 students during an afternoon in the spring. Unfortunately this situation has resulted from the uncommunicable meeting with Vice Chancellor Gage Tuesday morning. My job as a member of the Concert Committee was to contact the different groups. I called the Rolling Stones, Faces, The Who, Grateful Dead, the Bangledesh benefit people and others. The Stones won't be around in the spring, I discovered, George Harrison's crew is too hard to assemble for just a one day performance. I also received a flat "no" when I asked the Dead's agent if they could do a show up here. He said the Dead have refused to do any more college gigs, they have already turned down a tour of ten colleges in the South. He said they would not return to this are for awhile because they hit Boston on their last tour. But Pete Townsend and the Who and the Faces with Rod Stewart are doing spring tours in this U.S. If Dr. Gage approves any concert plans, then we can hopefully get a weekend date with either one of these groups. Here is how it stands

First of all, there is no reason why we shouldn't be able to have a successful first rate concert here at the University. The stadium holds 20,000 as compared to the Garden's 16,000, Boston's largest facility. New York City's largest concert hall, Madison Square Garden, can only hold 22,000, a mere 2,000 more than our facility. We have potentially one of the country's largest concert arenas. But, unlike the other large auditoriums, we would not have to cope with a surrounding city and it's congested population. Once we learned (continued on page 3)

The Overthrow: Part Two

After battling long waiting lines, the computers of Whitmore, and the likes of Vernon P. Hemling I came to the ultimate conclusion (with a little help from my greasy little friend) that if you can't join them beat them using the wits they gave you. With that distinctly vengeful thought running through my newly born revolutionary mind my friend and I stumbled into "bites and sucks" (alias Bites and Pieces) where we were to continue our plan of action for the disruption of the smooth-flowing English 125 program.

We walked up to the counter to get something to eat. Just at that moment another friend of mine came skidding into the serving area with a huge german-sheapard hot on his heels. "It's the 'midget'", I said. The "midget" was just the man we needed for the main assault on the Bookstore. He was just a runt really, but out of the kindness of my heart I alternated between calling him "midget" and, his Christian name, Big Louie.

Big Louie has a thing with canines--they can't coexist together. It's the same kind of nightmare situation that W.C. Fields described: "I let sleeping dogs lie, and they bite while having a bad dream!" This was no sleeping dog; we beat it off by practically crushing its skull with a couple of tuna-salad sandwiches (three days old). We grabbed something to eat and sat in a table in the far corner.

"Big Louie", I said, turning to the little guy, "Meet Nick", meaning my friend of the greasy intelligentsia. "Louie, Nick". Now to get the invaluable midget into the sceme.

"Louie," I said, "I'm about to make you an offer that could make you a legend in your own time, put you on the front page of the "Daily Collegian", bring you the adulation of the entire campus, earn you a place in the annals of the history of this great institution; then again, we'll probably all get kicked out of school on our respective asses."

I could see that throughout my speech Big Louie had been envisaging all the glorious rewards that could be his. He saw only visions of grandeur, and he cried, "I'll do it", not yet knowing what "it" was.

"Louie", I said leaning close. "Your part in this operation is a major one. You are an invaluable component. We need your little froggy body in our plan to undermine the English 125 program."

Big Louie lurched back in his chair and, in a voice tremulous with a tone somewhere between rage and incredulity he bellowed, "Are you shiting me?" The he fell out of his chair.

"Nope", Nick and I echoed. "Look-it", I said, "Ever since my first involvement with English 125 I've been getting the run around, the fuck-over."

"You're a man of causes", said Nick as the midget picked himself up off the floor and hopped himself into his chair. "Look at this adventure as a blow for freedom, a possible reversal of the repressing administrative forces of this institution."

"Big Louis never backs down from a commitment", he mumbled as he stuffed his mouth with simulated egg-salad. Then he thumped the table: "All I want is a piece of the action."

"Come on" I pleaded "There is no 'action', only a just cause. I'll tell you want I'll do, though. If we survive this escapade to tell the tale I'll stuff you with so many Darvons you'll be blasted into oblivion and won't be able to get up for three days. Okay?"

"Four", he grunted as more "egg-salad" went in.

"Nick", I started, "I think the first thing we should do is to go see Irma and find out just who runs the 125 program." Erma, for all you non-English majors is Irma Forader. You can find her in the English Undergraduate Office on the second floor of Bartlett Hall. Irma is a pretty interesting character; she does a great imitation of an English accent. You can also identify her by her big name plate on her desk. Seek her out. Harass her! (She's the mother image in the story.)

Nick said, "Yeh! There are all kinds of possibilities with finding the guy who runs the program: kidnapping, brain-washing, barn burning, terrorizing."

"Wait a minute, wait a minute. Lets just do some reconoitering first; the brain washing will come later...hummmm...now there's a thought." With those diabolical words we got up to leave "bites and sucks" to see if we could beat the clock and catch Irma before her mad five o'clock dash to the back stairway. We headed out of "passion pit" (alias Southwest) glancing to one side then the other, then whispering to each other, our heads close together.

The Morality Of Retribution

When Armageddon came in the Spring and Summer of 1942 the Allies found themselves forced to administrate justice on fallen Germany and Japan. They first debated amongst themselves as to the method, then decided on a military tribunal. The trials at Nuremberg and Tokyo are the results and are questioned as to their moral and legal premises by UMass History professor Richard Minear. His book, Victor's Justice: The Tokyo War Crime Trial, is analyzed on page five by Frank Baglione and asks the question were the Axis Powers victim to our self-righteous wrath?

Our Eastern Half

You might be surprised to know that you are living the "sheltered, collegiate" life here in Amherst, or so say some of Cynthia Nadreau's friends at UMass Boston. Miss Nadreau, from the vantage point of two weeks in Amherst takes a personal look at some of the frustration of attending UMass Boston, citing in particular tremendous losses in time and enthusiasm caused by having to commute. It seems that our Boston undergraduates suffer from chronic ailments not uncommon to the Amherst area.

A Cat Named Moussorgsky

Modeste Mussorgsky wrote Pictures At An Exhibition to memoralize his close friend artist Victor Hartmann. He chose a number of that artist's favorite paintings and wrote musical impressions of each. His work was gloriously orchestrated by Maurice Ravel in 1925 and has now been further reinterpreted by Emerson, Lake, and Palmer on their latest lp. The mixture of rock and the classics at first may seem brash, and Gary Gomes talks at length about the synthesis in his review on page eight.

And Above And Beyond Your Wildest Dreams

You could start logically enough on our front page where the rationale for a large Spring concert is given an intensive going over. The concert has been given much concern lately and this may prove more fuel to the fire. And if it's fiery writing you want, turn to our record pages where the latest by Laura Nyro, and Captain Beefheart are reviewed and an interesting man named Edward may like to make your acquaintance. This is on pages six and seven. Then read why Straw Dogs revels in unnecessary violence in the review on page nine. Follow through with the Ridiculous Theatrical Company on page ten. Their appearance here demands your attention even only for the novel idea of a rape on stage. Break a Leg, so to speak. And as far as blunders there's last week's Puzzle to contend with. The mistake was our's to which we apologize and hope you will give us another chance back on page 11 where Basic Audio shares a page with this latest addition. Weekend ties it together on the rear.

The Day...

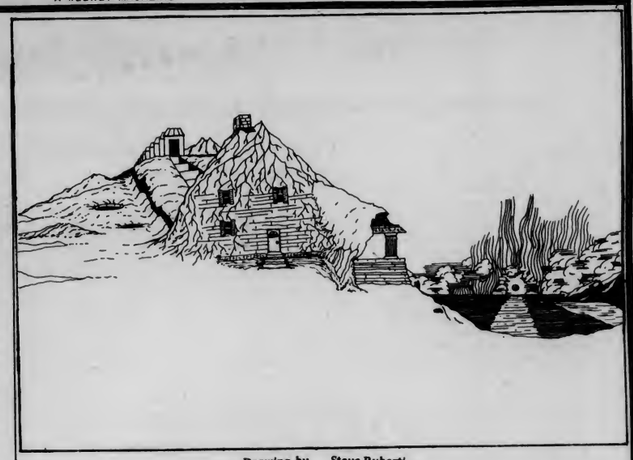
how to run a successful concert, then we could have some of the best live rock shows ever done in the U.S. But now we need money for renting sound equipment, insurance, stage facilities, for the cost of the group, and most importantly for proper security. We have no money now and if we don't get any before the concert to pay for necessary expenses then we are sunk. If we sign big groups like The Who and The Faces we could count on selling a good 15,000 tickets. Then we'd have our money from advance ticket sales. We can not use second class bands who do not have enough of the essential attraction power needed to sell 15,000 tickets, otherwise we'd find ourselves with little money and an extra 14,000 tickets, this concert would be a dreadful failure. We must sign a top group with great attraction power so we can assure ourselves a sellout, thus giving ourselves the needed $60,000 to $80,000 to properly finance the concert and to provide competent and complete security measures.

Tickets would go on sale about six weeks before the concert. Ticket sales must be fair so everyone has a chance to go to the concert. The best plan I've heard is to set up four or five ticketrons all over the campus. This would eliminate the long lines at the Union. For instance, an Orchard Hill student would go to Webster House, present his ID to the teletype operator who sells him a ticket after registering his number to the computer. There would be one round of ticket sales, it would be on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of some week. A student can purchase only two tickets during this week, remaining tickets would be sold to interested members of the five-college community and to the local public.

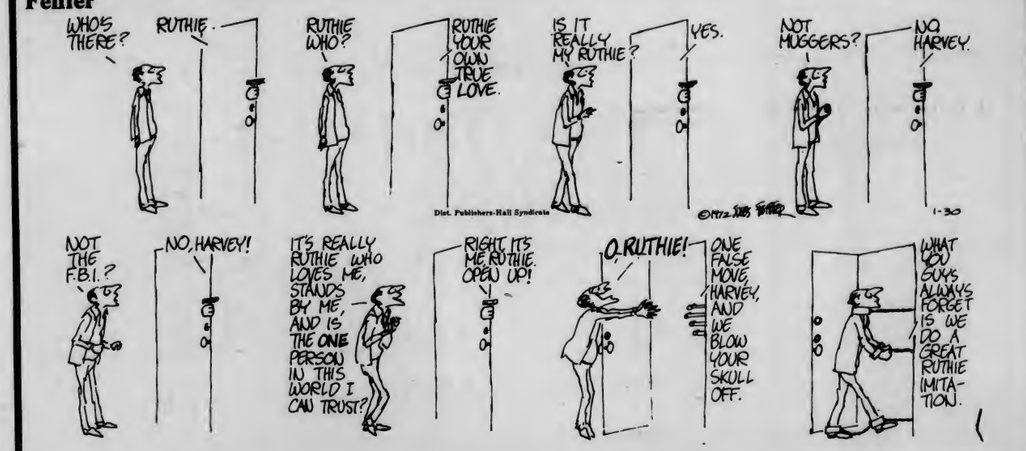
This method prevents a small percentage of students, say 5,000 from buying all 20,00 tickets. Under this method a person can buy up to four tickets, some of which usually go to people outside the campus. We can not chance having no tickets available for any UMass student who wants to see the spring concert. I think the ticketron is fair because if 10,000 students want to see The Who in the stadium then they are at least guaranteed the right of getting one or two tickets for themselves, a friend or date. Proper ticket sales would prohibit large numbers of outsiders to take the seats of the students. UMass students should be guaranteed all the tickets they need before anyone else. Once every student was given this chance then it would be unreasonable for him to crash the gates under the heavy security measures that he will be informed about from dorm meetings and from the various media months in advance of the show. Essentially there is no reason why we can not have a successful concert. We've got the space, and we'll have the money if we can sign a big group. And if we make sure that every student who wants a ticket can get one then our only problem becomes one of security.



In order to have a successful concert and in order to prevent damage and injury, we must not cut ourselves short on security. In last Friday's Poor Richard's, Mr. Scanlon and Dr. Gage feared an onslaught of "outsiders" or "imports" if we had a well known group. They are somwhat correct in their feelings but like the concerts in Boston Garden we must become just as responsible as they have and be willing to spend $10,000 to $20,000 for proper security. We will have to buy the same amount of protection that the four walls provide for the Boston Garden.

The concert will be given on a Saturday afternoon so it should be easier for people to get around. And all students will be asked to be inside the stadium at least an hour before the show starts, gates will be opened two hours before the concert begins. We want to get everyone inside the stadium before the concert starts so things can get settled. There will only be student marshals inside the stadium. These marshals will have to go through a rigid training course provided by the greateful services of Room To Move. There will also be medics inside the stadium who will work with the people from Room To Move to provide care for any possible medical or drug problems. The outside security would consist of a snow fence, two ten-foot high walls, and finally the present wire tence that already surrounds the stadium. These fences will extend completely around the stadium and only stop at entrance areas. These non-entrance areas will be patroled by campus police under the direction of Mr. O'Neil. Mr. O'Neil will also handle all traffic problems. Students will be greeted by campus police and students at all entrances. But our best security will come from disciplined students. We are going to meet with all the students on a dorm to dorm basis months before the show, and explain everything to them and also tell them to ask unwarranted guests to stay away and that they'll have to climb over four fences and a police line if they attempt to get in, good luck to them. There will also be guards at every dorm during the afternoon for security measures. A word on personal liability is appropriate at this moment. The University is not anymore responsible for a concert crowd than it is for football or roller derby crowds. As student lawyer, Mr. Howland explained it, if a person falls off the top of the stadium then you are responsible, if he was on drugs or drunk you are not responsible. If you should trip someone then you are responsible, but if he trips in a hole in the cement then the state is responsible. So legally the University accepts the same responsibility for a concert crowd as it does for a football crowd, no more and no less.

All of this is going to cost money and take discipline, but we'll be able to have many concerts from here on out if we only do everything properly this first time around.



Mr. Scanlon and Dr. Gage both had other questions concerning the concert. Mr. Scanlon felt that a large number of tickets would go to outsiders, but I feel much of this will be prevented if everyone is given an equal chance to buy a ticket. He also feared the advent of gate crashers. But hopeful gate crashers and concerts go together like ham and cheese, you can't totally avoid having lookers-on at any concert, you can only properly secure the stadium so trouble can be prevented and it will take manpower and dollars to do it properly. Mr. Scanlon was also concerned about the descending of 20,000 people on this area and how this would worry local police and cause traffic jams. But most of these 20,000 people will be the students that are already here so the local police need only to worry as much as they do now about us. Mr. Scanlon was also skeptical about using rent-a-cops for security. I feel Mr. O'Neil has enough knowledge and experience as the Director of Security to control the stadium Saturday afternoon. If Dr. Gage feels that Mr. O'Neil can't handle the job then we'll need rent-a-cops. We'll need to hire rent-a-cops for proper security and to insure total safety. I have witnessed many unsuccessful concerts that have turned bad because of insufficient security but this is the key to a successful concert, we must have enough security so as to prevent any possible trouble. Finally, Dr. Gage complained that the big groups were ripping off the students. Dr. Gage should allow the student to be the sole judges of this. But I feel the students are more ripped-off by paying $60.00 a year for the Campus Center than they would be by paying $3.00 to see Rod Stewart and The Faces.

Well, hopefully, this has been a brief description of what has happened in the Spring Concert Committee in the past three months. The only new idea presented concerned ticket sales. What we must do now is communicate to the administration that the concert is feasible, nd that the students sincerely want to make this a totally successful event. We students should make it clear that upmost attention will be paid to providing complete security measures in order that we can have just this one day of trouble free music. If all should go well then Lang on, because during some bright and sunny Saturday afternoon, The Who or the Faces will finally come to town.

Our Urban Half Speaks Out

The Boston-to-Amherst, Claustophobic, Transfer Student Blues

By CYNTHIA F. NADREAU

I won't miss that 6:15 bus again while trying to get to an 8:00 morning class. The sunrise doesn't seem half as "breathtaking" as the crowded, unheated street cars which don't get you into Boston any faster than the busses. Along the streets the throngs of John Hancock secretaries and businessmen flood the sidewalks with talk of their upcoming, long deserved two week vacations, for which they've been saving all year. Boys in sweatshirts and jeans and college kids (in sweatshirts and jeans) shove Boston After Dark and Phoenix in your face as you turn each corner and cross every street. Running past Paine Furniture Co. you realize that it has heavy competition in the race to pollute with busses, cars and trucks all of which give little relief from noise and confusion. And the police sirens and fire engines, construction workers and pedestrians, pedestrians and pedestrians... And, then, there's "Mass Gas", otherwise known as UMass Boston.

UMass-Boston, conveniently located in Park Square, is only a block from a bus station and two blocks from the MTA. But this has little to do with cutting down commuting time which can take up to an hour and a half if you're from suburbia. This is a decisive factor when considering participation in extra-curricular activities, which for apparent reasons is minimal. Not many students feel it's worth the time and trouble to re-enter Boston in the evening just to see a movie or to attend a mixer. You can forget driving a car, unless you're prepared to have it towed for illegal parking or are able to feed a meter every 30 minutes. Problems resulting from commuting can be frustrating and limiting to any student's social life within the university. I can remember one stormy, snowy night last winter, when I left the school at 5 p.m. only to be caught for three hours in the depths of a subway station with what seemed like thousands of other people trapped in the same predicament.

Unless one develops interests in some kind of student organization besides the classes, people come to the university for a few hours and leave. It is always difficult to get any "school spirit" or feeling of unity. Of course this can be an advantage. One time Garry LaPierre from WBZ-TV visited UMass-Boston along with some other prominent guest speakers. In his opening remarks he said that he had expected to be speaking in front of an auditorium full of students. There were about ten of us there.

At the present moment, the university has expanded to about eight buildings scattered in and around the Park Square area. If you're lucky, you may not have far to walk, but if Math 103 happens to be a fifteen-minute walk away and you only have ten minutes after you're previous class, you'd better, as I did, make friends with the professor and extend to him a warm "good morning" as you enter the class late each day.

Because of the relatively small enrollment (3,500) the classes are rarely larger than 20 people, except for lectures. This also tends to limit the variety of course offerings, though. The English course I had last semester contained only eight people and when less than three appeared we had to cancel the class. But, of course, getting acquainted with the people was up to each individual personality as in any situation. We have one (dreadful) cafeteria where most students eat, if they can't avoid it. Located down in the cafeteria is the newly constructed radio station, and despite complaints of being too loud and noisy, the staff continues to play, broadcasting only to the immediate building.

Other forms of media floating about campus, include the weekly newspaper, the yearbook, the Freshman Review, Crumb, and a weekly calendar. These publications are detrimental for carrying information as well as recording and preserving the events in the school. Since I was there in 1970, the newspaper has expanded and increased in quality. UMass-Boston, being only seven years old, is flexible enough to experiment and new enough to be exciting and constantly changing. After seven years we finally got a comfortable lounge in the main lobby.

Being a new, urban college, UMass-Boston attracts a variety of students and professors from a wide range of economics, social, and cultural backgrounds. For those so inclined, Black groups, Chinese groups, motorcycle clubs and ballet classes are appealing.

The largest turnout for any group that I hae seen was at last spring's peace rally when practically all the students and half the faculty took the afternoon off to march down to the Common. Policemen stopped traffic and newsmen took note of us as we paraded, carrying a giant "UMass-Boston For Peace" sign. As I remember, I spent the day eating ice cream with a new found friend. That's peace.

Due to its in-town location, the University has responsibilities to the surrounding community. The future College at Columbia Point will take care of urban problems, but even now there are some student organizations which serve the community. An example is the tutoring program, with the help of publicity, proved to be a success after a year's trial. In this program, students volunteer time to teach poverty-stricken or otherwise deprived youngsters in the city on a one-to-one basis. Results have been immensely rewarding for both tutors and children. Such experiences give college students an opportunity to actively share and expand their learning experience.

As with most people attending UMass-Boston, their stay may be intentionally short. Some begin as freshmen intending to eventually get to UMass-Amherst, as I did, or some get turned down at Amherst due to lack of space and are automatically accepted at Boston. Some attend on their own free will.

When I applied here last semester, my Boston friends warned that I would be entering a sheltered, "collegiate" life. I thought it over. Being in Boston, UMass is directly exposed to cultural, political, intellectual happenings as well as being in a primary location for sports and entertainment. My friends warned that the course load would be lighter and the weekends would be long. I'd be cutting in mid-semester and would become lost in the crowd. But I found that my secure, suburban life conflicted with the bus schedules, and the mountains and fields of Amherst became a tempting chance for a change of scenery.

I've been on campus for less than two weeks already. The swing shifters and I have helped each other out, finding buildings, arranging schedules, standing in lines, and painting dorm rooms. I haven't had much of a chance yet to look at the mountains, but I have been to see a couple of old movies and a basketball game. Do you suppose my friends in Boston are right?

The construction at Columbia Point: UMass-Boston moves out from the core and nearly triples in size.

Challenging The Nuremberg Concept

By FRANK BAGLIONE

Victors' Justice: The Tokyo War Crimes Trial by Richard H. Minear, Princeton University Press. 230 pp. $7.95

When Bernadette Devlin raced across the floor of Parliament to scratch at the face of a British Cabinet Minister she justified her attack by charging the Minister and the British Government with "war crimes" in Northern Ireland. Her charge is one that is often heard in other quarters. The American Government, we are told, may be guilty of "war crimes" for its actions in Vietnam.

It is understnadable, even if not reasonable, for people to reduce complex and sometimes unplanned military policy to either right or wrong. But the desire to denounce as "war criminals" the members of a government engaged in a war is a relatively late mania.

Prior to 1945, the term "war crimes" under international law was used mainly to describe certain atrocities performed or ordered by individuals or commanders during a war. After the Second World War, however, the victorious Allies charged and convicted certain German and Japanese military and government officials of "crimes against peace and humanity." This goes beyond the scope of conventional war crimes as defined by the conventions signed at The Hague and Geneva in the early part of the century.

Government officials could now be tried for "waging aggressive war." This may not seem to be an unworthy deed until one faces the task of defining "aggressive war," of determining who shall sit in judgment, and of selecting the government officials to be tried.

It is not often that someone questions the wisdom and the justice of the Nuremberg and Tokyo War Crimes Trials. But it has been done from time to time, and it is done again in Richard Minear's Victors' Justice: The Tokyo War Crimes Trial.

Richard Minear, an Associate Professor of History at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst, expresses his reservations about the War Crimes Trials clearly and reasonably. "I am fully in favor of conventional war drimes trials, as in the case of Lieutenant Calley...But when it is not conventional war crimes but aggression, when it is the whole course of (a government's policy...then I must demur...The attempt to establish legal guilt--not for atrocities, but for the war itself--would be politically convenient and satisfying."

The precedents for such a politically convenient and satisfying course of action were set at the Nuremberg and Tokyo War Crimes Trials. Minear sees the Tokyo trial as a bad precedent, bad enough, he feels, "to cast doubt on the Nuremberg precedent as well." "The wiser course would be to return to the international law of the period before 1945, when atrocities were considered justiciable but the issue of aggression was not."

Minear has a number of objections to the Tokyo trial and he states them quite convincingly. First there was the difficulties of (judicial proceedings)" the British felt "execution without trial is the preferable course." The American Government, however, opposed this. "While it (executive action) has the question of what led the Allies to conduct war crimes trials. In the words of Robert Jackson, American prosecutor at the Nuremberg trial, "This inquest represents the practical effort...to utilize International Law to meet the greatest menace of our times--aggressive war."

Minear can see some less "lofty motives," for is it not possible that this trial of the vanquished by the victors represented an attempt to not only punish the wrongdoers "but also to justify the right side--our side." In the words of Jackson once again, "Our interest in this matter is to see that the representations that have been made to our people that this was a criminal war and was carried out in criminal fashion are followed out by the procedure that is appropriate to trial of that kind of offense...But we do not want t have a result which in the light of history will fail to justify the procedures we have taken."

It was not always accepted that a trial would be the best means to achieve the desired result. Great Britain's initial preference, Minear tells us, was for executive action. "Deeply impressed with the danger and advantage of a sure and swift disposition, it would violate the most fundamental principles of justice..." and "in any event, only a few individuals could be reached in this way."

Thus, writes Minear, "in spite of the doubtful or unsatisfactory condition of the law (regarding the criminality of waging aggressive war), the Allies decided to establish international military tribunals for the trial of the leaders of Germany and Japan." Britain, the Soviet Union and America already assumed their guilt. "Had there been any real chance of acquittal, the trials would never have taken place."

Minear explores in depth many of the challenges of the trial that the defense made at Tokyo. By what authority did the Allied Powers designate as justiciable "Crimes against Peace?" "Aggressive war is not per se illegal and the Pact of Paris of 1928 renouncing war as an instrument of national policy does not enlarge the meaning of war crimes not constitute war a crime. War is the act of a nation for which there is no individual responsibility under international law." And the formulation of the provisions under which the trials took place were 'ex post facto' legislation, and therefore themselves illegal.

The tribunal's answer to the last of these challenges adequately describes the attitude of the Allies towards their work--"antipathy to retroactive (ex post facto) legislation is 'not a limitation of sovereignty but is in general a principle of justice' and the greater injutice would be to let the aggressors 'go unpunished'."

There is no need to pretend at suspense as to the outcome of the Tokyo trial. Not all the defendants in this two and one half year trial were convicted on all counts, "but no one was acquitted on all counts either." Of the twenty-eight defendants, including Tojo (Prime Minister and Minister of War at the time of Pearl Harbor), seven men were condemned to death by hanging, sixteen received life imprisonment, two received lesser sentences, two died during the trial, one was under psychiatric treatment at the time of judgment.

"The tribunal's judgment was supported fully by eight of the eleven justices," Minear writes. Of the three who dissented the opinion of Justice Radhabinod Pal of India was the most devastating to the desire for "the light of history" to shine warmly on Allies. Pal felt that no conspiracy had been proven; that rules of evidence had been slanted in favor of the prosecution; and that aggressive war was not a crime in international law. "Alone among the justices, Justice Pal held that individuals were not liable to prosecution for acts of state."

Justice Pal disagreed, finally, with the unstated philosphy behind the attempt to define aggression and to outlaw war." He said, "I am not sure if it is possible to create 'peace' once for all, and if there can be a status quo which is to be eternal. At any rate in the present state of international relations such a static idea of peace is absolutely untenable. Certainly dominated nations of the present status quo cannot be made to submit to eternal domination only in the name of peace."

Along with Pal, Justice Roling of the Netherlands held that "crimes against peace" did not exist prior to 1945. Thus the Allies were applying the law retroactively.

Minear also turns to the events of the history of the conflict to question the correctness of bringing charges of "Crimes against Peace" against the Japanese. Japan had asked for the Soviet Union to mediate a peace towards the end of the war; it was the Soviet Union that had declared war on Japan--was the Soviet Union guilty of "aggressive war?" What pressures had been place on Japan economically that might have provoked her attack?

The improper definitions of aggressive war; incorrect interpretation of international law; improper procedures at the trial; these are the reasons Richard Minear finds to question the wisdom and justice of the Tokyo trial. He does so convincingly, interestingly and with a wealth of documents. And he does not for the cause of Japanese leaders of the forties, but for justice.

"The trial," Minear says in an eloquent passage, "was a kind of morality play, a reaffirmation of a world-view that had been one factor in the making of World War II. To the extent that this world-view was itself invalid, the Tokyo trial was harmful rather than helpful. It prolonged our immersion in the unreal world of our dreams. In this sense, perhaps, summary executions might have been preferable.

"...It may just be that enemy leaders are sincere men, that the conflict arises not from malevolence but from less corrigible factors...In view of the limitations of human nature it would seem wiser simply to oppose from the start the idea of trials after war, except, again, for conventional war crimes."

The Japanese who were executed and imprisoned following the Tokyo trial may well have been, as Minear suggests, victims of a Victors' Justice. His book certainly deserves the attention of anyone interested in international law concerning war time activities; anyone who wants a realistic account of the Tokyo War Crimes Trials. The book neither tries to mitigate the errors committed by Japanese leadership during World War II nor heap abuse upon Allied officials who might have by unjust means strove for a desirable end (the condemnation of war).

Victors' Justice is a careful study that, while it may not achieve the author's desire to demolish the credibility of the Tokyo trial, certainly does succeed in challenging it.

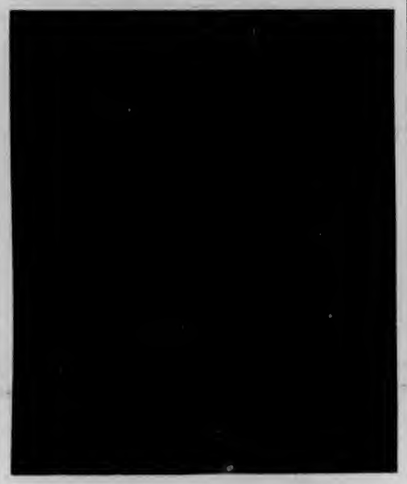
Laura's Latest Typically Fine

By JIM LAVRAKAS

Laura Nyro's latest, Gonna Take a Miracle, holds the exceptional quality that all her albums have shown–that she has a consistant ab lity to produce beautiful songs that are very similar in style but quite diverse in the modds they exhibit.



Backing her up vocally on this album is Labelle, a group of three black chicks with voices almost as good as Miss Nyro's. Working together, with voices that also run opposing each other at times they succeed in making each song fine listening.

The first song on the album, "I Met Him On A Sunday", starts with a clapping beat and then moves into an accompanying piano. It ends with a quick Nyrol solo. These short, soft solos are typical of the way in which Miss Nyro arranges many of her songs. In this album she puts this trademark to use by leading into the next song–without a break–from one of these solos.

Her voice, per usual, is a wonder to behold. Ever since her "Eli and the Thirteenth Confession" I have marvelled at her vocal instrument and her clear and precise control of it. She not only sings with her voice, however, she sings with her heart.

"The Bells" is a love song. It is one of those love songs that contains melancholy lyrics and music that tends to reinforce the depressing mood that comes out of this type of song. You can feel the emotion that Miss Nyro puts into this cut.

Switching from the malancholy the album is smart with the insertion of "Monkey Time". This is a snappy, funky tune that puts Miss Nyro's vocal instrument through the ropes.

Very ingenuously this song moves right into the oldie "Dancing In The Streets". The renditions of this song, "Jimmy Mack", "Spanish Harlem", "You Really Got A Hold On Me" show that the phrase "oldie but moldy" does not aptly apply to the older songs that Miss Nyro and Company may choose to do.

"Desiree" is another love song soloed by Miss Nyro. "You Really Got A Hold On Me" deserves a second mentioning because of its dynamic harmonization and arrangement. It is divided into two sections (each section contains the same material) with the second section an u-tempo version of the first.

"Wind", on the second side, is a very unique song. Starting with a whispering xylophone, the song is a remembrance of a past summer love, remembered by a summer breeze in the present. Labelle harmonizes as the "wind" while Miss Nyro sings the love song over their harmonization.

"No Where To Run" is a rough and ready song with a lot of movement in it. Arrangement and movements in this song are very well done with just the right pauses and just the right drum beats to start the song up again. The fine organization of this song is typical of all the songs on the album.

"Gonna Take A Miracle", the theme song for the album is–to use an overused word--just plain beautiful. Another love song, it is fat with fine harmonization. Miss Nyro pushes her voice at prints in this song, and comes out smelling (singing, I should say) like a rose.

Something should be said about the album jacket for this latest Nyro disc. All her album jackets have a distinctly depressing, specifically, a grey and rainy feeling about them. Miss Nyro herself lives a very quiet andretiring existence. At least, this is the image she portrays to the public. Her album jackets are consistent with this image.

Instrumentally, to be sure, there is not that much outstanding in this album. The backing up by all the musicians is a professional and more than adequate job, however. Miss Nyro plays the piano throughout, by the way.

Gonna Take A Miracle, ultimately, is a fine album with fine vocalization throughout. After so many good albums by such a professional as Laura Nyro the attitude of the listener may border almost on indifference. Try and defend yourself against this! For a choice of fine music with a special quality about it that tends to sound like a sophistication of the Motown sound this one is a good addition.

Jackson Brown Makes For Smooth Listening

BY BILL DENSMORE

Jackson Browne, on his first lp does sound good, like so many other singer-songwriter guitarists currently dominating the music empire. He's been around for a few years now writing songs for Nico, the former Velvet Underground lead singer, and now one of his songs, "Rock Me On the Water" has just cropped up on Linda Rohnstadt's new album. Wait. Perhaps there is more to this young man who writes for Nico and Linda Rohnstadt than deserves to be labeled just "good". At least his album displays a tasteful brown cover and sports such session greats as Rus Kunkel, Jesse Davis (one time Taj Mahal's guitarist) and Sneaky Pete playing back-up. Mr. Browne himself is thoroughly proficient on both piano and guitar and the overlayed harmonies on his own voice arranged by David Crosby make for consistently smooth listening. Most the songs on the album are catchy and easy to remember even after only two listenings. Yes, Jackson Browne appears to be a new and excellent entry into the already crowded field of "personal" and this first album show that he can take a stereotyped performing style and do something special with it.

Jackson has a voice smooth and vaired–sometimes a crying Van Morrison other times a lilting Elton John. "The album" opens with two shy songs that set the emotional mood of most the album. "Jamaica, Say You Will", and "I Am a Child in These Hills" both verbalize an intellectual solitude which clouds all the feeling of the poet. "Jamacia say you will come again tomorrow/...stay until my ships can find the sea" and in "I Am a Child in These Hill", which opens with a guitar riff familiar from the Byrds, "Who will show me the river and ask me my name?/ is theree nobody Here who will do that?"

On the second side, "Something Fine" and "Looking Into You" continue to indicate a mind voluntarily separate from events around it. Both are warm and friendly glimpses of a poet's past, one revisits his youth and a family no longer an emotional support; the other recounts places past, observing meanwhile, "that it's taken its share of me." The album is a reflection of the intensely personal feelings of the lyricist, Jackson Browne, prophetic voice, constant traveler, or whoever is listening to the record. Because it is an very nearly an expression of only one state of mind–hollowness and longing, the album may be of limited appeal. One is likely to react to it with great feeling, i.e. you will either love it because it expresses what you feel, or hate it because its so facile.

Three songs are encouraging, yet critical; they reflect an escape from the poet's syndrome of solitide, yet the escape is through a circumvention of society into a life after destriction. In "Doctor My Eyes" Mr. Browne finally leaves his poetic solitude, "Doctor my eyes can't see the sky/Is this the price for not having learned how not to cry?/ Just say if it's too late for me." See the world as it is the poet has learned no defense, and he cries–his tears and suffering make it impossible for him to look up beyond reality to the sky. Then in "Rock Me On theWater" he strikes a blow at complacency. In it, he escapes reality, and looks down on it as an omniscient voice warning: "You've left it for somebody other than you to be the one to care/You're lost inside your houses, there's no time to find you now/I'm going to leave you here and try to get down to the sea somehow." The third son, "Under the Falling Sky" completes the poet's transition from a solitary state trapped within society separate from it to allofness by companionship. Musically this piece seems out of place on the album, a reflects a change in attitude by its almost mischevious tone. "Voices can no longer hold my desire/meet me in the fire where angels wait to take us higher and higher/go under the falling sky, easily we will lie, while I bring it to you. Higher & higher." The sky referred to is the same sky that is invisible through tears in "Doctor My Eyes". Now the poet has reached his own destination among the pieces of the fallen sky–an illusion shattered, the pieces of which have shattered those "lost in their houses".

"Doctor My Eyes" may well appear as a single. It is an tight piece capable of many, many listening. Jackson Browne has arrived and deserves recognition for his own twist of a style that has now become almost commonplace. Perhaps, too, he should be credited with an attempt to fantisize lyrically feelings that others could only relate to actuality. "Jackson Browne" is a record you can be sentimental with if you're so inclined.

A Satisfying Bonnie Raitt

By MIKE McCORMICK

Bonnie Raitt-Warner Brothers (W.S. 1953)

After catching Bonnie Raitt at Stonehenge in Ipswich, Mass. in the summer of 1971, I anxiously awaited for over three months for the release of her first album. When, finally, Bonnie's first album was to be found on the record racks, I greeted its arrival with mixed emotions. I was pleased because Warner Brothers had released a good Bonnie Raitt album, I was disappointed because I had hoped that Bonnie would record her first album with a minimum of musicians.

When Bonnie plays live she is usually accompanied only by her bass player, known simply as Freebo. With this minimal accompaniement Bonnie's superb guitar work is constantly in the spotlight. Freebo's bass playing adds ample power to propel Bonnie's more driving numbers. Together the two are able to give a quite impressive performance.

Bonnie, however, gathered a number of sidemen (all of whom are very competent) to play with her and Freebo on her first album. These musicians are the source of both the most beautiful and irritating sounds of this record.

"Bluebird," the first song on the album moves along nicely until A.C. Reed (tenor say) and Paul Pena (background vocal) move in and briefly transform the song into an unsuccesful soul number. A driving version of Tommy Johnson's "Big Road" is hampered when Maurice Jacox commences to play bass lines on a baritone sax, causing the song to sound a little like a circus parade. On "finest Lovin' Man," a Bonnie Raitt original, Junior Wells blows a half-ass harp introduction and then proceeds with a solo which goes nowhere, causing an otherwise fine song to lose much of its life.

At times the sidemen provide some of the album's finest moments. Wells has some excellent work, including a tight solo on "Mighty Tight Woman." "Thank you", perhaps the mellowest number of the album, features delicate instrumental work by Bonnie, (piano) producer Willie Murphy, (guitar) Voyle Harris (trumpet) and Maurice Jacox (flute). Jacox' flute solo on Spider John Koerner's "I Ain't Blue" is one of the finer solo's on the album, greatly enhancing the mood of this flowing number. "Danger Heartbreak, Dead Ahead," one of the most driving songs of the album, is pushed considerably by ripping tenor lines by A.C. This cover of the Marvelettes hit also features background vocals which, unlike on "Bluebird", fit perfectly, heightening the potency of the number.

Two often recorded classics are given interesting treatments. Robert Johnson's "Walkin Blues" is spruced up by the crying harp of Wells and by Peter Bell's hambone playing. As a result this rendition of this country blues piece is very ethnic sounding. Bonnie's tender, convincing vocal on "Since I Fell For You" assures her of one of the finest versions ever of this Bud Johnson composition.

This is a fine debut album by this musician from Cambridge, Mass. Perhaps, Bonnie will record her next album live, or with fewer sidemen. Meanwhile, Bonnie's first album should keep most of her fans satisfied for sometime.

A Word From Edward

By KENNETH SULIN

Jamming With Edward - on Rolling Stones Records

Recorded jam sessions usually prove to be anything but impressive, yet what we have here is probably one of the best efforts today by any group of musicians. It just happened that Ry Cooder and Ricky Hopkins were around when three-fifths of the Stones, Jagger, Watts and Wyman, were in the studio, and a remarkably well done session resulted. Cooder and Hopkins are more than familiar with the Stones' style having played backup with them on numerous albums; in fact, Jamming With Edward is so good that perhaps it's even better than a regular Rolling Stones' record.

The album itself is surprisingly enough not rock and roll; it is comprised of mainly blues tunes, something Jagger fans have been waiting for for a long time. Watts and Wyman have had the experience with Howlin' Wolf while Jagger's voice has finally gotten around to singing blues like he did with "Love In Vain." If you happen to be a follower of the Stones since their beginning you'll be overjoyed in hearing some reminiscent sounds that resemble the tones of 12X5 or Out of Our Heads.

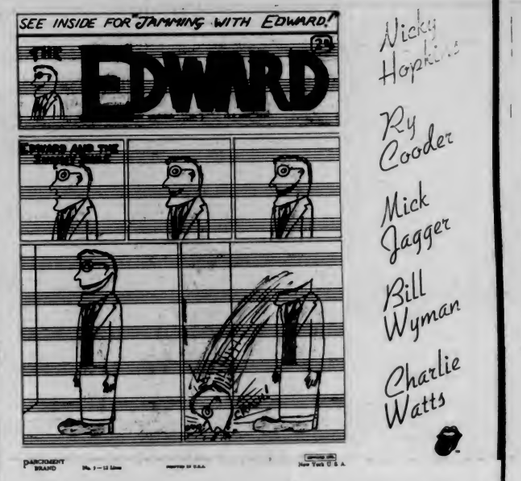
The album contains a total of seven songs on which Jagger is only features singing on four; however, the remaining three selections are amazing with Hopkins' piano and Cooder's slide guitar taking the leads. What Jagger does on these instrumentals is either mumble in the background or play ins and outs with a harmonica–another aspect that's been long awaited, Jagger's harp playing.

Nicky Hopkins, whose roots began with Quicksilver, shines with his saloon speaking piano–you'll discover him fooling with a piece you'd expect to hear in a chase scene of a 1920's Western. This pleasantly precedes his own select version of "Loveliest Night of the Year" also in old-time barroom fashion.

From Ry Cooder's slide and bottleneck guitars prevail a clear, crisp melting sound that will relax you to no end. Cooder has found his place in the pop music scene and from him we'll soon see a great deal.

The record, with all this in mind, can be thought of possibly as a mild attempt at jazz without any horn arrangement. The songs are not boring and move quickly. Each side lasts approximately nineteen minutes providing one of the best jam albums on record.

Further songs include Jagger singing Elmore James' "It Hurts Me Too" with a piercing stretched neck voice that occasionally can be caught fading and returning. As usual Jagger does his share of fooling around both during a song's course and often at its end. In between cuts all can be heard conversing and preparing for their next song; however, Jagger seems to be doing this throughout the entire album, talking to himself and muttering little incoherent nothings.



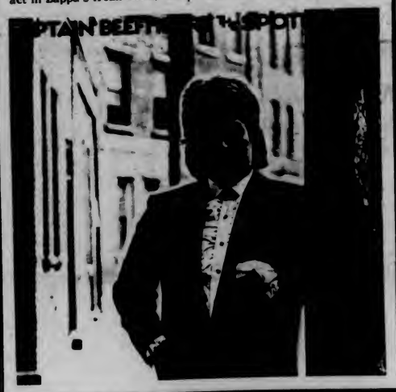
A Hopkin's selection, in which his piano playing again comes alive, is the familiar "Highland Fling", a spicy Scottish jig that only adds to the complexity of the album's overall theme.

If you think you hear a girl singing your wrong–it's just Mr. Jagger again shrilling his vocal chords as if he were a distinguished opera singer with a high off-key voice.

Why is the album dedicated to Edward? No one seems to know, probably just a random name drawn from a hat in order to provoke a little curiosity.

Possibly the only fault the record has is it's abrupt ending, but this can be expected solely for the fact that this is a jam session. On the other hand, the stereo seperation and the recording technique couldn't be better.

Despite Jagger's background moaning and the cut-off endings Edward is excellent. Whether the album is bluesy rock, semi-jazz or just a collection of tunes, you'll have to judge for yourself. Nevertheless, it's definitely not ordinary rock and roll. It's relatively quiet and assuredly one of the best things from Rolling Stones Records yet.



On The Captain Beefheart Bandwagon

By MIKE KOSTEK

Will success spoil Caprain Beefheart? That question will certainly be answered if current events run a logical pattern. Captain Beefheart has long been one of the true underground figures on the music scene, writing bizarre, squalling music and singing in a most unearthly manner with his four 1/2 octave range voice. He has been bounced from Blue Note Records to Buddah (!) Records until Frank Zappa signed him to his Straight label. Frank even produced the Captain's epic work, the infamous Trout Mask Replica, a two record set that Rolling Stone called "the most stunning piece of art ever put on a record". But the Captain (in reality Don Van Vliet) was unhappy. He resented being merchandised as just another act in Zappa's freak show, and said that he had a hard time working with his former high schoolmate as he had to wake Frank up every time they wanted to record. Beefheart then lambasted Frank for imagining himself as another Cage, Stockhausen or Verese. In all fairness to Frank it must be said that Captain Beefheart and The Magic Band are not the easiest people to work with due to the Captain's strange habits, such as requiring a tree surgeon at one recording session to make sure that the trees around the recording studio would not get scared and fall over.

Anyway, Trout Mask Replica was, as they say, a critical success if not a financial one. After that the Captain made Lick My Decals Off, Baby which was really a continuation of the same songs and themes of Trout Mask. Obviously the Captain was in a period of transition. Thus was born The Spotlight Kid. Look at the cover. Gone is the outrageous madman of before. Instead we see a demure, well-buffed, strapping musician wearing a devilish suit and frilly shirt.

What's more, Captain Beefheart and The Magic Band are touring! Their second tour, and their first major one. Could the tour have anything to do with promoting The Spotlight Kid? I wonder. I bought The Spotlight Kid the day it came out, although with a certain trepidation since Trout Mask Replica is not an album that you really play a lot, and I couldn't help but wonder if I was wasting my money. I put on side one and waited. Out of one speaker came a rock and roll lick. Then repeated. The bass picked it up, then the drums. My God! It was straight rock! And it stayed straight. So it went through the record, a nicely melodic number here, a hard blues there, all indelibly stamped with the Captain's label to be sure, but as the man said it is his most accessible album yet. Since Beefheart has toned down his sidemen to playing it straight, his vocals take on added dimension and power. Captain Beefheart is easily the nastiest, baddest vocalist in rock and he makes fine use of hsi talents here. He has made his most listenable album yet, a fantastic album featuring fine songs well performed. Each spong features one small lick or bridge that is delightful. Highlights include "Click Clack", "White Jam" and the fine instrumental, "Alice In Blunderland". All in all this is a great album.

So what's the problem? Well, this album is too commercial, that's what. I am afraid that too many people will buy it, thus making the Captain both rich and famous in the great rock tradition. However, as of now there are only two paths that rich and famous rock stars have followed in the past two years: one road leads to a great flash of instant success followed by boredom. People getting tired of you. Remember James Taylor? Jimi Hendrix's middle period? Jack Bruce? (Why are old Cream albums selling in drugstores for $1.98) Moby Grape? Don Ellis? All of these performers have been affected by fame and many cases there is a strange inversion that occurs when the performer starts singing about being rich, famous, going on tours, etc. Remember how drained Mudslide Slim was? Of course another facet of this problem is that many people pick up on the latest hits and stars for status and to stay with it, without any understanding of any message the artist has. These people will drop a group like nothing, because they only follow the charts. Once you're passe, it is extremely hard to come back. Look at the painful comback made by the Beach Boys and Simon & Garfunkel. But then again true talent will usually win out, and that brings us to the second road of fame, the one where the performers ride their popularity successfully on a personal level, but there are hazards inherent in this too. Last time The Rolling Stones played in Boston I paid nine dollars to sit about 150 feet away from the stage on a severe angle yet. Last time I saw The Who I had to go to Saratoga Springs in New York to sit 300 feet away for four dollars and was pelted by cans and ice cubes thrown by idiots sitting on thelawn who apparently had nothing better to do as they couldn't see anything. The point is that The Stones and The Who are the only two big groups left from the past five years to have survived, and they are so popular that seeing them in concert can be a fairly excruciating experience. See Gimmie Shelter. The simple fact is that the more people that like a group, the worse it is for all involved, including the group (in most cases). One apparent exception to this rule seems to be Bob Dylan who has shielded himself from his followers to a great extent, but there can still be found in his recent songs references to his audience, and a definite longing for peace.

Since touring and performing are unnatural acts, we are perverting performers, in varying degrees, into a show biz routine, and thus are causing them to feel different emotions and to consequently write different songs than when they started out. Life on the road is certainly a vacuum. Any group such as Chicago that tours about 250 days a year is placing itself in a strange and artificial environment. As a result I'm sure that Terry Kath and company are much different people from their pre-touring days.

I do not want to have to pay six dollars to see Captain Beefheart a mile away in Boston Garden, when I can see him for two dollars (and very comfortable and unhysterically I might add) in Springfield. I'd like other people to be aware of him and to give him all due credit, but I don't want to see him because this season's superstar, then forgotten in two years.

Captain Beefheart is a brilliant, sensitive artist and musician, which makes me wonder even more what he is up to with his new pitch. Maybe he could handle fame on a personal level, but there is no way for rock stars to escape the pitfalls and dook holes of superstardom. What chance do you have of seeing Bob Dylan perform? Two, slim and hone.

Of course, probably all my fretting will be in vain, and no one will buy The Spotlight Kid and go see him and make him a big star. Good.

FUJI MICRO SAFETY

From Moussorgsky To Emerson

By GARY GOMES

"Pictures at an Exhibition" Emerson, Lake and Palmer (Cotillion ELP 66666)

I really loved the Nice. I was excited to hear a group finally free itself of guitar dominance, and, being a keyboard player myself, I was astounded by Keith Emerson's then revolutionary approaches towards the organ. He incorporated everything from jazz to baroque in his improvisations with cohesive and startling musical results.

However, Emerson, in his infinite wisdom (?) saw fit to disband this virtuosic ensemble, much to the chagrin of bassist Lee Jackson and drummer Brian Davison, in favour of another bass-drum backup group. Bassist-singer Greg Lake was already known for his work with King Crimson ("In the Court of the Crimson King"), whereas Carl Palmer, although unknown to the record-buying public of the U.S., had been a pupil of Buddy Rich and gained fame in the United Kingdom as drummer for Atomic Rooster, led by Vincent Crane, one-time organist and musical co-ordinator of the Crazy World of Arthur Brown (Remember him?). Well, it sounded like an impressive musical organization, and perhaps the only super-group to come worthy of the name Super-Group. What the hell, you were disappointed about the Nice, but this looks damn impressive. (Oh, by the way, Lee Jackson and Brian Davison are both in worthy groups now, Jackson in the acoustically-oriented Jackson Heights, and Davison in the jazz-influenced Brian Davison's Every Which Way. Both have one album out apiece on Mercury. Give them a listen.)

Despite all this positive think, I must admit that I was a little disappointment on my part when I heard the "Emers on, Lake and Palmer" lp last year around this time. I t seemed pale in comparison with the Nice's and King Crimson's works. The music was good but gutless. All right, they're a new group, we'll give them a chance. "Tarkus" was little better, although "A Time and a Place" and the instrumental segments of the "Tarkus" side showed definite signs of a new and dynamic music coming from a good but unexciting album. I had nearly gotten to the point of considering ELP a waste-the only thing that kept me ultimately confident in them was the report of their live performances. (Sorry to sound like a typical rock critic in the above passages, but I couldn't help it.)

Well, "Pictures at an Exhibition" has helped convert me back into a believer in Emerson, Lake and Palmer's skills again. The album was recorded "live" in England at the Newcastle City Hall (don't you wish your city hall put on concerts?) in March 1971.

"Pictures" itself, in its original, unexpurgated form, was written by Modest Mussourgsky around 1879. The work was dedicated to Mussourgsky's good friend, Victor Hartmann, whose painting exhibited a year after Hartmann's death at a memorial exhibition, inspired the Russian Romantic composer to write to match the pictures. Now, remember, in its original form this music was intended as programme music (for those who haven't taken Music 101, programme music is music that is supposed to give the image of the physical object to its listeners. Thus, Mussougsky telling us what Hartmann's paintings look like through his music.) and ELP have tried to remain true to the original feeling of the piece.

This has not stopped them from changing it in certain spots however, especially the rearranging of the music for the benefit of organ, Moog, bass, and drums as opposed to orchestra or solo piano, as it was originally scored.

There is also the deletion of the major part of Mussourgsky's original score, and extra numbers not included in the original. For example, Palmer helped arrange the major part of "the Gnome", the first painting played on both Mussourgsky's and ELP's version after the initial "Promenade", so Palmer shares the songwriting credits with Mussourgsky on this. Lake included a song which was not included in the original piece, known as "The Sage", and Lake takes sole credit for this, along with the lyrics to Mussourgsky's original score of the final piece of "Picture", "The Great Gate of Kiev", "The old Castle," which doesn't sound like the original at all, is credited to Mussourgsky/Emerson. Then there is the "Blues Variation" which ends side one, and "The Curse of Baba Yaga" which Emerson, Lake and Palmer created and take credit for. (The songwriting credits are better handled on this album than they have been in the past.

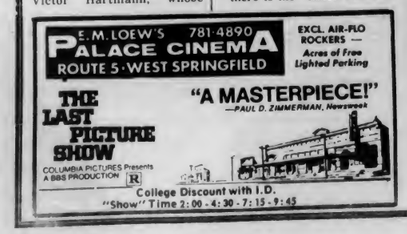
For instance, whether through mistake or design, the writing of "The Barbarian" on the first album is erroneously ascribed to Emerson, Lake and Palmer. It is actually Bela Bartok's "Allegro Barbario". Similarly with "Knife Edge", accredited to Emerson, Lake and Fraser, is actually the first movement to Janacek's "Sinfonietta", as any listener of WMUA might be aware of. Perhaps it is an unconscious desire on the part of Emerson to play the organ the way Bartok's percussive orchestration is handled, as he remarked in an interview shortly after the Nice broke up–perhaps again it is out and out plagiarism.)

There is always an inherent danger from purists when any person goes about changing the musical structure of a famous composition, and that is whether they do the original justice by changing it at all. All I can say in response to this is that I think that Emerson, Lake and Palmer have done an excellent job in presenting it as such. Any other way would not have been full bred ELP, because you would be asking the group to abandon is essential eclecticism. ELP, as a fusion musical group, would be false if they were to do it all the same again. Also, one thing the purists forget–the original is still there unharmed and preserved for posterity.

When asked about how they went about doing the original piece, Emerson, Lake and Palmer replied that they worked it out from the original music text, from their own interpretations of Hartmann's paintings, and from pictures of their own choice.

The piece itself flows smoothly through a sequence of changes, starting with Emerson playing the "Promenade" alone, a processional which drifts between 5/4 and 6/4 time signatures. Eventually it becomes majestic and gradiose. Palmer then tears into this with a roll that signals the beginning of the "Gnome", a composition about Hartmann's painting that depicts a little man running and dragging himself about on a pair of nutcracker legs. There are abrupt stops and starts, to signify the falling down of the gnome as he runs, and then an eerie passage played by Emerson on the Moog which depicts the little man walking along.

This abruptly starts and goes back into the "Promenade", stated more subtly on the organ this time, with Greg Lake picking up the melody line with his voice and adding lyrics to it. Emerson then hits on a mild organ-backed Moog excursion which gradually fades back into Lake accompanying himself on the acoustic guitar. Unfortunately, this ballad bears too strong a resemblance to "In the Court of the Crimson King" although Lake does manage to get some rather interesting acoustic guitar work into the song.



As Lake ends this segment, Emerson disrupts the mood set by Lake's ballad with a searing Moog solo, followed closely by Palmer. The bass back in Lake's hands again, he sets up a swinging tempo with Palmer to back up Emerson's Indian sounding Moog Improvisation on "The Old Castle". This quickly fades into the hard bop "Blues Variation" with Lake doing some superb bass work to complement Emerson's organ. As soon as they finish the brief jam, Emerson whips out his nifty machine gun sound synthesizer and begins firing it at the audience all the way onto side two, where the "Promenade" begins once again, this time more powerfully, and backed by Lake and Palmer.

Stopping briefly, the group proceeds with what is for me the most remarkable section of the album–the tale of the Russian witch Baba Yaga as described in "The Hut of Baba Yaga" followed by "The Curse of Baba Yaga" and a reprise of Mussourgsky's "Hut". The musicianship on this segment is remarkable, and proves that Emerson, Lake and Palmer are the virtuosi they claim to be. It begins with a fast dance like structure and then moves into "The Curse" with Lake belting out the words backed by Palmer's incredible drumming. Then a breathtaking return to the "Hut" and the beginning of "The Great Gate of Kiev", purposely majestic and with some fine lyrics by Lake: "There's no end to my life, no beginning to my death; Death is life!" In the middle of this song, Emerson plays the organ's feedback as he did on the Nice's life version of "America" on "Elegy". The composition ends, but Emerson, Lake and Palmer end the album with a looney tune rocker by Kim Fowley, one time musical cohort of Frank Zappa. Emerson plays electric piano (or celeste) on this track, which bears a curious resemblance to parts of Tchiakovsky's "Nutcracker Suite" and which is called, even more curiously, "Nutrocker". Insane audience screaming (led by Lake? I didn't know he was that outgoing) ends the set after a rapidfire drum solo by Palmer.

As a "live" album, this has two things going for it: 1) It is only "live" album that I know of where the group has not presented material it had already done in the stuido and released and 2) It will probably be the only chance you get to hear ELP doing this material, since Greg Lake claimed that they stopped doing it after "Tarkus" hit the record counters. Voila, instant history! An album well done by a potentially very influential musical group that are good musicians as well. Excellent!

A Gnawing And Ugly Experience

By BOB NESTI

Straw Dogs
written for the screen by David Z. Goodman and Sam Peckinpah; directed by Sam Peckinpah, starring Dustin Hoffman and Susan George.

Straw Dogs is an ugly, ugly film; strident in execution, deceptive and vacuous in theme, and totally repellent in its final effect. Sam Peckinpah's study of the evil that lurks in all men becomes a celebration of it. As a perfect example of a shallow argument manipulating an audience's gut emotions, Straw Dogs is less a study of contemporary violence than a misplaced spaghetti Western; a conscious, cold, horrible exaltation of a simplistic masculine ideal.

Peckinpah's form has always been the Western and exaltation of the masculine ideal is inherent in that form. But where Ride The High Counrty celebrates this man, The Wild Bunch berates him. This last film is probably the most imaginative Western of recent times which utilizes contemporary themes in a romantic context to devastating effect. Yet Straw Dogs only common bond with The Wild Bunch is its overuse of violence and here it's hopelessly exploited.

The forebording begins in the first frame and never lets up as we are immediately introduced to an uncomfortable situation. Dustin Hoffman is a young American mathematician who consciously has escaped the horrors of urban society for the provincial charm of his wife's former English homestead. Her homecoming is less than welcome. The girl, Amy, seems to have been the local whore who escaped the stifling village and made good. She returns to flaunt her successful life and husband on the small town yokels she grew up with. David, her husband, finds himself treated with malice by most of the men. The cultural gap leads to a situation with all the ingredients of a contemporary horror tale. The lugs are ever present working on David's garage and Amy graphically teases them with a foolish sexual brashness. She is the epitome of the pubescent bith, taunting her husband for his lack of character while flirting with her former admirers. This marriage, in fact the whole film, seems flavored with a masochism. Their only compatible moments are when they're in bed and even then we glimpse into the ugliness of their personalties. Here David interrupts his wife's embrace to wind the alarm clock, Amy embraces her husband only to immediately walk bearbreasted in front of the workers. They hurt each other with an undeniably ugly intent. Much of these earlier sequences of the film set up character and moos, as even before anything happens there's a relentless feeling of doom. Each move a character makes assaults the senses; the soundtrack is sharp and loud, and the images are continually jarring. Peckinpah seems to have consciously shot exteriors from low angles as to negate any of the English countryside's beauty. He creates an ugly, false, foreboding atmosphere in which his moral parable works toward its gruesome climax.

The perverse undertone surfaces when David discovers their cat strangled in the closet. The boys, Amy astutely explains, wanted "to prove to you they can get into your bedroom." The symbolic rape becomes real when David is duped by the boys to go hunting while two of them take Amy to task. One, at one time was her lover, and at first she fights him off, then submits pleasurably. The rape is the film's most effective sequence, one of sustained sensuality due mainly to the fine acting of Susan George. The act, though, remains as disturbing as the rest of the film for it confirms the chauvinist adage that all women finally find rape a pleasurable experience. The scene culminates in what seems masculine sexual fantasy when the second rapist performs sodomy on Amy. The action seems in perfect key with the inherent sado-masochism, of the relationships and again underscores the rank male supremacist attitude. The sodomy sequence is essential to the film's argument and it's quite unfortunate that the Cinerama Releasing Corporation chose to edit it significantly to secure an R rating. Peckinpah's obsession with power is best exemplified with this rape ending in anal intercourse. It's a sexual fantasy come true.

Oddly enough the film stops after the rape scene. The ideas Peckinpah introduced have been fulfilled with David and Amy's humiliation. The remaining portion relates to the whole only in its strident tone and the climax, glorious as it may be to some, hardly is substantiated by the rest of the film. The final situation seems contrived. Minor characters suddenly receive prominence, only as devices on Peckinpah's part to set up the bloody climax. The village idiot strangles a young flirt (a girl much similar to Amy except not half as attractive) and as he escapes David hits him with his car. He takes him to the cottage where David finds himself protecting the man from a vigilante group who lay siege on the cottage. Rather than faltering, David finally makes a commitment, "This is where I live–this is me-I will not allow violence against this house," and proceeds to wallow in it for about a reel. David systematically fights them, a man shoots his foot off another is clubbed to death, still another is blown to bits, and finally as the piece de resistance an antique bear trap Amy lovingly collected in the opening frames is worn like a broach by her erstwhile rapist. At the conclusion, David is triumphant, proving that cold analytic thought is superior to hot passion any day. He leaves Amy with the corpses to drive down the village with the idiot. To add a metaphoric touch, the idiot states he doesn't know his way home to which David replies, "That's okay, I don't either."

The film is shamelessly anti-intellectual. Peckinpah's concern is with a simplistic masculine prototype; the hero he has idolized in his previous Western films. The Western works on an entirely different premise, one of romance, one of adventure, one of unreility. This is the advantage of the Western. There is a hero, there are clearly drawn lines between good and evil, and we can be carried away in the sweep of the film. Contemporary dramas work on an entirely different premise. They cannot evoke blind romance of fantasy without sounding false and Straw Dogs ultimately falls victim to its hackneyed, simple theme of triumphant masculinity. It is Peckinpah's most ambitious work to date. A carefully controlled, carefully drawn work which culminates themes found in many of his earlier films, but the point of the entire film is blatantly false. There hasn't been a more strident film since The Devils, but the tension here is hollow as the director has utilized cinematic devices to substantiate his hollow material. It is sheen without substance, a slick, unrelenting, ugly film.

The violence and sexuality is not only something the director revels in, but also the audience as well. The ugliness of the audience at this film is something to be seen. Peckinpah seems to have manipulated them into thinking the film as fantasy as each murder brings a loud cheer. Perhaps the only way some people could alleviate the physical tightness the film produces is to view the outcome as a power fantasy and cheer it like they would a James Bond film or a Road Runner cartoon. Still I don't think that was the director's intent. Straw Dogs is a serious work. One, beyond its flaws in plot and structure, is probably the perfect Fascist film and one finally so frightening as to be repellent. The film doesn't merit our respect because simply it's a shallow, manipulative, inhumane work of art. At the end of the film, David is to be respected and his actions, the murder of six-odd men is to be admired. Beyond the cinematic virtuosity of the director, it's a foolish movie and if had been done by any less a cult director than Peckinpah would have quickly been dismissed.

The flaws in plot and structure cannot even be hidden in style. The film builds without any resolution, the plot is filled with unbelievable judgments, and the characters are inhumanely ugly. It seems odd from the start that Amy would collect, of all things, an antique bear trap and place it dangerously ready to spring above her fireplace. Then, topping the foolishness, why in the final violent melee did one of the intruders choose to rape the girl when his life was in danger?

Was he that horny? Some of the characters are foolishly drawn and even more foolishly employed. Some are utterly disgusting and used only to further flavor Peckinpah's dim theme to needless excess.

Dustin Hoffman plays David like a paunchy Benjamin. His character is one of the least likeable characters in any recent film. He is boorish, moody, foolish, and finally amoral. Hoffman portrayal seems accurate enough but his performance is never allowed to breathe under the heavy hand of Peckinpah. Hoffman is amazingly versatile; he has a wondekful range which is not for a moment utilized here. Scenes that are meant to be funny, such as when he throws grapefruits across the kitchen, fall flat, and scens of dramatic power are garish in their excess. Hoffman seems stifling in this part and I can't think of a more disappointing performance in a long time. As Amy, though, Susan George gives an amazingly controlled performance. She almost single-handedly carries the early portions of the film with her cloying, kittenish manner. Toward the end she may be lost in the bombast, but when there's a chance to act, she gives a performance evocative of Julie Christie at her bitchy best. David Warner makes a welcome return to the screen following a near fatal auto accident in an uncredited performance as Niles, the village idiot and brings with his return a sense of pathos the part probably doesn't merit. The rest of the cast isn't asked to do much beyond looking grotesquely large in the overwhelming number of close-ups Peckinpah employs.

Violence seems an omnipresent force and should not be callously presented as in this matter. Straw Dogs, despite what its intentions may be, finally only glorifies some sickening behavior. The film is constantly as tense and contrived as the bear trap that is primed in the opening sequence. The trap, it has been reported, was added after the initial shooting and is even missing from various sequences. Peckinpah probably couldn't resist another horrible method of death to perversely subject his audience to, but even this proves false. After all, it took two people to get the damn trap on the wall, but Dustin Hoffman single-handedly places it about a man's neck. Get the adrenaline flowing though, and a man can do just about anything.

No One Seated During The Rape Scene

To acquaint the UMass community with the theatre in Greenwich Village today, and other off-Broadway movements, the UMass Fine Arts Council has invited Charles Ludlam's Ridiculous Theatrical Company to perform during a half-week residency, Feb. 10-12.

The Company will perform its noted production "Bluebeard" on Thursday, Feb. 10, in Bowker Auditorium, Stockbridge Hall. Friday and Saturday, Feb. 11 and 12, the American Premiere of "Eunuchs of the Forbidden City," a new play by Charles Ludlam, will be performed in Bowker. All performances will begin at 8 p.m.

"Bluebeard" is a gothic melodrama that owes its ancestry to Faust, Frankenstein and the Island of Dr. Moreau. Baron Khanazar Von Bluebeard (Charles Ludlam) is a scientist who tries to invent a third sex and wreaks what no man wants. "Bluebeard" features the slick art-nouveau acting that has made the Ridiculous Theatrical Company the toy of intellectuals and the center of a little known religious cult. "Bluebeard" delights in the worst excesses of the well-made play.

"Eunuchs of the Forbidden City," a new Charles Ludlam work which premiered this fall in Belgrade, is an historical farce based on the life and bloody rule of Tsu Hsi, concubine queen, goddess, and last empress of China, according to diaries of the period.

Set against the background of the Boxer Rebellion and the encroachment of the Western powers, the play demonstrates the operation of the laws of change as set down in "I Ching," the Chinese book of political strategy and statesmanship. Authentic costumes and music enhanced by the use of traditional Chinese stage conventions explode the myth of the "yellow peril."

In addition to the performances of "Bluebeard" (Feb. 10) and the American premiere of "Eunuchs of the Forbidden City" (Feb. 11-12), the Ridiculous Theatrical Company, appearing at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, will hold two informal encounter sessions during their residency.

On Thursday, February 10 at 3:30 P.M., Charles Ludlam, director and principal actor of the Ridiculous Theatrical Company, will hold a lecture/demonstration in the Studio Theatre, South College on the UMass campus. Admission is free but seating is limited.

An open rehearsal of "Eunuchs of the Forbidden City" will be held on Friday, Feb. 11 at 2:00 P.M. in Bowker Aud., Stockbridge Hall. This session will allow students to meet the cast and to ask questions. Admission is free.

The performances are not recommended for anyone under 18 years old. Reserved tickets are available in the Fine Arts Council Office, 125 Herter Hall, on the UMass campus. Remaining tickets will be available one hour before each performance in Bowker Auditorium. A telephone reaching both offices is 545-0202. The Herter Hall Office hours are 9 a.m. - 4 p.m., Monday through Friday.

High And Low Camp

By MARTIN GOTTFRED

"BLUEBEARD" is the stage version of a horror movie, specifically the '30s, "The Island of Lost Souls," and it is a faithful and appreciative version. Obviously, details have been wildly exaggerated and the obsession with sexuality is new, but only in a hard-nosed sense. Almost every horror movie is (really) obsessed with sexuality, and the spirit of "Bluebeard" is precisely the spirit of such films. So this is camp at its best, sometimes high, sometimes low, and pure theatre.

The story is logical, for all its bazarre appearance, and the details of plot are as Victorian as the characters, absurdly complicated. Khanazar von Bluebeard, the mad doctor, is conducting experiments in his laboratory ("The House of Pain") to create a third sex ("While my beard is blue/I'll twist some human flesh/Into a genital that's new") "Is to end desire, desire's chiefest end? Have all my perversions and monstrosities, fucking and suckings, led me to this? This little death at the climax followed by slumber? Does sex afford no greater miracles? Yet chastity ravishes me! And yet the cunt gapes like the jaws of hell, and unfathomable abyss; or the boy-ass used to buggery spread wide to swallow me up its bung; or the mouth sucking out my life! Aaagh! If only there were some new and gentle genital that would combine with me!...They said I was mad at medical school. They said no third genital was possible. Yang and yin, male and female, and that's that. (Laughs maniacally) Love must be re-invented, that's obvious?")

Each new wife is given a key to this laboratory after primising never to use it, which of course each does. On the occasion of our story, Bluebeard is visited by an engaged couple - Rodney and Sybill - and her "beloved tutor and traveling companion," Miss Cubbidge. Bluebeard seduces both Sybil and Miss Cubbidge, with the assistance of his experimental failures, the monster Sheemish and Lamia, "The Leopard Woman." Every character is true to the classic style in horror movies and so is the climax, but not the conclusion, which is entirely Shakespearean (close to "The Tempest") and not unmoving.

YET IT IS the vivid imagination of Charles Ludlam, who wrote directed and stars that moves the production both forward, into the modern realm of reproduction (rather than satire) and back to the traditional realm of knockabout comedy.

Ludlam's concept is staggering for its sheer creativity. His dialog can be as cheerfully straightforward as child's ("Realize that I am doing you a favor and that I will expect a favor in return"), molodramatic ("Give up your passions, Bluebeard"), nostalgic about New York street-kid jokes ("I studied vivesection with I. Kutchakokoff in Denmark") or outrageously vulgar ("Curiosity killed the cat but it might have a salutory effect on the pussy").

His staging details are extravagant in the grandest theatrical way, elaborate costumes and masks, hump-backs, facial makeup and comic inspirations - for example, a lady moving her hands behind a folding screen as if she were playing the piano we are hearing on a tape. The music itself, throughout the production, and the many sound effects, are wonderfully chosen - including sections from Bartok's opera, "Bluebeard's Castle" - and immaculately synchronized.

BUT FINALLY, it is Ludlam's performance that collects the tone of writing, direction and performance. His Bluebeard is nothing short of a comic masterpiece, complete with a blue beard, a crackling horror-movie laugh and endless details (like a pinky ring on rubber gloves). His sex scene with Miss Cubbidge is unbearably funny, she lush and fleshy as a Rubens nude in a black corset, naked from the hips down, he is bottomless fringed red panties (and shoes). The two of them roll around on a tiny sofa in a hysterical mime of sexual twisting, position-changing and general passion.

They have created the most desirable theatre situation - a play and a production entirely in tune with each other - and if you can tune yourself in you will find the stage at its most essential. It is theatre as theatre has been through all of history, though not lately.

A Ghoulish "Bluebeard"

By MEL GUSSOW

Charles Ludlam has apparently seen, adored, laughed at, been scared to death by and memorized every mad-doctor movie ever made. "Bluebeard," which he wrote, directed and starred in, is a distillation of that ghoulish genre, and serves successfully as both a loving paean and a lunatic parodv.

The root of this "Bluebeard" is that old 1935 Charles Laughton movie, "Island of Lost Souls" - with infinite revisions and elaborations by the devious Ludlam. There are intimations, for example, of "Faust," and Barok's "Bluebeard's Castle" is playing as the entertainment begins.

Ludlam's hero-villain is the Baron Khanazar von Bluebeard, and that K in Khanazar is as hard as a pile-driver. In one of Ludlam's consistently amusing linguistic conceits, characters occasionally rasp K's where there are no K's just as, occasionally, they intentionally drop their Transylvanian accents for New Yorkese. Ludlam khids himself as well as Khanazar.

Bluebeard is trying to manufacture a new sex, specifically, a third genital. Any innocent female, such as the mad doctor's nubile niece Sybil, is almost immediately wooed, then webbed to a laboratory table for experimentation.

The plot is complicated and digressionary, and great fun to follow- from boudoir (a blantantly lewd, hilarious seduction of Sybil's billowy guardian by the irrepressibly lascivious Bluebeard) to laboratory. No corny burbling decenters there, just a tinny chair that looks like an exploded box spring - placed on stage simply so that Ludlam can maniacally heave it off stage.

Ludlam's performance is deliciously rococo, and obviously he has infected everyone in his Rldiculous Theatrical Company. For one thing, the maskllke make-up, which is credited to the entire company, is near-miraculous (a knobby-faced slavey, a gilt-skinned angel).

Led by Ludlam, a truly terrible actor like Mario Montez (as Lamia and Leopard Woman) seems exactly right and the good actors seem perfect. I particularly liked Black-Eyed Susan as Sybil (she merits some sort of citation for the self-confidence with which in the last scene she wears that third genital) and John Brockmeyer as the Karloffian servant Sheemish.

On the tiny raised stage, Brockmeyer looks about 12 feet tall, with a humpy stoop that totally obscures his head when he turns his back. Although a demi-monster, he is easily frightened out of his half-wits. Any threat of detention in the House of Pain, and he clutches his groin in anticipated anguisy. At one point, he cringes, then hops right into Bluebeard's arms, totally obscuring his master from view.

In a beard that looks like blue Brillo, his eyes blazing with mad menace, Ludlow is a monstrous, but oddly ingratiating fiend. "When I am good," he boasts, "I am very good. When I am bad..." He pauses, considers his catalogue of turpitude, and concludes, "I'm not bad." As a villain, he is not only not bad, he is terrific.

"Bluebeard" is playing Thursday through Sunday at the Christopher's End Theater, which is at the far west end of Christopher Street.

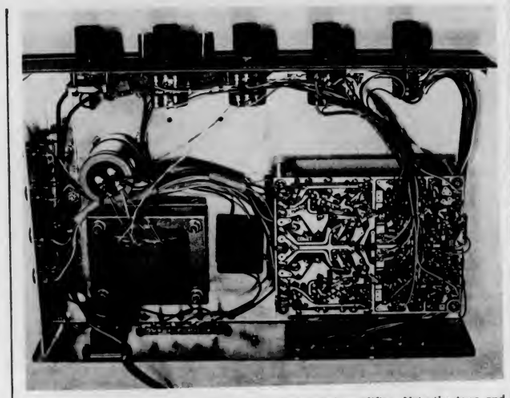
Amplifiers: Where It All Happens

By FRANK JOHNSON

After a voltage gain following preamplification, the signal still needs to have a power boost before it can be used effectively by the loudspeaker. This takes place in the power amplifier, which boosts the current and amplifies the signal without altering it appreciably.

I feel that amplification is so important a subject that I am dividing this issue into two parts. Today we will see how a power amplifier is used and how its output is measured.



Usually, a power amplifier is a separate device which cannot exist on its own without a preamplifier. It can of course be combined with a preamplifier, in which case it shares a common power supply and it becomes an "integrated" amplifier. This term should not be confused with integrated circuits, small chips containing transistors and related components which are used primarily for voltage amplifiers. Formerly, separate power amplifiers were needed, because tube circuitry necessitated a large unit whose bulk was dependent upon the physical size of the tubes. Nowadays it is actually less common to find such a separate amplifier, and the discrete or separate power amp is tantamount to simplicity and flexibility, not any real inherent advantages. There are a good many integrated amps which have high power output than several separate power amps currently available.

But in discussing power amps we must always keep one central thing in mind: when power is available, it must be put to work in a useful manner. This means that the type of loudspeaker to be used must always match up with the amplifier driving it. In this case there exists a relationship called speaker efficiency, which will dictate how much power the amplifier must deliver for the desired level of sound. Speaker efficiency is not related to quality, and more will be said about this later. But it will indicate how much power in watts the amplifier must put out. Suppose that a certain speaker has an efficiency of about 10%. The amplifier driving it puts out a power of 10 watts. The end result will be that 1 acoustic watt of power will be emitted from an input of 10 electrical watts. Suppose further that another speaker has an efficiency of 1% - the norm for acoustic-suspension type speakers. The amplifier will now have to put out 100 watts in order for that speaker to deliver the same one watt of acoustic output. If this illustration points out the necessity for high-powered amplifiers, it has served a useful purpose, for this will be the tone of this discussion when evaluating hi-fi amplifiers.

The second important consideration of power is one of how it is evaluated. The power output of high-fidelity amplifiers is measured as root-mean-square (RMS) or continuous "sine wave" power, and not the advertising jargon of the appliance manufacturer who uses terms like "peak music power" or "peak power". High power is useless to us unless it is virtually free from distortion. The irrelevance of such terms as "peak power" is the fact that they usually do not relate to low distortion, though the power amplifier might indeed seem powerful. The Electronics Industry of America specifies 5% distortion for these "peak power" figures, while most hi-fi amplifiers rate distortion below 1% at RMS output.

An explanation of common amplifier distortion should suffice. Broadly speaking, distortion is any departure in a spurious form from the original input signal, which will add unpleasantly to the sound. More precisely, there are two major types of distortion: harmonic and intermodulation (IM). Harmonic distortion occurs when a tone of a specific frequency is amplified and spurious harmoid frequencies are created in the process. An illustration of this would be a 440 cycle "A" tone being amplified with some 220 cycle or 880 cycle tones present that were not there originally. Some harmonic distortion occurs naturally in music, and it may actual"- be pleasing. But if it occurs in an amplifier in any great degree, it will adversely affect the sound, and so we want to keep it to as low a figure as possible.

The second type- IM distortion- is similar, but it does not occur as harmonics. Intermodulation distortion occurs when two tones are amplified simultaneously. Let us use 100 and 200 cycle tones to illustrate this. If IM distortion were present, it might occur as a 150 cycle tone, the difference between the two tones. Because it is random and frequency dependent, IM distortion is more severe than harmonic distortion and the distortion figure for a high-quality amplifier theoretically should have a lower figure for IM than harmonic distortion.

We can plot the output of an amplifier and relate it to the amount of distortion present versus the power output in watts. This is called the distortion curve, and it can be useful when we want to compare amplifiers we are considering for purchase. But to the technician, a more precise and demanding test of an amplifier occurs when it is "clipped". In simple terms, a pure tone generated as a sine wave does not suffer from any appreciable amplifier distortion until the capabilities of the amp are stretched and then the sine waveform will "clip" - that is to say, it will look compressed or restricted when viewed on an oscilloscope. When the amplifier clips, distortion begins to show up in large amounts and it is thus considered to be the effective limit of its reserve power.

To measure an amplifier's power, we need a little math, borrowing Ohm's Law for a moment. The amplifier is hooked up to a load (a speaker will do, but a heavy duty load resistor is better), an input sine wave source (signal generator), a voltmeter to measure the voltage output, and an oscilloscope to observe the waveform. We feed a signal into the input, watching the sine wave on the scope all the while until the waveform is clipped. When this happens, the reading off the voltmeter is taken and we compute the power output according to Ohm's Law.

Let's say we have an amplifier that does not clip until it puts out 20 volts, as expressed on the meter. The formula is W-E12, where W is the power in watts, E is the voltage squared, and I is the load impedence, expressed in Ohms (usually 8). The power output would be 20 x 20 divided by 8, giving us a final figure of 50 watts.

Before closing and referring the additional discussion for the next column, this method of evaluating output is far supecor to others employed in the industry because it gives us some idea about continuous power and not momentary peaks-a real test of an amplifier's capabilities. Also, the point at which the amp clips is a small figure of distortion, which will tell us something about how it will rise in the future.

Weekend

By BOB NESTI

Theater

Bluebeard
The Ridiculous Theatrical Company in a play about rape and other sordid pleasures this infamous bigamist reveled in. The fun begins next Thursday in Bowker and further details are on page 10. ($)

Don Juan In Hell
The rarely produced third act of the longer Man and Superman, this lengthy vocal tract is considered one of Shaw's most acerbic dramas. The action takes place in Hell where the characters of the Don Giovanni legend meet and argue Shaw's outpouring against bourgeoise society. Long on talk but given a good production, this Friday, Saturday and Sunday at 8:30 in the Converse Assembly Room at Amherst College. Seating is limited.

Fortune and Men's Eyes
John Herbert's uneven but honest play about the horrors of prison life. The drama centers on a young man who is thrown into a cell with a sadistic brute, an outrageous queen, and a lonely invert, his basic good nature is destroyed in the process. The drama itself is often touching and could benefit well from a low-keyed production. The current one will give performances through Sunday at the Studio Theater, Smith College ($).

Loot
The late Joe Orton was probably one of the most unappreciated Black humourists of his day. This comedy, about the evils of money, is a perverse joy, performed tonight and tomorrow night at the Stone Basement Theater, Amherst College tonight and tomorrow night at 8:30.

Suddenly Last Sunner and Something Unspoken
Two one acters by Tennessee Williams: Suddenly Last Summer is a poetic, haunting drama about destruction, sacrifice and atonement in which the strange death of a young man Sebastian Venable is mysteriously unveiled. Unspiken never quite reveals its secret. This Monday and Tuesday evening Wednesday evening at 8:30 in Sage 2 Smith College ($)

Music

Faculty Recital
Five faculty members of the UMass music department will perform the work of five composers Feb. 9 at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium at UMass. One of these composers whose work will be heard is Philip T. Bezanson, head of the UMass music department. His work is "The Word of Love."

Jon Humphrey, tenor, and Fernande Kaeser, pianist, will be assisted by Joseph Contino on clarinet, Carl Daehler on horn, and Peter Tanner on percussion.

Humphrey has performed with such groups as the Robert Shaw Chorale and the New York Pro Musica. Assistant professor Kaeser began her musical studies at the age of seven and gave her first concerts when she was 10. She is the only Swiss-born pianist to ever be awarded first prize at the International Music Competition at Munich.

Films

The Big Sleep, Jerry Lewis Cinemas, Northampton)
An admirable detective film thanks mainly to the strong directing of Howard Hawkes and the exciting and delightful performances of Humphrey Bogart and Lauren Bacall. In this one Bogart plays a detective hired to protect two rich, spoiled heiresses. Bacall turns out to be the more tolerable of the two sisters and as romance beckons the plot thickens to unbelievable lengths. Hawkes was quoted as saying he still can't figure it out, but no matter for this often confusing melodrama makes for a wonderful film by a fine American director. The script's by Hawkes and William Faulkner, adapted from the Raymond Chandler novel and the cast features Dorothy Malone who, in a bit part, has with Bogart one of the shortest trysts in the history of films.

Candy (Friday, SU Ballroom, 7 and 9:15)
Terry Southern's deliciously black sex parody was made into a decidedly flat film. His heroine, who consistently had her father interrupting her at the most inopportune times, wasn't exactly cleaned-up for the screen, rather was washed-out. The unusually distinguished cast, led by Richard Burton, Marlon Brando, Peter Sellers, and Ringo Starr, didn't take much of anything seriously and the resulting satire is stale and flabby.

Closely Watched Trains (Sunday, SU Ballroom, 7 and 9)
An oddly likeable minor work about a young man named Milos and his life at a country railroad station during the Second World War. The ending is a bit downbeat for the rest of the film, out Jiri Menzel's has pieced together a number of amusing scenes and characters in this otherwise congenial work. The film won an Oscar in 1968 as being the Best Foreign Film of that year.

Cry Uncle! (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
A film which merits a much stronger epithet One of the more obnoxious films of recent memories which purports to be a satire of sex films but falls victim to what it hoped to ridicule. The humor comes from watching a grossly overweight man, supposedly a police detective, humping all sorts of fleshy ladies. Fun, fun indeed brought to you by the man who directed Joe. Replace the violence of that film with sex and you have a reasonably good indication of where this little epic is at.

Darling (The Talkie, Northampton)
John Schlesigner's uncompromisingly bleak account of a social climbing bitch graphically portrayed by Julie Christie in her Oscar-winning role. This is without a doubt one of Schlesigner's better films whose direction manages to keep this otherwise bitter account of a bed-hopping wench interesting. The performances are unusually fine with Miss Christie in firm control and ably supported by Dirk Bogarde. In the end, though, the film may prove to be too scathing for its own good as the distinct social millieu attacked really wasn't worth all the bother.

Diamonds Are Forever (Campus Cinemas, Hadley, Showcase Cinemas, W. Springfield)
Bond is back, or so the ads tell us; but this latest adaption of one of the many Ian Fleming novels is a rather undistinguished facsimile. The film lacks the style and humor which made the earlier films the best of the Sixties spy films; it isn't even good James Bond with Sean Connery looking too paunchy and old for 007. This film does have the distinction of being the quickest grossing films in history having made over $30 million dollars, only proving the Bond fad hardly has diminished since the heyday of Goldfinger.

Dirty Harry (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield, Wednesday, Calvin Theater, Northampton)
A stunning police drama tautly directed by Don Siegel. Clint Eastwood is excellent as a San Franciscan policeman who is assigned to catch a vicious and sadistic sniper. The film may be too violent for some and does have a major flaw in its encroaching fascist tome: Liberals it seems, are to be blamed for all the wrongs of America and their pussy-footing with criminals allows abhorent villains to harass little children. On its own terms though, the film is an exceptional example of the genre.

The French Connection (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
A fact-based account of how police trackdown a shipment of heroin in New York City which is a fast, flashy, and fascinating thriller. The grittiness and chaos of New York City is captured at breakneck speed and brutality by director William Friedkin who has fashioned perhaps the stylish and finest thriller in some time. Gene Hackman plays a boorish detective who, as the antisocial, antihuman, detective, somewhere between Bullitt and Joe, the latest film cliche.

The Gang That Couldn't Shoot Straight (Calvin Theater, Northampton)
Jimmy Breslin amazingly readable and funny novel has been made into a surprizingly flat and dull film. The joke about two two-bit gangs is bungled and the humor moves from occasionally funny to boring repetition all too quickly, and some of the ethnic humor and various routines are tasteless. Satire is a difficult art and its obvious that director James Goldstone and scriptwriter Hugo Walt are novices at its execution. The cast, comprised mostly of Mafia caricatures, is head by Jerry Orbach and Jo Van Fleet.

Mad Dogs And Englishmen

House of Wax (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
Originally released in 1954 as one of the first three-dimensional films, this little macabre drama about the revenge of a mad was museum curator is a cut above the average. Never mind its coming on a bit too heavy, enjoy the three-dimensional effects (which include many perspective shots and one unnecessarily prolonged sequence when a barker bangs his paddle ball down your throat.) Vincent Price is appropriately diabolical as the vengeance-seeking madman.

The Gold Rush (Saturday, Sunday, Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, 7:30 and 10)
Considered by many to be the greatest of Charlie Chaplin's films, this is a sentimental silent farce played against a background of snow and ice. There are many wonderfully sustained comic moments, especially toward the beginning. The film was made in 1925 remains a supreme example of the art of the comedy film.

The Last Picture Show (Palace Cinema, West Springfield)
The Best American Film of last year is this depressing, bleak vision of life about the coming of age of three youngsters in a small Texan town in 1951. Directed by Peter Bogdanovich, the film is a straightforward well-crafted, well-acted narrative about the perils of growing up in the finest tradition of the great Hollywood directors. The film is nostalgia in the negative sense and despite some near melodramatic plotting is the most poignant film in quite some time. The acting is superb by a cast of mostly unknown character actors led by Cloris Leachmen, Timothy Bottoms, Jeff Bridges, Eileen Brennan, and Ben Johnson. The film won four NY Film Critics awards and finished second in voting for Best Picture behind A Clockwork Orange; an often searing film.

Mad Dogs and Englishmen (Saturday, Mahar Auditorium, 6:30, 8:30 and 10:30)
A rock documentary that chronicles the National tour of Joe Cocker, Leon Russell, Rita Coolidge, Chris Stanton, The Space Choir, and The Shelter People. Their communal-like existence is explored at best speciously, otherwise revel in the music which features a portion of March 1970 Fillmore East Concert and such songs as "Cry Me A River," "Space Captain", and "Delta Lady."

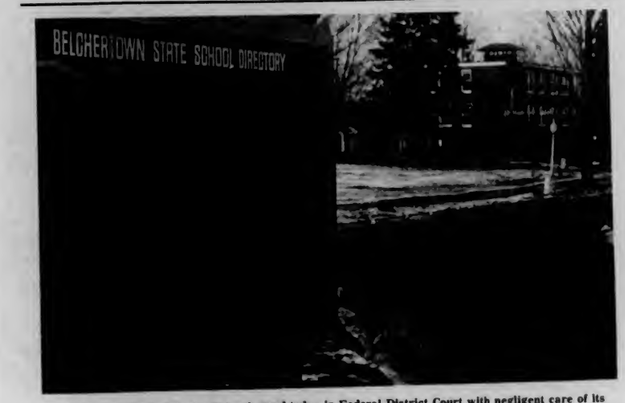
The Nights of Cabiria (The Talkie, Northampton)
Fellini's wry comedy about a prostitute with a heart of gold and her often pathetic existence. The cheerful prostitute is played magnificently by Giulietta Masina in this sporadic, often touching film. The film turned up again as the basis of the musical Sweet Charity which turned this often funny and human character into a heart-warming stereotype and showed once again the brilliance of the original.

Rebecca (Sunday, Main Lecture Hall, Hampshire College, 8 and 10)
Hitchcock's first Hollywood film and one of his finest. A stylish, impeccably-made example of the film as a popular story-teller adapted from the immensely popular Daphne du Maurier novel of passion and mystery in a stately British home. The script is clever and spellbounding and the acting by Laurence Olivier, Joan Fontane, Judith Anderson, George Sanders, and Gladys Cooper is superlative. Academy awards went to the picture and the photography.

Spellbound (Saturday, Main Lecture Hall, Hampshire College, 8 and 10)
A glossy Hitchcock mystery about whether or not a psychiatrist is a homicial amnesiac. The psychiatrist is Gregory Peck, his romantic interest is Ingrid Bergman, and the film is filled with enough tricks as to be satisfying enough. The dream sequence was designed by Salvatore Dali.

Straw Dogs (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
Quite simply the year's worst film; an ecstatic revel in violence thanks to the mindlessness of Sam Peckinpah. For more see review on page nine.

Such Good Friends (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
A savagely tasteless comic melodrama about a woman who, while her husband lies dying, discovers he had numerous affairs with many of her friends. The humor often comes through gross justoposition or plain rank fun; still under the unusually slick hand of Otto Preminger and a fine screenplay by Elaine May (using a pseudonym), the film often is good, dirty fun. The digs are many, from hypocritical chicness to medical malpractice and done with slapstick flair by a large cast led by Dyan Cannon, Laurence Luckinbell, and James Coco.



The Treasure of the Sierra Madre (Wednesday, Jerry Lewis Cinemas, Northampton)
A sombre and gripping saga about some dispicable thieves' search for god which is considered by many the best sound film of the Forties. Today the praise seems a bit overwrought, still an excellent adult adventure film from the Forties. Oscars went to both John Huston, who directed and his father Walter in the best portrayal as the oldest of the rascals. Humphrey Bogart plays one of the other bandits.

Narc Discussion Inconclusive

By STEVE TRIPOLI

Saturday's panel discussion on the use of undercover narcotics agents on the UMass campus turned out to be something more than expected, covering the issues of legalization of drugs and the scope and possible means of community control of the drug problem here at UMass.

Moderator Peter Sherrard of the Sylvan Area Human Relations Center opened the discussion by stating the points to be covered, chief among which were:

1) what is the scope of the drug problem here?
2) why are narcotics agents being used?
3) what do they accomplish?
4) what is their affect on drug traffic and the UMass community?
5) are there other means of control?
6) what are the rights of the UMass community in deciding which forms of control should be used?

The first question posed to the panel was "What is the scope of the drug scene at UMass?" E.T. Mellor of Room to Move was the first to respond. He said that according to the data that he had, in the residence halls a "significant" number of people use marijuana, while the use of hallucinogens is dropping. On hard drugs, Mellor said that heroin use was on the increase in the dorms, but that its use was in his opinion "overplayed" here. He also stated that he felt that there are more dealers off campus than on.

Dean William Field stated that although his office had no exact figures, he knew of a number of students who were in "some sort of crisis" concerning drug addiction. "I've seen a lot (100-150) of people in deep difficulty," Field said. He also cited the rising number of hepatitis cases reported at the infirmary which he stated points up to a "serious problem".

District Attorney Callahan stated at this point that while he only sees those cases which do come to court, more than one half of the students who come to court file papers indicating that they are drug dependent.

Sherrard at this point questioned Callahan on a recent MDC article in which he stated that UMass was a big center of drug traffic, and that the high and junior high schools of the area were "beginning to panic." Callahan replied that in the first few months in which he was D.A. he was called to quite a few schools concerning a drug abuse problem, "principally pills", most of which he claimed were bought at UMass. "There's a great deal of concern up and down the valley" on the part of school administrators, Callahan said.

Student Attorney Richard Howland then expressed his views on the scope of the drug problem at UMass, saying that his experience with violent crimes here "usually related to prior use of alcohol" and that the community was "ready to believe anything" concerning the drug situation here at UMass. He also stated that one reason so many students in court filed for drug dependence was that it is a "standard" defense position.

Dr. David Lewis of the Harvard Medical School also brought up the fact that drug dependence is split up into physical and psychological dependence and that it is not hard to be declared psychologically dependent on drugs by the court. Attorney Howland agreed with this but stated that people in the Valley accept what's going on in court and get the impression that things are getting worse. D.A. Callahan interjected at this point that he's only seen one out of approximately seventy-five doctors assert that a person brought before the court couldn't function because of excessive marijuana use.

Mr. Sherrard at this point reminded the panelists that they were trying to get to the question of undercover agents. "Why are narcotics agents being used, and what do they hope to accomplish?" was Sherrard's question.

Senator John Steven's answer to this was that he saw "no logical reason" for the presence of agents on campus to which D.A. Callahan replied that one undercover agent was used as a result of complaints last spring, and that he only purchased drugs here in order to identify, arrest, and prosecute pushers. Mr. Sherrard's answer to this was to ask D.A. Callahan if he was aware of only one undercover agent on this campus, to which Callahan replied that there was only one Federal prosecution due to undercover agents "years ago" and that now there was only one policeman being used as an agent.

Suit To Be Filed On Behalf Of Belchertown Patients

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

The Belchertown State School Friends Association-acting through Boston Attorney Beryl W. Cohen-will file a class action suit in Federal District Court in Boston today charging that the State Department of Mental Health has been negligent in the care of patients at Belchertown.

Named as defendants in the suit are Governor Sargent, Peter Goldmark, secretary of human services and Dr. Milton Greenblatt, commissioner of mental health. Greenblatt is also an ex officio member of the UMass Board of Trustees.

UMass Professor Benjamin Ricci, president of the Friends Association which represents parents of the children in the institution, in a Springfield Union article called for the removal of Greenblatt from office and advocated the formation of a separate Department of Mental Retardation as a means of improving conditions in state schools.

Greenblatt who was not reappointed to his post last year but has remained in office on an interim basis has come under renewed fire in light of the class unit. It has been reported that Sargent was considering reappointing Greenblatt to the position.

The Springfield Republican in an editorial yesterday called for the ouster of Greenblatt and charged that no significant progress has been made since The Union-Republican series, "The tragedy of Belchertown," brought to light the "overcrowding, the neglect and the filth that blighted the lives of inmates at that institution."

"Neither the mental health commissioner nor Gov. Sargent can avoid the responsibility for this failure," stated the editorial.

In other action, Sen. Philip A. Quinn, D-Spencer, and Rep. Alexander Lolas, D-Monson, joint chairmen of a special legislative commission which has been investigating Belchertown State School and Monson State Hospital have formall requested that Sargent not reappoint Greenblatt.

The Quinn-Lolas commission has repeatedly found "deplorable" conditions at Belchertown and has cited the continuing failure of the Department of Mental Health to effect improvements.

Attorney Cohen said the case will have "national implications" and will seek to halt the repeated violations of the constitutional rights of the patients involved, under the First, Fifth and 14th Amendments to the Constitution.

"This issue has not been raised before," said Cohen in the Union. "Persons do lose certain rights when they are in an institution but the court must decide they are entitled to constitutional protection."

"The federal courts have jurisdiction because of the deprivation of due process and equal protection and the cruel and abusive treatment the residents suffer," said Cohen in explaining why the suit is being filed in the U.S. District Court.

The suit is also being filed under portion of the federal civil rights act, he said.

Ricci in evaluating state action in the Springfield Union concerning mental hospitals said, "Executive action to change conditions has been non-existent." He described legislative action as being "sincere but slow, so we're turningt to judicial remedies for immediate reforms."

Today's legal action comes on the eve of a major address by Gov. Sargent tomorrow in Boston before the Massachusetts Association of Mental Health at the Sheraton Hotel.

Cohen is a former state Senator and was Senate chairman of the joint legislative Committee on Social Welfare. He also has acted as counsel for the Quinn-Lolas commission in its dealings with the DMH during its investigation of Belchertown and of Monson State Hospital.

What You Eat Is What You Get

By BARRY STAVRO

A meeting of the Services Committee will be held tomorrow at 4:30 p.m. in Hampden Dining Commons to discuss and listen to student complaints on Food Servicing. Student Senator Elliot Sherman who chairs the committee admits that lack of student response to past meetings and the unwillingness of the Director of Food Services, Joel Stoneham, to change has hurt chances of improving the Food Service Program.

Sherman said the most common student complaints are the lack of variety and the drab atmosphere in the dining commons. He also cited problems in the preparation of food and the tendency of the D.C. to run out of food at the end of the eating periods.

Sherman said one possible plan to improve the Food Service Program would be the elimination of the straight meal ticket plan, designed for those students who do not use all their meal tickets. According to the plan, unused meal tickets could be resold or turned in for a rebate. This would change the Food Program from the unlimited seconds system to one where "you get what you pay for."

A problem with the present seconds system is the mass planning and cooking of food. Each day the supervisors estimate the amount of food needed to be prepared. If they prepare too much it costs the students more money, and if not enough is cooked you don't eat.

Another plan to reduce meal costs would be to increase part-time student employment in the dining commons to help replace the supervising and labor staffs. Students cost less to employ than full-time workers, and as Sherman said, the student workers would be more responsible to the needs of students than blue-haired old ladies.

Currently a test kitchen is run on Tuesdays and Thursdays in Worcester Dining Commons. Sherman urges students to sample the new types of procedures and food and to express their opinions on the project.

An additional problem discussed was the minimal active participation of the Food Service's managers and supervisors. Sherman complained that instead of visiting other dining commons they sit in Worcester D.C. waiting for complaints to come their way. "They are not performing an adequate job," Sherman summarized.

Sherman also hopes that the administration will act on the present inequity of the cash vs. meal ticket systems. He explained that last year before the price freeze meal ticket prices were increased while cash prices remained the same, which now means it is cheaper to buy meals by cash than by meal tickets.

Sherman reiterated a hope for increased student "imputs" in order to change the inefficient and unfavorable food servicing. He hopes Tuesday's meeting will be well attended by those interested in what they eat.

Nader At Cage Today

Ralph Nader

Ralph Nader will conduct a speaking tour of Western Massachusetts sponsored by the Western Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (WMPIRG). Mr. Nader will appear today at 2:00 in Field House Hall in Springfield College, at 4:00 in Curry Hicks Cage at the UMass campus and at 8:30 in Chapin Hall at Williams College. Mr. Nader will speak on consumer-environmental abuses, and on the latest projects he and his Washington-based PIRG have undertaken.

Mr. Nader is coming to help establish WMPIRG, one of a network of Public Interest Research Groups he hopes to start across the country. WMPIRG will be comprised of all twenty Western Mass. colleges. These PIRG's will be student run, directed and financed and will deal with local problems. They were inspired by the hundreds of applications for volunteer work Mr. Nader received from college students. Student PIRG's have already been established in Minnesota, Oregon and Vermont.

Welfare Reform Will Be Rejected

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Finance Committee winding up its hearings on the ominous welfare-Social Security bill, has made it clear it will reject President Nixon's welfare-reform package.

That comes as no surprise to the administration which had not expected to win in the conservative-dominated panel.

It would be consistent with the action of Finance in the preceding Congress when it rejected Nixon's family assistance plan 10-6. The vote is apt to be about the same this year.

The real fight will come on the Senate floor, probably in March, and there both supporters and foes of the plan say it now looks like a tossup.

Welfare reform has attracted all the attention so far in Senate consideration of the big bill which passed the House last June 22.

But it also contains far-reaching Social Security and health-care provisions which are highly important. On these, impelled by election-year considerations, the Finance Committee may well make liberalizing changes in contrast to its likely decisions on welfare.

The committee now has completed its public hearings on welfare reform, and will complete its testimony with three sessions on Medicare and Medicaid this week.

The panel then expects to begin voting on the legislation the week starting Feb. 14 and complete work on its version by the end of the month.

Finance is apt to substitute for Nixon's welfare plan a package now being shaped by its chairman, Sen. Russell B. Long, D-La.

This may include pilot projects on the major features of the President's proposal-a guaranteed minimum annual income and aid for the working poor.

But its substantive provisions are expected to be strong work requirements, perhaps with incentive payments to employers to hire low-skilled welfare recipients, heavy penalties for fathers who desert and refuse to support their families, and aid for the working poor through federal payments equal to the Social Security taxes which they pay and employers pay in their behalf.

Then, administration forces and Democratic liberals will stage their floor fight.

The chances of the welfare-reform supporters for success on the floor seem to depend on their ability to walk a fine line.

The amendment to be offered must be somewhat more generous than the Nixon plan in order to attract most Democratic liberals. But it cannot be so costly as to drive away Republican moderates.

The liberals estimate that this approach could yield an ample majority for the measure.

Long, however, says he is confident he can convince the Senate the plan will make the welfare situation worse.

Reformed Killer Gets College Degree

LOCKPORT, Ill. (AP) — William G. Heirens, 43, received a bachelor of arts degree Sunday from Lewis College, 25 years after he was convicted of killing 6-year-old Suzanne Degan and dumping parts of her body in various Chicago sewers.

Heirens also was convicted of killing two Chicago women, shooting one and stabbing the other.

Heirens, becoming the first Illinois prison inmate to earn a degree in prison, said he was convicted because of overblown press publicity.

"It was a trial by news media," Heirens said at a news conference after he and 16 other graduates had been awarded Bachelor of Arts degrees from Lewis College, a small coed institution nestled on a Lockport hilltop.

Heirens also said there was too much news coverage of his Sunday graduation. Television crews and newsmen moved all over the small chapel where the ceremony was held.

Heirens, dressed in a new prison-made suit and cap and gown, smiled at friends and relatives in the audience.

Asked how he felt about getting the degree, Heirens said he was happy. "It's my first graduation," he said, explaining he sat out his grammar school graduation in a detention home, skipped through high school to enter the University of Chicago, and spent the rest of the time in prison.

Heiren's mother and five other relatives were in the audience.

Heirens said he hopes to be released one day. He has been discharged from one of his three consecutive life sentences. In the meantime, he's writing a book to prove his innocence, "because it seems that's the only way people get out of prison."

Loenstein On Campus

By ERNIE ROTMAN

Robert Loenstein., former U.S. Congressman, will be here tomorrow to run a seminar at the School of Education. This won't be the only opportunity to see Loenstein., though, for he is planning to speak at UMass three more times in February and March, with each visit lasting three days.

Teaming up with Loenstein in his first seminar will be Dean Dwight Allen who, himself, convinced Loenstein to visit UMass. Teamed together, these two men will speak about topics ranging from education to politics.

In a recent interview, Jack Bierworth, one of Lowenstein's aides, said: "Robert (Loenstein) wants to teach seminars. His experience in areas outside education will lend itself to a better perspective of education." Some of the well-known facets of Loenstein's life, besides being in Congress, are his persuasion of McCarthy to run for the Presidency, his major role in SCLC, and his chairmanship in ADA. "He wants very much for the youth in this country to vote," said Bierworth.

Tuesday's talk will be held in Marksmeadow auditorium and is free to the public.

New Security Head David Johnston discusses his new position and what he expects from it in an NBC Interview. (MDC photo by Carl Nash)

Security Head Plans Change

By STEVE FINE

"I think police responsiveness to the University community, is of great importance," said David Johnston, the newly appointed director of security, while discussing the University police's function at UMass. His responsibilities as the director of security, encompass heading the University police, security guards, and residence hall assistants.

Johnston calls the University policing situation different than in a municipality, because in cities police usually respond to the political structure rather than the people themselves. "Here at UMass there is a discernible line between administration, faculty, and students which should bring the police department in line with the community needs," he said.

One example Johnston gave of this responsiveness to peoples' needs was team policing. "This was successfully tried in the Holyoke community, where 4 men were assigned to a certain area, with fluctuating hours," he said. The fluctuating hours, he believes, exposes the people and police to each other. "This face to face encounter between police and people, makes the people see the policeman more as a human being and it makes the policeman rely more on himself, rather than criminal law to solve problems," he said.

Johnston didn't say this program would be instituted at UMass, but he listed some changes he will make in the next few months.

He plans to establish a university police academy, which will stress interpersonnel relations, an investigation section to handle followups on the largest campus crime, larceny, and institute a one man patrol, to make the police respond quicker to calls. One thing he said he'd also like to do was bring students in to work in the police department. "This would be similar to a program at Michigan State, where students work as assistant dispatchers, manning the teletype, and handling records," he said. "I think these jobs would be important because it could act as sort of a scholarship for students," he added.

In discussing some techniques of university policing, Johnston said that if his department knew about heroin or marijuana dealings, he would cooperate with the state police in whatever action taken. He also believes that the university police should wear uniforms. "I think being identified gives an opportunity for students to call on police when they are needed," he said. As far as the spring concert goes, he believes if there were one, with 15,000 to 20,000 people, it would be a situation that would probably require outside help. Johnston did stress he wants all law enforcement matters to be handled by the university police whenever possible. "I feel all university matters should be handled by the university police, because we will be here the next day, after the help leaves," he said.

Although David Johnston has never worked in a university policing situation before, his police career goes back to a little more than a decade. After getting out of the Army during the 1958 recession, and working in boiler construction, he landed a job with the police force in Saginaw, Michigan. For the next 8 1/2 years he worked on the police force, and took correspondence school courses on the side in law enforcement. Then after going to a community college, while still working full time and getting a 3. cum, he decided to hit the big time and go full time to Michigan State. There he earned his B.A. at the School of Police Administration, and then went on to the State University at New York in Albany, to get his M.A. Now he's working on his PhD. When asked what it was about, he said, "I haven't really decided yet, but I'm extremely interested in the field of correctional administration." Johnston says that corrections seems to be neglected by policemen. "For example, before a recent election in New York City, they were locking up a lot of street people and prostitutes," he said. He believes that this might not happen if police administrators knew more about the overcrowding in prisons.

Johnston also discussed his work with the poorly reputed Oakland, California police force. He was there in the summer of 1970, with Mr. Hans Toch of the National Mental Health Institute, by the request of Oakland's mayor, Charles Gaine. He says Gaine called Toch in because, he wanted to find out why the police had so many complaints lodged against them the summer before. "Toch was allowed to ride in police cars to observe officers. He found that many of the officers overreacted because their perception of certain situations was distorted," he said. Johnston gave as an example, a police officer being cursed at by a suspect. "Some officers didn't know what to do. Often they hit the suspect in response," he said. "What came out of this investigation by Toch," he says, "was the training of 8 officers to teach other policemen on the force how to react to these circumstances, through practicing in encounter and T groups."

Johnston said the best way students could help police was by following all the safety precautions of locking doors, reporting strangers in dorms, and registering all valuables with the police under the new program instituted. "In Monterey, California, this program was extremely successful, where in 6 months, 400 homes under the program were not broken into," he said.

When asked if he wanted his son Jay, to go into police work he said that he'd like him to do whatever he wants to do. "Right now," he said, "he wants to be a vet, and doesn't have any particular desire at this time to be a policeman."

Search Committeee Still Busy Looking

By HUGH OWEN

Last fall Oswald Tippo resigned as Chancellor of the University and he still has no successor. Bob Sprague, a member of the Chancellor Search Committee, told the MDC in a recent intervew that he hopes to have by the beginning of March a list of about five nominees to be considered for approval by the committee. Patty Asack, also of the Committee, told the MDC that the list most likely would not be submitted until the end of March.

Though it seems as if the Search Committee is taking an excessive amount of time to find a chancellor, Glenn Gordon, chairman of the committee, said that it really was not taking as long as people might think. "We first had to wait until late September for approval of a budget so that we could hire a secretary to send out letters to nominees. Since many of these people were college deans and professors who normally go on vacation during that time, we did not receive replies to the letters until around the middle of January. Since the deadline for applications is February seventh replies are still coming in."

Approximately forty out of the seventy nominees replied that they were interested in the chancellorship. Subcommittee have been formed and each one must pick out the nominees they think are best suited for the position. In this way the forty will be narrowed down to approximately twelve to fifteen.

As of now the committee has not yet decided the procedure for interviewing these remaining nominees. Gordon also said that they would probably invite the nominees to visit UMass and be interviewed while here. "This would take at least another two weeks," he said.

When the interviews are over the committee will decide on the best five of the fifteen or so applicants. This list will then be submitted for approval and hopefully a new chancellor will be appointed shortly thereafter.

Arab Guerrillas Captured

TEL AVIV (AP)-Israelis have captured two bands of Arab guerrillas that have struck deep inside Israel several times during the last six months, a military spokesman reported Sunday.

He said one suspect confessed to throwing a hand grenade into a group of American pilgrims in the old section of Jerusalem last September. An Arab girl was killed in the explosion and 12 other persons, including seven Americans, were injured.

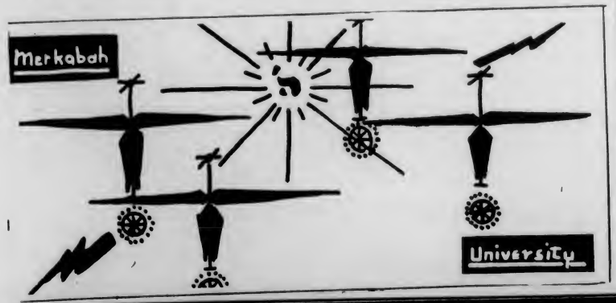
No Money In The Strike Fund

WASHINGTON (AP)-How long did Harry Bridges think his union could pay a $100,000-a-day fine if it ignored a congressional emergency order to return to work?

"About a half day," said Bridges in his quick, sometimes flip Australian way.

How big is his union strike fund?

"We don't have any...I say the only way to have a strike is starve" although his 13,000 longshoremen do rotate through the few jobs moving defense cargo in the 121-day West Coast dock strike.



This came in a session with newsmen during a break in the Senate Labor Committee hearing on the legislation demanded by President Nixon to order the International Longshoremen and Warehousemen Union back to work.

Once the hearing resumed, Bridges, 70, and bone-thin, lounged back in his chair, when not talking.

But Bridges was up to the challenge of the hearing, a small thing compared to federal attempts to strip him of citizenship, deport him, the 1934 general strike, the drumming out of his union from the CIO on charges of Communist domination.

Bridges never denied sympathy to communist or related causes, but always maintained he never was a party member.

Bridges and management negotiator Edmund Flynn said the remaining issues included a demand for ten paid holidays.

Irish Hold Peaceful March

NEWRY, Northern Ireland (AP) — Pro-Roman Catholic demonstrators estimated to number 20,000, marched down Newry's streets in an illegal parade Sunday but averted a clash with British troops by switching their route at the last minute.

With tiny, defiant Bernadette Devlin in the lead, the silent marchers headed down a hill toward Newry's city center. An armed camp bristling with Northern Irish police and 3,000 combat-ready British troops awaited them.

Hanging over the procession was the memory of 13 civilians killed in a street fight with British soldiers in Londonderry on last week's "Bloody Sunday."

But shortly after falling in step, the marchers veered away from army barricades, made their way peacefully back through side streets and wound up at mass rally near their starting point.

They claimed they had tricked the troops into guarding the wrong part of the tense border city and got away with a parade the army was ordered to prevent.

There was no violence. British troops stayed on their side of the barricades and claimed their massive show of force frustrated the marchers from reaching the city center.

Whoever was right, it was a victory for restraint by both sides. Pope Paul VI and other religious and political leaders had pleaded for everyone in Newry to avoid bloodshed.

About 300 green-jacketed parade marshals kept the marchers well away from the army barricades blocking off the route into the city center avoiding the rock-throwing riot of last week in Londonderry.

The crowd, demonstrating against internment without trial of suspected Irish Republican Army outlaws, cheered as Miss Devlin claimed victory over government warnings against holding the march.

Referring to Prime Minister Edward Heath of Britain and the Northern Ireland prime minister, Brian Faulkner, she said: "Mr. Faulkner and Mr. Heath nearly got down on their knees to beg us to call off this march, because they knew this march and the marches that will follow are going to bring down that clique at Stormont."

Stormont is the meeting place of Northern Ireland's parliament, dominated by the British-ruled province's two-to-one Protestant majority.

"The civil resistance campaign will never be broken," Miss Devlin continued. "We go on with the fight."

Miss Devlin, 24-year-old member of the British House of Commons, was joined in the march and afternoon rally in bright, chilly weather by other politicians and well-known political militants.

Among them were actress Vanessa Redgrave, Joan Plowright, the actress wife of Sir Laurence Olivier; and Kevin Boland, former Dublin defense minister.

Army helicopters hovered high above the mass rally that filled Monday's Meadow, an open space ringed by public housing projects.

Across the border in the Irish republic, thousands of demonstrators paraded peacefully throughout the country in sympathy with the Newry marchers but heeded pleas by their own government and the IRA to stay away from Newry.

CALCUTTA India (AP) — Prime Minister Sheik Mujibur Rahman of Bangladesh told a huge public meeting here Sunday that the United States has turned its back on the sufferings of his people and failed the cause of democracy on the Indian subcontinent.

Cambodia Claims 40 N. Viets Killed In Joint Action

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — The Cambodian high command claimed Sunday that 40 North Vietnamese or Viet Cong soldiers have been killed in a joint Cambodian-South Vietnamese operation in Svay Rieng province in southeastern Cambodia during the past three days.

JERUSALEM (AP) — France will pay Israel $75 million as a cash refund for Mirage jet fighter planes never delivered, reliable sources said Sunday.

Bus Hijacked In NC

SALISBURY, N.C. (AP) — Police said an escaped mental patient hijacked a Continental Trailways bus with 10 passengers aboard Sunday, took a teen-aged girl hostage, and led officers on a 40-mile, four-county chase before crashing the bus into a roadblock.

Donald Ray Henderson, 22, of Atlanta, was held under $64,000 bond by Davidson County authorities Sunday night after the incident.

Henderson, an escapee from a Florida mental hospital, was charged with a total of 17 counts ranging from kidnap to larceny and armed robbery, a sheriff's department spokesman said.

Davidson County Sheriff Fred Sink said the bus was commandeered near Lexington, N.C., on Interstate 85 by a man wielding a .22-caliber pistol.

Committee Formed To Aid Berrigan

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — Operating from a noisy office a few blocks from the courtroom, a committee of sympathizers is raising funds to finance the defense in the antiwar conspiracy trial of Philip Berrigan and six others.

The group, known as the Harrisburg Defense Committee and comprised mostly of persons in their 20s with college degrees, already has raised $40,000.

The committee was formed solely to help the defendants, charged with conspiring to kidnap presidential aide Henry Kissinger, to blow up heating tunnels under some federal buildings in Washington, D.C., and to destroy draft records at Selective Service offices in at least nine states.

Forty-five prospective jurors have been chosen, one short of the 46 needed to fill the panel from which 12 jurors will be sworn in to consider the charges. Selection continues Monday.

From their five-room office, committee members seek funds for legal expenses, staff salaries, defendants' travel, postage, rental of five houses and four apartments to house staff, defendants and attorneys, 11 telephone lines, office rent and fund-raising activities.

"Our biggest source of income is through direct mail," says committee press secretary Robert Hoyt. "The average gift is $15. We've had a half-dozen large gifts-the largest was $5,000."

Senate To Discuss Evader Amnesty

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., announced Sunday a Senate subcommittee will hold hearings on Selective Service procedures and on the possibility of granting amnesty to draft evaders through administrative procedures.

Kennedy, who heads the subcommittee on administrative practice and procedures, said the panel will hold three days of hearings beginning Feb. 28.

The Massachusetts senator is out of the country but his office issued a statement in which he said that the 1971 Selective Service Act incorporated many of the subcommittee's earlier recommendations to insure greater fairness in administration of the draft law.

"Now we want to examine the actual practices under the new law to determine their impact on that goal.

"I was particularly concerned because certain of the new regulations seem to move in the opposite direction," he said.

Kennedy's announcement said the subcommittee "will consider past precedents and current opportunities for administrative action to regularize the consideration, processing and granting of applications for executive clemency from Selective Service registrants who have failed to comply with statutory and regulatory requirements, and others seeking relief from draft and military violations related to the Vietnam war."

Kennedy's statement added that the subcommittee will "focus especially on the World War II arrangements under which amnesty procedures were developed through administrative action alone."

About 500 young men have been sent to prison for draft-law violations in recent years and an estimated 70,000 have gone abroad to escape the draft.

Some members of Congress have proposed various forms of amnesty legislation but President Nixon and other administration spokesman have said there can be no consideration of amnesty as long as the war continues and Americans remain prisoners of the enemy.

Secret Negotiations Viewed As Obstacle

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

North Vietnamese Minister of State Xuan Thuy and U.S. Secretary of State William P. Rogers each accused the other's government Sunday of blocking progress in efforts to end the Vietnam war.

Thuy said President Nixon's revelation of secret negotiations with Hanoi created a serious obstacle to a peaceful settlement. But Rogers said Xuan Thuy's government had been "totally intransigent" in both secret and public negotiations.

Rogers said, however, "they have not rejected President Nixon's proposal in eight points as such. I would hope in future they would realize negotiations hold out the best hope."

He said these proposals "provide a basis on which agreement could be reached."

Rogers was interviewed on the CBS-TV program "Face the Nation" in Washington directly after a broadcast of a discussion with Xuan Thuy, chief North Vietnamese negotiator at Paris, which "Face the Nation" taped in the French capital Friday.

Rogers, assessing the negotiaing situation, said the North Vietnamese position at present was such that "it is not possible to work out a solution unless we give them everything they want."

The secretary insisted that North Vietnam's "Last remaining hope is to divide the American people...we are not going to permit that."

Returning to his criticism of Sen. Edmund Muskie, D-Maine, who took a dim view of Nixon's eight-point peace plan, Rogers said he did not think that he and the President were the only persons who could define the national interest, "but it is incumbent on the other branches of the government to permit us to conduct these negotiations."

Xuan Thuy said Nixon's revelations of secret talks were an obstacle to the success of negotiations.

"An absolute obstacle?" he was asked.

"A serious obstacle," he replied.

The secret talks, he said, had brought certain benefits.

"I understand Nixon's position. It (the position) wants U.S. troops out, but maybe not completely. It wants Thieu's organization to be kept in power," a reference to Nguyen Van Thieu, president of South Vietnam.

He said Nixon missed a chance to settle the war and attain the release of American prisoners of war last fall when Thieu was re-elected with no opposition candidates running.

Nixon's support of Theiu, he said, was why North Vietnam had changed its position on the return of American prisoners.

At that time, he said, "we put the question within the military question. In 1971 it was our earnest desire to see Mr. Nixon settle the Vietname question quickly...there was a very opportune occasion to setttle the war before the October election, but Mr. Nixon refused to do so...now the political and military question must be settled together."

SAYS MUSKIE HARMED U.S. INTERESTS–Secretary of State William P. Rogers tells newsmen at the State Department today that Maine Sen. Edmund Muskie, contender for the Democratic presidential nomination, has harmed U.S. national interest by rejecting President Nixon's Indochina peace plan before the enemy has. (AP Wirephoto)

Mystery Woman Appears

NEW YORK (AP)-Another mystery woman, this one a bonde scuba diver, surfaced Sunday in the Clifford Irving-Howard Hughes saga.

The woman, identified only as Ann Baxter, flew with Irving last December to St. Croix in the Virgin Islands and gave him scuba lessons while he was there in what he said was an attempt to contact Hughes, Life magazine said.

In a court paper filed last month, novelist Irving, 41, swore he flew to St. Croix from Miami last Dec. 10 on instructions of a Hughes aide, who told him the billionaire would meet him there for a final session about Hughes' "autobiography."

Irving said he stayed on St. Croix until Dec. 12, but when no message came from Hughes, he left.

Miss Baxter, a scuba instructor at Newport Beach Hotel in Miami Beach, could not be reached for comment Sunday. The manager of the hotel pool, Stanley Wertheimer, said: "She doesn't feel like talking to anyone."

Wertheimer said Irving took lessons at the pool from Miss Baxter in early December, but Wetheimer said he did not know if they traveled anywhere.

He said Miss Baxter, who is in her late 20s, has been working at the hotel since May and told him she was doing graduate work in archeology prior to working at the hotel. She also told him she does part-time modeling, Wertheimer said.

Hughes, who hasn't been seen in public for a decade and is said to live as a recluse in the Bahamas, has denied ever meeting Irving and labeled the Irving-produced "autobiography" a fake. Hughes' disclaimers came from a voice identified as his in a telephone news conference, and in court affidavits allegedly signed by Hughes.

McGraw-Hill Publishing Co. says it gave Irving three checks totalling $650,000 to give Hughes in payment for his life story, which it planned to publish in March. A spokesman for the publisher said it still believes the manuscript is genuine.

Life, which paid $100,000 for excerpts, and McGraw-Hill postponed publication when it learned that the $650,000 in checks, made out to "H.R. Hughes," had been deposited in a Swiss bank by Mrs. Irving, using the name "Helga R. Hughes," and subsequently withdrawn by her.

Swiss authorities found $442,000 of the money deposited in another bank across the street and have asked for the extradition of Mrs. Irving on fraud charges.

Irving and his 36-year-old fourth wife, Edith, a Swiss-born abstract artist, are scheduled to appear before a federal grand jury this week in New York. Irving says Hughes ordered the peculiar banking arrangements.

Another beautiful woman, Nina van Pallandt, a 39-year-old Danish cabaret singer, said last week she was with Irving when he went to Mexico last February. His story that he met Hughes on that trip "flabbergasted" her, she said.

She was quoted as saying she knew of no way Irving could have met with Hughes during the trip.

U.S. Attempts To Halt Enemy Offense

SAIGON (AP)-American air cavalrymen borne by helicopters made "flame drops" of napalm Sunday on what appeared to be newly constructed North Vietnamese bunkers 25 miles northeast of Saigon. The action came in a series of spoiling operations designed to preempt anticipated Tet attacks in the capital region.

On the opposite side of Saigon, 30 Viet Cong soldiers ripped into South Vietnamese militiamen near the district town of Trang Bang on Highway 1, killing five of the government soldiers and wounding five. Two enemy soldiers were reported killed in the fight.

Field reports said the air cavalrymen are conducting scores of patrols in efforts to keep off balance two North Vietnamese and Viet Cong infantry regiments, two separate infantry battalions, a sapper battalion and an artillery battalion.

They are operating in Bien Hoa, Long Khanh and Phuoc Tuy provinces, which border Saigon to the north and east.

When air cavalrymen on ground patrol approached the newly discovered bunker complex Sunday, they drew fire but suffered no casualties. They pulled back and called in helicopters to drop canisters of napalm on the bunkers, which were believed to contain claymore mines to maim anyone who swept through them on foot.

Communiques from the Saigon and U.S. military commanders Sunday indicated the lightest action in several weeks. But such communiques often lag as many as 24 hours behind what is actually happening on the battlefield.

The Saigon command reported 11 "enemy initiated" incidents, including three rockets and mortar attacks, during the 24-hour period ending at 6 a.m. Sunday.

The U.S. Command announced that an Army OH6 light observation helicopter was shot down Saturday afternoon in Kontum province in the central highlands.

Narc Discussion Inconclusive

After an initial query by Atty. Howland as to Callahan's definition of an undercover agent, Judge Raymond R. Cross interjected his opinion on the subject by saying that the real problem is "how are you going to treat drugs?" and that the more important question is "should drugs be legalized?". Senator Stevens stated at this point that "this (UMass) community doesn't think that drugs are the problem that the state does." Dean Field responded to this by saying that he disagreed, citing cases of students who are assigned roommates that use drugs and are not comfortable in this situation, coming eventually to his office and requesting to be moved. He concluded by saying that it's "just naive" to say that there is no concern among the students.

The next topic of conversation was initiated by Senator Stevens who stated "as I understand it most people on campus don't care about such drugs as grass or hash, yet one half of all accusations are concerned with them. D. A. Callahan's response to this was that it should be understood by everyone that the mandate of the majority in this state and the nation is that these drugs are illegal. He also stated that undercover agents are a "fair" way of handling drug offenders (this statement drew a fairly strong negative reaction from the crowd of about 100).

Mellor then carried the conversation by saying that the high schools are not really getting most of their drugs from UMass but from "mom's medicine cabinet." He also asked that the panel discuss the issue from that point forward using the laws as they are on the books and not conjecturing on what they ought to be. He then listed what he thought were the advantages of undercover agents. These are that first they are better than a room to room search and second that an agent is better capable of getting the "big man (pusher)." He pointed out that it had not worked that way in the bust last spring because it didn't get the big man.

D.A. Callahan's response to this was that when you get fifty-one people in a raid you'll get some users, but that they'd "tried to distinguish" in court. Mellor's rebuttal to this was that people had come to him at Room To Move who had been busted for little to nothing. Callahan responded that there had been no busts for just "one pill or one joint".

Atty. Howland then raised the question of whether or not informers were a good way to treat the situation. He also commented at this time that he felt that drugs have become a big problem here because so much effort is expended investigating them. "No one investigates auto theft and the football card racket here in that manner." D.A. Callahan responded that he didn't want to get into a lengthy discussion on the topic, but that he has used undercover agents to investigate auto theft.

The topic of community control of the situation then arose. Dean Field stated on this that the idea is good but that "even the best residence halls can't control an addict" and that the end result is that the residence hall, despite its good intentions, usually gives up in the end.

A question and answer period then followed. The first person to query the panel was Eric Walgren. His position was that D.A. Callahan's "liberal" attitude towards grass is "bullshit" and that the D.A. is a "doublecrosser". He said that he wanted to know if the panel "was talking straight or talking shit."

The next question came from a student who claimed that in the Army (from which he had recently been released) there were many undercover narcotics agents and that having them present led to beatings and even murder and that it generally agitated the community as a whole. D.A. Callahan replied that Room To Move had informed him of this but that in any instance of criminal activity that the community can't control people come to the police. He further stated that some of these people are informants but still responsible members of the community. "Informant has a broad definition" was Callahan's remark.

Some other questions from the audience included a remark by Senator Skip Casper of Brown House that he had seen Callahan, the day after the narc bill was passed, on a television news interview and that Callahan had mocked the bill. Callahan replied that this was a criticism that he was here to listen to. He also stated that he had spoken to the Student Senate last May about the whole problem of drugs and a possible solution. "So long as drugs are illegal undercover agents are necessary", Callahan stated.

James Gold, Editor in Chief of the Collegian addressed a question to Judge Cross concerning the treatment of convicted occasional drug users and convicted frequent users. Judge Cross answered that he hadn't been a judge for very long and wasn't yet familiar with procedure. He also again posed the question of whether drugs should be legalized in the first place.

After the question and answer period was over and the discussion adjourned, the MDC asked D.A. Callahan if the discussion had in his opinion served any purpose. He answered that any exchange of views in a rational way serves a purpose. He also informed the Collegian that there is a possibility of having the same type of discussion in the future involving some area legislators. "They'd be happy to attend sometime in the future I'm sure" was Callahan's closing remark.

Undercover Injustice

Saturday afternoon in Thompson Hall a panel discussion was held concerning the use of undercover narcotic agents on the UMass campus. Most of the discussion was directed toward District Attorney John Callahan, and how he as a "liberal" politician allows for the use of such agents on this campus. We feel that those same questions and inquiries would have been more beneficial served if directed towards Judge Raymond Cross. For Judge Cross and others like him are the ones who can quickly take action to right the consequences of unjust laws. Would District Attorney Callahan, knowing of no support in court and constantly rebuffed and frustrated in his prosecutions by unsympathetic judges, continue his present course of action? We believe he would quickly reorder his priorities, and allocate more of his time and energy to other problems.

It was suggested by Judge Cross that before any other actions should be taken, it must be decided if marijuana should be legalized. If marijuana was proved to be safe etc., etc., etc., then the State Legislature would pass the necessary bills, and many other problems would be just academic. But we all know how slowly the Legislature moves, and it offers little hope to solving the problem the campus now faces. If the civil rights movement based their whole hope for action solely on the Congress, we would undoubtably still be waiting. Court action was sought, and the wheels of change quickly proceeded. If anything can be learned from the Trials at Nuremburg following the Second World War, it was that a Judge has a duty and obligation not to enforce unjust laws, and follow his own conscience where he sees fit.

A Judge must not be oblivious to the beliefs and wishes of the constituency he serves. We strongly urge the Judges of the Hampshire-Franklin County district to recognize the fact that the use of undercover agents at UMass to discover who is dealing in drugs is unsuccessful, unwanted, unjust, and harmful, and to refuse to hear cases in which the use of undercover agents are involved.

Function Vs. Practice

The decision of the Student Senate not to fund the Student Mobilization Committee to End the War in Vietnam again focuses attention on the Mobe and the never-ending search for effective tactics to end the horror of U.S. aggression in the jungles and rice-paddies of Southeast Asia. But the decision itself raises fundamental questions about the purpose and function of student government.

The Mobe has always been a source of consternation for me. While few would question my own commitment to the peace movement, I have never felt the urge to join the Mobe. Yet, when the question of funding the group came before the Senate, I spoke in favor of the motion with passion I can never muster when debating the usual mundane issues that come before the Senate.

The issue is not as clear-cut and simple as the opponents and proponents would have us believe.

The Mobe's one-issue orientation (immediate and total withdrawal) and one-tactic method (massive legal demonstrations) have been both its weakness and its strength. On the negative side, it has isolated the Mobe from supporting a variety of legitimate anti-war tactics merely because they diverge from its own strict orthodoxy. This has helped foster some degree of dissension within anti-war ranks, and has left many activists quite bitter toward the group.

On the other hand, the one-issue focus has provided the Mobe with a diversity and longevity no other group can match. It is surprising to me that Mobe meetings don't break out into fist-fights, considering the weird collection of anarchists, pacifists, barn-burners, Democrats, Trotskyites, freaks, virgins, and Republicans that comprise the group.

I see no justification for the notion that the Mobe is controlled by Trotskyites. The meetings are open to everyone. If the elected officers now hold to a particular ghastly persuasion, an open meeting can throw the rascals out!

In the midst of an anti-war movement in which groups come and go so fast that it is impossible to keep up with their changing initials, the Mobe has had remarkable longevity. While this is attributable to Old-Left values I do not share, it does give me confidence in the group's ability to maintain its program in the midst of the chaos and uncertainty of so many student groups.

But these are not the reasons why the Senate should have funded the Student Mobilization Committee. I support the funding more because of my philosophy of student government than because of any attitudes I hold about the Mobe.

Student government (and its budget) should be the expression of the will and attitudes of the student body. The budget is more than merely a collection of figures and categories, it is a statement of our priorities and values. In determining the ethical quality of the student government, we should look to the budget as a realistic measure of the commitment of that government to the values it espouses. The cliche is: "Put your money where your mouth is."

This does not mean that all students must agree with the budget decisions of the Student Senate. The finalized budget always represents a series of compromises and judgements that are the results of the conflicts and competing interests that comprise the student body. On any specific decision, at least a majority usually agree, but no one is ever satisfied.

Few doubt that the overwhelming majority of students favor the immediate end of U.S. aggression in Asia. If that is the case, I believe that this sentiment must be expressed by our budget. If not, our beliefs are hollow and hypocritical, no more valid than Nixon's contention that he is winding down the war.

The student government has a sacred obligation to make an institutional commitment on the most crucial ethical issue of our times. What sense of perspective can we have if we become concerned only with category changes for the Amateur Radio Club?

Nixon and the press are telling us that students are happy with his politics. Can we confirm this notion by ignoring Vietnam? I think not. By abstaining from the issue, we are acquiescing to Mr. Nixon and retreating into a pathetic myopia.

Since the student government must commit itself, the Mobe is the best candidate for that commitment. It sure isn't my ideal of the perfect anti-war group, but it is the only one we've got that is requesting student funds.

It has never been more essential for students to stand up and declare their convictions with firm institutional decisions, not mere idle rhetoric. That the student government, of which I am vice president, would cop-out now is a disgrace to us all.

A Plan For The Ghetto

WASHINGTON--As part of his overall plan, President Nixon has offered North Vietnam $2.5 billion to rebuild its country once the war is over. Even critics of the President consider this a most generous sum of money to be given to a nation that Mr. Nixon still refers to in the most unflattering terms.

I have a friend named Zugsmith, who works with people in the Washington ghetto, and the morning he read about the $2.5 billion offer he came to see me.

"Man, that's a lot of money to give a country that's been kicking the hell out of us," he said.

"Well, it's not as much as we gave Germany and Japan after World War II," I said.

"I've been thinking about it quite seriously, and I want to try this idea out on you. Suppose after the war is over we import some of those North Vietnam cats and bring them to Washington and put them up in the ghetto."

"I don't follow you," I said.

"Now suppose those North Vietnam cats start fighting with our cats, I mean really fighting with them, with a lot of surplus war stuff that the South Vietnamese will probably sell us under the table."

"But that would be civil war," I protested.

"Right, but keep in mind we won't be fighting against Americans. We'll be fighting against North Vietnam."

"But the North Vietnamese are Communists," I said.

"You got it, man. Now if we're fighting North Vietnamese in the ghetto, America is going to have to come to our support. Right?"

"They'd better or we'll have Communist aggression right on our own mainland."

"Okay, so America comes into the ghetto and says 'You got a Communist threat here, boys. What can we give you?' So we say 'How about tearing down all those rat-infested buildings so we can get a good crack at the North Vietnamese who are out there somewhere?"

"They would have to tear them down if that's where the Communists were hiding," I agreed.

"Now we say to the Americans, 'How about putting up some new buildings so we can win the hearts and minds of the people in the ghetto? And how about some land reform while you're at it?'"

"If it's a civil war, you have to win the hearts and minds of the people," I agreed.

"You got it, man. Nobody gives a damn about the hearts and minds of the people in the ghetto because there are no Commies there. You sprinkle five or six hundred Reds around and America has to give us everything we ask for."

"There should be a hole in your plan," I said, "but I can't find it."

"You're going to have some shooting in the ghetto but no more than you have now. Maybe some people are going to be captured by the North Vietnamese, but with POWs Nixon is going to be forced to find a solution to the problem. Of course, he'll insist on us having our own government, which is something we don't have right now. And he might even call for elections in the South supervised by the United Nations. You can't ask for better than that."

"The beauty of your plan," I said, "is that if you fight Communists in the ghetto, you'll be the good guys."

"My thinking exactly. We'd have everyone in Congress praising us to the skies. Agnew might even come and visit us and hand out medals."

"The only problem you have, as I see it," I said, "is how do you get the North Vietnamese to come to the ghetto in Washington? It isn't really a place they'd want to fight for."

"I'll admit that's had me stymied," Zugsmith said, "but then I read about all that money Nixon was handing out. I figure if he's willing to pay the North Vietnamese $2.5 billion to get out of South Vietnam, there is no telling what the President will offer them to get out of Washington, D.C."

Letters to the Editor

Concerted Efforts For The Spring

To the Editor,

Much controversey has developed since the administration's decree against a large profile concert. The general reaction seems to be one of dissatisfacation and disgust. At this time I have no statements concering the administration's stand. I do however wish to offer some alternative means of funding as well as some other questions that have yet to be resolved.

The administration last October had stated that they were in favor of a free concert much the same as those held last year. At that time the committee felt that there was no means to fund a concert except by selling tickets. To this the administration responded unfavorably this past week. Since then we have proposed several other methods of funding.

The first means of funding would be last year's remaining funds which amounted to about nine thousand dollars. Unfortunately, the Student Senate had incumbered $6,000 of the budget to purchase equipment from SES in order to begin a note taking service. There is then still $3,000 remaining from last year. Another possibility would be the funds that were taken by the Senate from Free U, this past semester. The exact amount is not yet known but it is between 5 and 8,000 dollars. The Senate however has to decide to give these funds to the Concert Committee. They will be asked to do so within the next two weeks.

The greatest overall benefit of having the Senate fund the Concert would be that it is cheaper for the student body to pay for a free concert than to buy tickets individually. In the conventional, ticketed concert we have many incidental expenses such as the costs of insurance, tickets, security, et.al. These costs aren't necessary in a free concert so the overall benefit is obvious.

Other methods of funding in addition to that already mentioned would be to ask each Area government for a contribution from their budgets for a spring concert. Debbie Hershberg, from Southwest Assembly has already stated that that body would be willing to contribute $1,500. We hope that the other areas will also agree to contributing to the concert.

Interms of future planning we are asking the Senate for a budget of $20,000 and to thereby set a prededent for future means of concert funding.

There is yet another means of funding which is to have the Athletic Department, who provides the University with other forms of entertainment, to provide a concert type of entertainment. This has yet to be formally proposed, however.

If it ends up that we have the funds for a spring concert this year we have several other problems to resolve yet.

To begin with should we run the risk of having it in the Stadium with the possibility of proving to Dr. Gage that people can contain themselves and yet not become violent. This would be at the expense of any damages to that facility.

Other questions are what groups if we have a choice do we select to perform at the spring freebe. Do we offer two groups on two days or two groups on one weekend or two groups on one day? Hopefully, there will be enough reaction from the University community as well as committee response so that these questions can be answered. I urge you all to contact your representatives in the Student Senate and area governments and to offer your opinions in these matters.

It takes more than just forty members of a concert committee. Help us give you a Spring Concert this year.

Elliot Sherman

What's Up JOE?

To The Editor:

The much hearlded JOE program has often been described as a nearly unqualified success. As a member of the Orchard Hill (Student) Security Force, I should like to present the other side of the story

During the entire previous semester I know of only two thefts from Grayson and Field dorms, one being the ripping off of two relatiyely small stereo speakers from a "probably" unlocked room. This semester, and since the inception of the JOE program, the crime rate has risen significantly. So far, over $200 worth of goods have been stolen from these dorms, including four wallets. I know of at least one case of extortion.

These events are not mere coincidence. This significant rise in the crime rate can, and has been, directly related to a few JOE kids. I myself have seen two members of the program "testing doorknobs" for unlocked doors. I know of one case of a room being robbed while one resident slept and the roommate left for only a few minutes. To say the least, the residents are being vastly imposed upon.

As far as reform and self discipline goes, the have been put into one of the worst possible environments. Drugs are easily available; the easy going campus is a temptation for crime. The college campus is not the answer to the problems of junior high and early high school students.

The events mentioned above have been dealt with with extreme tact and leniency due to the sensitivity and political aspects of the program. I ask that, in the future, the Collegian present a more balanced (and accurate) picture of the program.

—A Concerned Resident of Orchard Hill

More-On Money

To the Editor,

In many of the meetings which were held in discussion of the Spring Concert to be held in the stadium, the Concert' Committee was of the opinion that the Administration would not be opposed to a free concert-nay, they would be delighted to see a free concert, since this would eliminate many of the disadvantages posed by a charge concert.

The concert Committee (and the student, I'm sure) would be delighted to see a good quality free concert this spring. However, the basic assumption that the Committee held was that there was no money to be had for a decent show. Careful consideration of the matter shows this would not be the case.

The student is currently paying for the stadium through his athletic fee. Seeing as how the students are entitled to the use of their own money and knowing that the administration has only the best interests of the students at heart, we ask that the administration obtain $10,000 from the Athletic Council in order to defray the cost of a Free Concert. It is the students' money.

Letters To The Editor

As in previous years the MDC will continue to print letters to the editor. The only requirements are that they be typed at sixty spaces, double-spaced and absolutely no longer than two pages in length. All letters must be signed and the author's address and telephone numbers must be included. No letter will be published without this information. Also, no letters will be printed without the name of the author. Please note this change in policy.

All letters are subject to editing either for content or space according to the judgment of the editors. Also, due to space limitations, we do not guarantee that all letters will be printed.

Thoughts While

Weaving in, and restless wandering pursues me all throughout my thinking.
Torches dimly lighting both past and present, drawing me both from and to in both my wake and sleeping.
I read last time the lighted words that flickered from your eyes, but every sound that dropped from you,
and every thought while hearing them,
was shadowed deep 'fore leaving off my thoughts 'fore they were through.
I'd like, if I may now request, to ask you all to understand that all the thoughts while writing here are just the thoughts I say.
The rest is here in anguished code that even I cannot array.
I've trouble resting anymore, knowing that the thoughts while everyone misunderstands will have no just nor worthful end... except to set me straight within the maze of torchlights forested within the gently rushing shadows... outside the flowing quips of others' minds
where thoughts of Nothingness are all one finds.
Tell me, what were your thoughts while?

Tower Of Cubic Support

To the Editor

The Campus Center evolved out of a simple addition to the Student Union. Originally the addition was to simply to supply more room for students. Continuing Education in the early 60's appeared to be a looming monster. It was decided to accomodate it in the Student Union addition. The Campus Center was finally conceived in 1965 in a feasibility study. The plans included a hotel/conference facility with parking to be worried about later. The addition was to be a modest $7.7 million which from the feasibility report would be an expansion of student activity functions (such as Winter Carni); an increase in variety of restaurants and cafeterias; more conference rooms for student RSO groups, faculty and Continuing Education Program; efficiency apartments for visiting lecturers and Administrative Centers for Continuing Education. In 1965 it was already clear from these plans that the Campus Center was not intended for student use. It was to serve principally as a conference center.

As originally proposed the Campus Center was a $7.7 million project, but as ground was broken it had expanded to $10 million with a $1 million garage facility. When completed in 1970 eighteen months later, the tower cost had risen to $13.5 million and the garage to $6 million for a total coast of $19.5 million. Today, being still unbonded, the cost is presently estimated to be around $22 million, or about 300% of the original estimate. A top administrator when questioned about the 500% cost increase of the garage facility indicated he was glad he didn't have anything to do with the garage planning. He also said and was quoted in the MDC that the students would not be taxed to cover the $173,000/year operating deficit of the garage.

How well has the Campus Center done in fulfilling its purpose? Not very well in any of the following areas. Considering the building cost $55/sq.foot to build, and is costing $5.50 sq. foot to maintain the food service is not producing its share, currently less than two dollars per square foot. This could substantially be improved by lifting the restrictrestrictions for the purchase of alcholic beverages. The motel is equally unproductive profiting two dollars per square foot.

The only sound revenue areas are the bookstore and the student tax each yeilding $11 per square foot. In light of poor profits of the food service and hotel, more revenue must be provided. Several possibilities exist as follows: 1) a faculty tax, 2) dual price system, 3) state support, 4) federal support and 5) increased student tax.

I have had a bill passed in the student senate (72-sII3) which supports a dual price system study. The system would work similar to the Havard Coop. Students who support the CC through the (obligatory) tax would receive a discount on items and services at the checkout with verification of the student status. Non students would not recieve a discount. This revenue would act as a tax to pay for the CC building cost. I believe this would be preferred above a lump faculty tax because as revealed in a west coast tax study people prefer to pay tax a bit at a time, not in one big lump. Attorney Howland when questioned about a faculty tax stated there are no legal bars from such a tax.

Reviewing the Campus Center it is easy to see that it is not intended for student use. The purple carpets, the $3900 sofas, the $18,000 marble conference table currently being used in the Hatch Kitchen for making pizzas are all part of a fallen dream. The students are being taxed dearly for this marble pizza board. Last year the tax was $48 dollars, this year it is $60, and next year it is projected to be $75.

In view of this information, can you justify the CC tax.

Counseling Service Available To Vets

By DARIA SAWCHAK

Beginning today, a counseling service will be available to veterans on campus who want to talk about their experiences and difficulties in adjusting to university life. The service is presently sponsored by CASIAC and is located in East Machmer 22. Counseling will be available with John McEleney on Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 10:30 to 12 noon, and with Bill Staton from 3:30 to 5 on Monday and Friday, 1:00 to 5 or 6 on Tuesday.

Veterans are encouraged to drop in to discuss any problems encountered as a veteran, including specific financial, academic and housing problems as well as more complex psychological problems stemming from the experience of war. The counselors are veterans themselves. It is hoped that common experiences and problems of counselor and counselee will insure greater rapport between the two and greater insight into their problems.

"When a vet returns to civilian life, he has problems relating to those who haven't experienced the same situations as he. He feels that those people can't understand his problems with adjustment--He senses a very pronounced barrier between his world and theirs," explained Staton. "With another vet to talk to, both are operating on common ground. Trust is more immediate and understanding of the situation is more complete, then the vet can better cope with the problems at hand."

The present service is only the beginning of a program designed for veterans. At the moment Staton and a group of counselors and advisors are drawing up a questionnaire to be distributed to the 1,700 veterans on campus by the beginning of next month. Included are questions concerning individual need for the program, probable use of the program and aspects of psychological and social adjustment. The results will be analyzed and the extended program will be devised to fit the needs of all types of veterans.

The need for a counseling service for veterans was recognized last fall. Dean Sulzner of CASIAC called on Staton, a veteran active in student affairs and in Vietnam Veterans Against the War, and expressed concern for the problem of discontented vets in the College of Arts and Sciences. It was found that the Veteran's Administration Office on campus offered information but little individual counseling. After Staton talked to Jeff Hershe in the Mental Health branch of the Infirmary and to Dr. Gage, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, it was decided that veterans would be best served by a counseling service run by vets for vets. The needed funds were offered temporarily by CASIAC, though the group expects to become independent of CASIAC as soon as it is better established.

Staton is student co-ordinator of the program. The advisory consultants included Hershe and Tom Wolfe from Mental Health, Howard Gadlin, and Don Tepper.

Human Sexuality At Smith Tonight

By DARIA SAWCHAK

A series of lectures and discussions dealing with "Topics in Human Sexuality" will begin tonight at Smith College with "Intimacy, Sex and Marriage", featuring guest speaker Richard A. Dannenfelser, associate chaplain at Brown University. The lectures will be held on consecutive Monday nights through April 17, and will be followed by student-run group discussions, open to all those attending the lectures.

Upcoming topics in the series include "Anatomy and Contraception" on February 15; "Pregnancy and Birth" on February 21; "the Woman's Role" on February 28; "Abortion", a panel discussion, on March 6; "Male-Female Response" on March 13; "Homosexuality" on April 10; and "Love" on April 17.

Smith has sponsored the series for the past five years. New topics this year include "the Woman's Role", to be presented by the Valley Woman's Center, and "Homosexuality" with speakers from the UMass Homophile League.

The lectures will be held at 7:30 in Sage Hall on the Smith campus. Admission is 50 cents for each individual lecture, or $2.50 for the series of eight. Subscriptions will be available at the door tonight.

Shooting Wastes Into The Sun

WASHINGTON (AP)-The chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission has suggested solving the difficult problem of getting rid of radioactive wastes by loading them in spaceships and shooting them into the sun.

Dr. J.R. Schlesinger said his agency is encouraging the National Aeronautics and Space Administration to examine the cost of such a disposal method for the radioactive waste products from atomic power plants.

Such a method is 10 years away, Schlesinger said, adding that it also would depend on development of a space shuttle vehicle, which President Nixon approved Jan. 5. Congress is being asked to give the program more money.

Schlesinger gave his views in a copyright interview in the magazine U.S. News & World Report released Sunday.

Handling waste materials from power plants is difficult because of the products' long-lived radioactivity, Schlesinger said. He said such wastes are now being stored underground in metal tanks.

"We want to do better than that in the United States," he said. "We hope to remove these wastes permanently from the environment of man, and that means for tens of thousands of years, because, for example, some traces of plutonium-which has a half-life of 24,000 years-remain in the waste."

Action Lab Needs Tutors

Action Lab has about twenty remaining openings for students interested in working with inmates in the Hampshire County Jail. People with various talents and interests are needed for tutoring and rehabilitation work.

There are about 120 inmates in the jail, the majority of whom are serving sentences for drug-related crimes. The average age of the inmates is twenty. Tutoring will take place weekly.

Full course credit may be available for Action Lab tutors. There will be a recruitment meeting tonight at 8:00 in Room 917 of the Campus Center. Anyone who wishes to participate in the program in any way may attend.

Jean Shepherd Tonight

Jean Shepherd

Jean Shepherd, showman, writer and radio and television personality, will speak here tonight, sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program.

"Jean Shepherd Tonight" will be at 8:00 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. A reception will follow in Room 1102 of the Campus Center. The public is invited without charge.

Shepherd's versatility is evident in the numerous professions at which he has tried his talents. He has acted on Broadway and in Hollywood, hosted the Jean Shepherd's American television show, and is heard each night at 11 on WFCR, the Five-College FM radio station.

A comedian and satirist, he has performed in campus tours across the nation, and published two books. Shepherd has also conducted university seminars and taught a graduate course on communications at New York University. His magazine articles have appeared in Playboy, Mademoiselle, and Car and Driver.

Food Service

File Your Complaints Here

(Editor's Note: This is the first article of a regular column concerning the Food Service Department. It is written by two of the students working in the Marketing Division.)

By BETSY PEET AND JON SNOW

University Food Services has often attempted to gain student involvement in their planning process and to help alleviate student hassles with the food service. The Marketing Division is now trying to create permanent avenues of communications which, hopefully, will produce results beneficial to persons using their facilities. The Division was initiated early this school year under the leadership of a recent UMass graduate, Miss Marie Cappadona. It is primarily staffed with students who contribute their talents as artists, promotional coordinators, and assistants to the manager. Utilizing Marketing research methods such as comment cards and surveys, the group analyzes the needs and desires of the student body and projects like Munchys are initiated.

There are many channels through which a student may contribute meaningfully to planning Food Services, either indirectly through a representative of the Food Services Committee or directly to the Dining Commons Manager or the authors of this column. This column can be important to both Food Services and students if it is read and treated seriously as a means of communication.

Generally, this column will investigate various aspects of the Food Service Department and offer a clearer understanding of what and why things happen as they do. If you have particular Food Service related problems which are not being solved through direct channels, address your problem to this column. Problems raised by the students will not be ignored and questions addressed to the authors will be answered by referring to the source.

The most persistent questions that are important to users of Food Service facilities will be answered in this column or will be the subject of full-length reports. Articles may also result from suggestions in the comment cards. These comment cards are found in all the dining commons and the Whitmore, Hampden, and Worcester Snack Bars.

The Marketing Division of University Food Services is staffed to effectively react to any of these suggestions when they receive them. There is no need to be frustrated if you can communicate your needs and desires to people who will listen and do as much as possible to help. Look for future articles and comments in this column and don't hesitate to address questions to us c/o Marketing Division, University Food Services, Worcester Commons.

Astronomy Lectures

UMass department of physics and astronomy has announced Five-College Astronomy Colloquium speakers for February.

The first is Dr. William Watson of Cornell University, speaking on "Formation of Interstellar Molecules on Dust Grains," Wednesday, Feb. 9.

Dr. Michael Hauser of Princeton University will speak at the second colloquium on "Galaxy Distributions in the Zwicky Catalog," Tuesday, Feb. 15.

The third and final colloquium will feature Dr. Paul R. Higbie of the University of New Hampshire on "Gamma Ray Astronomy," Thursday, Feb. 17.

All three will be at 4:30 p.m. in Hasbrouck 124. Tea will be served in Hasbrouck 22 one-half-hour before each colloquium.

Study Abroad Scholarship Available To Mass. Girl

Scholarships specifically designated for study abroad are rare. One of the few available is the scholarship offered annually by the Massachusetts State Federation of Women's Clubs division of international affairs and international scholarships. The Federation offers an award of $1,000 to a girl whose legal residence is Massachusetts and who is a citizen of the United States.

This scholarship is to be used for a year's study in a foreign college or university at either the graduate or undergraduate level. Application forms are available at the Office of International Programs, 239 Whitmore. Students interested in applying must send in the application together with a transcript of grades and an estimate of the cost of the year abroad. A personal interview is required of all candidates. These will be scheduled between March 15 and April 25, and are held in Boston.

"Let us begin by committing ourselves to the truth." –RICHARD M. NIXON

THE depth of that commitment is brilliantly explored by Congressman Paul N. McCloskey, Jr., who is challenging Richard Nixon for the Republican presidential nomination.
Among the subjects covered – and uncovered –

The SST: A classic case of Presidential deceit and suppression of reports in "yet another example of that thinly veiled arrogance with which the executive branch has come to treat the congressional fact-finding process."

Racial Discrimination: Nixon's record on voting rights, school desegregation and housing integration has, more than any other part of his policy except Vietnam, been the cause of loss of faith in our political system.

The Supreme Court: Presidential pressures to bring Senators into line to confirm Supreme Court nominees, along with Nixon's curious view of the meaning of "advise and consent," have caused the greatest "politicization" of the Court in our time.

Vietnam: The Nixon administration's calculated avoidance of the guidelines laid down by Congress which would have had us out of Vietnam by June 30, 1971.

And plenty more

UMass Student Helping To Get Other Chicanos Into College

There is a special pain in being a stranger in your native land and Donaciano Atencio knows it well.

There was nothing in his childhood to suggest that today, at 30, he would be a graduate student in the School of Business at UMass.

Donaciano hopes to become a consultant to small businesses particularly those which will help minority development.

He is the son of an illiterate sheep herder. His mother died when he was two, and an aunt brought him up along with his two sisters.

Colorado is a beautiful state, people say, and Donaciano smiles. He knows the Mexican flats in Durango, he knows what it is to grow up in an apartment over a cantina, a bar, to speak a mixture of English and Spanish, never learning either language well, and to be looked down on by the Anglos, the Gringos, the white majority.

There are 10 million Spanish-speaking people in the United States.

Donaciano says there are 3000 to 4000 Spanish speaking persons living in Holyoke and as many as 11,000 in Springfield. They are mainly Puerto Rican but like Donaciano's own, the Chicanos of the southwest, they are, he says, people without power.

He worked for a while in a San Francisco brokerage house. There were a few Spanish-speaking people, mostly janitors, secretaries. But those making the decision were all "Anglos". He decided that big business runs the country and that minority groups must reach the decision-making level of business to control their own destiny.

When he came to UMass, he decided to try to help his people. After consultations with Prof. Eugenio Suarez-Galban, Holyoke community leader and Mt. Holyoke College faculty member, they agreed to try to develop leadership by getting Spanish-speaking people into college.

UMass as a state university was the logical choice. It had only a handful of Spanish-speaking students, but they were not representative of the community.

The students who came directly from Puerto Rico or from one of the Latin American countries were upper of middle class and wealth. "Most of us," said Donaciano, "come from a common background."

A non-profit corporation was formed in 1970 to help people-young and old-from the Spanish-speaking community enrolled at UMass. It is called "Ahora-the Spanish word for "now."

According to Donaciano, you don't have to carry signs and make noise to change a person's life. Helping him to get into school can do it.

But it isn't an easy task.

Financing is a formidable problem. Ahora became an adjunct to the committee for Collegiate Education for Black Students.

A $4000 grant from the Catholic Human Development Program and a fund-raising drive at Mt. Holyoke helped get Ahora started.

But expenses are high. UMass students expect to get some help from their families. The families of the Ahora students however, cannot offer any help. Jobs are needed.

$15 Million Damaged In Wakefield Fire

WAKEFIELD, Mass. (AP)-Flames fanned by 50-mile-an-hour winds destroyed six buildings of an industrial park Saturday night and early Sunday, causing damage estimated at $15 million and dealing a blow to the town's economic fortunes.

The president of the Chamber of Commerce, Ruth A. Hicks, said an estimated 1,000 persons would be left jobless, at least temporarily, by the idleness that will result at industries occupying the buildings.

Officials of the town of about 25,000 earlier had estimated that as many as 2,000 would be without jobs.

The Massachusetts Department of Commerce and Development said six-member task force would begin interviews Monday morning in an attempt to find work for the jobless.

Officials of the town of about 25,000 noted that some 2,000 persons would be left jobless, at least temporarily, by the idleness that will result at industries occupying the buildings.

An investigation was ordered into the cause of the fire, which was described as the latest in a series of blazes of undetermined cause downtown.

No injuries were reported as firemen battled the blaze throughout the evening and into early morning, although they were endangered by tumbling walls and roof eave-ins.

Winds gusting to 50 miles an hour drove the fire from one building to another.

With the temperature near zero, firemen were hampered by icing on hoses and their pumping equipment.

Fire officials said the blaze apparently broke out in the building housing the Continental Chemical and Coating Co. It mushroomed when drums of solvent exploded, blowing out walls and allowing the wind to blow flames at nearby structures.

Among the businesses burned out was Transitron Corp., which officials said had about $4 million of computer equipment in the building, and the Cardio-Vascular Instrument Co., which made equipment used in heart and other surgery.

UMass Junior Is Candidate

George M. McCullough, a junior at UMass, majoring in urban and regional planning and town management, announced today that he is a candidate for the Planning Board in the town of Hadley.

Mr. McCullough, in his announcement, stated that Hadley needs competent and responsible people to plan for the town's future development, and he feels that he can meet this need. "The Planning Board," he said, "should create a new Hadley free of unnecessary commercialization and unplanned and uncoordinated growth and development. The town government has an obligation to its citizens to provide a balanced community for its people."

UMass junior
George M. McCullough

He emphasized that the people of Hadley have a major decision to make in the very near future; and the town lacks an understandable and comprehensive "master plan" to assist them. Mr. McCullough said that, although a master plan or any other single approach is not a panacea for all of the town's growing problems, it at least would be a start. But the master plan would have to be objective and contain within its structure and content a reflection of the goals and desires of the people of Hadley.

He described the need for a comprehensive study, including a detailed geologic survey, in order that a uniform building code may be developed which is best suited for the uses of the land the needs and safety of the townspeople.

The UMass junior promised that he would do his utmost to ensure that the people of Hadley receive a well-coordinated, environmentally-suited, and balanced plan for the town's development. He emphasized that, above all, any plan must be one that the taxpayers desire, not one created by consultants and opportunistic developers.

Mr. McCullough is a graduate of Hopkins Academy, where he was prominent as a member of the debating team.

Art Gallery Features Islamic Design Of 1500's

During February, the UMass Art Gallery will present an exhibition entitled "Artists, Artisans, and Islamic Design-the Court Art of Islam in the Sixteenth Century."

Covering a wide range of media including miniature painting, textiles, pottery and rugs, the exhibition includes loans from several prominent public and private Massachusetts collections. It also features many internationally known works.

As a complement to these objects, the gallery will also display a collection of color photographs of Islamic buildings of the Near East, entitled "Design and Color in Ilsamic Architecture," an exhibition circulated by the Traveling Exhibition Service of the Smithsonian Institution.

The two exhibitions will be on view until Thursday, Feb. 24, in the UMass Art Gallery in Herter Hall.

Feminist, 85, To Begin Colloquium On Women

"Women in the Economy and Political System", a two-credit colloquium is being offered at Orchard Hill this semester, 7:00-9:00 P.M., Tuesdays. There will be at least fourteen sessions, coordinated by Zoe Best. A collective of speakers will make presentations and participate in discussion. It is hoped that besides UMass students, women of any occupation at the university or in the community will take part.

Florence Luscomb, 85 year old Feminist, will make a slide presentation of her 1962 trip to China at 3:00 P.M. in Emily Dickenson Main Lounge at Orchard Hill. Then at the first session of the course Ms. Luscomb will speak at 7:00 in Emily Dickenson Main Lounge on "Women from Serf to Citizen: 125 Years of American History".

Other session topics will be: Women in the Economy, Labor Movement, and the University; the Nature and Function of Their Work; Stratification, Alienation. Racist and Sexist Discrimination in the University; women in the Prison System; Health Care and Welfare Rights; Black Women and Their Role Toward a New Society; Hispanic Women' Women in the Anti-War Movement, Politics and Revolution. Films relevant to these topics will also be shown.

Final Exam Schedule Changed

The academic calendar for 1971-72, as adopted by the Faculty Senate April 16, 1970, and affirmed May 13, 1971, provides for a final examination period for the four-year undergraduate courses from Tuesday, May 16, though Thursday, May 25, 1972.

Because of changing final examination patterns, it will not be necessary to use all of the examination periods provided by this calendar.

Academic departments and other concerned personnel are hereby advised that the official examination schedule published by the Schedule Office will not involve any Wednesday, May 24. No commitment can be made at this time but it is possible that a workable schedule will be developed which will end with the 4:00-6:00 p.m. period on Tuesday, May 23.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

☆ By SYDNEY OMARR ☆

My mail, which comes from the world over, tells the same story. Life and love go together and one without the other is inconceivable. Members of each zodiacal sign are concerned, in the following order, with love, money and health. It is loving and being loved which occupies more persons most of the time. And it is the question of love which creates an abundance of misery and happiness. Capricorn natives, beginning now, are due for greater fulfillment in this vital area.

ARIES (March 20-April 19): Money and friends make poor mixture at this time. You finally get inkling of where you want to go. You won't have to go alone. However, you should set own policy and refuse to be diverted. You will comprehend.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Where there was inactivity there now is action. You may appear to be at cross purposes with professional superior. But this boomerangs in your favor. Adhere to principles. Contract, agreement may be delivered.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Work goals come closer. You are reunited with one who shares and respects your interests. Combine vision with practicality. Prepare and build. Make important contacts. Improve public relations.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Area that had been unfortunate for you may now do an about-face. Opponents are transformed into allies. Increase knowledge. Be a big person in way which sets example for others. Change is beneficial.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Situation is brighter than you might imagine. Study Cancer message. Be ready for change, progress. Move with times. Family member suggests adjustment. Consider it. Be determined, but avoid obstinacy.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Don't overlook details. Apparent minor matters need attention. Those who depend on you make extra demands. Check health of pets. Creative endeavor is likely to succeed. Display greater self confidence.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Overcome tendency to be impatient. You are on brink of profitable move, discovery. But premature action could result in loss, delay. Avoid extravagance. Be a comparison shopper. Chose quality.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You will handle more responsibility. Rewards also will be greater. In personal area, special relationship is settled one way or another. It is better to finish than to start, find ways of getting message across.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Money picture brightens. But don't attempt too much, too soon. Opportunities are present. Strike hard and sure and do so in original manner. Create your own traditions. Don't be in awe of one who does much talking.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Emotional life improves. You have more mature stance. One who appeared in different becomes warm. Realize your own worth. Refuse to give up something for nothing. Mere words will not suffice. Get proof.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Prospects are brighter and so are you. You are more attractive, especially to opposite sex. Some comment that you seem changed. Enjoy yourself. Accept social invitations. Break from routine.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Income from occupational efforts increase. Your views are vindicated, personally and professionally. But avoid any tendency to be smug. Key now is to be gracious, receptive. You're going places.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are a spiritual person, always concerned with reasons, motives and extenuating circumstances. You refuse to cast first stone and you seldom, if ever, condemn. New starts this year lead to success, fulfillment, with July indicated as an outstanding month.

Hulecki, Parmenter Chosen In Draft

By MARK VOGLER

Last Wednesday 18-year-old men on campus cursed vehemently at the low numbers they received in the Selective Service's draft lottery. It was ironic at the same time that two UMass athletes expressed mild disapproval over their high selections in the annual National Football League draft which terminated its final day of activity at the site of Shafer Stadium in Foxboro.

Receiver John Hulecki and defensive tackle Skip Parmenter were 15th round draft choices of the Pittsburg Steelers and Denver Broncos respectively. The two had hoped to go sooner, but were nevertheless content to acquire contacts from the pros regardless how late.

Hulecki was contacted at his off-campus apartment in Puffton Village which he recently moved into from Kappa Sigma fraternity house. He was furnishing his new home when his roommate, Walter O'Malley, approached him, offered a congratulating handshake, and informed him of the good news that he had just been drafted by Pittsburg.

"I was really excited," recalled Hulecki over his initial reaction. "Not every football player in the country gets a chance to be drafted by the NFL. I figured I'd get picked up a little earlier. In fact, I was a bit disappointed when I remembered the calls I had received from interested clubs just a few days before. I felt as though I should have gone a few rounds earlier.

"But it doesn't make that much difference to me now. What I can do at camp means more to me than how high or low I was selected in the draft."

Moments after Pittsburg notified Hulecki, the phone rang in the house of Kappa Sigma to the delight of Skip Parmenter. It was a call from the Denver Broncos organization and they had just drafted him. For Parmenter it meant something special since he had played just two years of collegiate football after having attended Worcester Quinsigamond Junior College which didn't house a team.

"This has got to be the high point of my career," commented an elated Parmenter. "It's like something that as a football player you always wish would happen. It was something I strived hard for. And because there's a lot of hard work behind it, I consider it a great personal achievement. I welcome the challenge to play professional football."

It's not every day that the brothers of Kappa Sigma have a potential pro ballplayer in their unit. And now they have two. So with eagerness to share the excitement, the frat boys got together that evening and held a dinner in Hulecki's and Parmenter's honor. They topped it off with a post-meal celebration.

Hulecki and Parmenter have been working out together since the football season ended and will continue to do so until April when each one reports to his respective rookie camp. Their immediate plans are to negotiate contracts with their squads this month.

An interesting fact about the draft is that both Hulecki and Parmenter were selected at positions which they have never played. Hulecki was drafted as a linebacker and Parmenter was selected as a center. How well the players are able to adjust to their new assignments will be an important determinant of their fortunes.

How do the players feel their chances are of making the team? Hulecki: "Playing professional football is something I always wanted to do. I always idolized Milt Moran because he was from my home town. The first part of my dreams have come true so far and the second part lies ahead--and that's making the team. It's a goal I set for myself during my senior year in high school.

"I think if I really work hard and maintain a good mental attitude, I'm confident of making the team. But I do realize that it's going to be a long hard and grinding road."

Parmenter: "John and I have worked out consistently every week. We've gone five days on the average, sometimes even six or seven days. Being drafted gives us a little more incentive and we are going to put more emphasis on it now than before. After rookie cam in April we're really gonna push.

"As far as my chances stack up, I really can't say. I feel as though I have a lot of work cut out for myself depending upon the personnel. I feel everybody goes to that rookie camp for the same purpose, to prove himself worthy enough to play."

Head coach Dick MacPherson is of the strong conviction that his former players should have been drafted somewhere between rounds 10 and seven.

As he put it: "I was greatly surprised by the fact that John and Skip went so high in the draft. I expected them to go in a much lower round. I'm a little disappointed over this, but I'm only second guessing the people who are scouting. Anyway, they got their chance to try out and that's all that matters.

"As far as my own personal projection goes, it's irrelevant what I think. It's the evaluations of the teams who drafted them that count. Frankly, if they had gone in a lower round, I'd be much more confident of their chances. Yet, by the same token, scouts wouldn't have recommended these young men for draft selection if they thought otherwise.

"Both have size, strength, speed, and endurance. And in my opinion, that's what football is all about. Whoever takes them will have to be patient for them to learn the individual techniques of their new positions."

Kidd's Kids Kill Williams

By TOM PLANT

After the second period of the J.V. hockey game between UMass and Williams on Saturday afternoon, which the Redmen won 8-4, a distinguished-looking man sat down beside me and said, "What happened? When I left after the first period we were ahead by 1-0." "Yes," I said, "but now we're ahead 5-4." He glanced at the scoreboard and realized that the "we" that he was referring to was not the same one that I was refering to. "Oh, you're from UMass?" he asked. I nodded affirmatively, and a few minutes later he left to sit elsewhere.

The man, whom I soon discovered to be John Sawyer, President of Williams College, apparently had missed an exciting period of hockey. He seemed as surprised about the chnge in the score as I was in learning his identity.

The J.V. Redmen spent much of the first period killing off penalties, and therefore didn't get much of an offense started. They did manage to stop Williams' power play though, with some particularly fine goaltending from John "Binky" Binkoski, who was starting in the nets for the first time this season. At 18:15 of the period Williams finally had someone in the right place at the right time, and they took a 1-0 lead.

With only 1:32 gone in the second period Williams scored their second goal, and one began to wonder what happened to the UMass J.V.'s who romped over Williams earlier in the season by a score of 10-6. But at 8:38 of the period Jay Connors scored a nifty goal to make it 2-1, and started the fireworks. At 11:46, eight seconds into a power play, Mike Ellis fired a perfect slap-shot from the left point into the upper left corner of the net that made the score 2-2. Two minutes and twenty-six seconds later Dave Keogh took a pass from Steve Dee from behind the net, and he muscled it in to put UMass in front 3-2. Williams found a weak spot in the Redmen defense and came right back to tie the game. This back-and-forth action continued as Kevin Connors gathered in a pass from his defensive zone and took the puck in for another UMass score. Once again Williams came back to tie it, and once again the Redmen regained the lead on Jay Connors' second goal of the game with only :28 left in the period. That made the score 5-4 and Williams didn't come back again.

Brian Mulcahy, Steve Dee, and Ted Flynn each scored a goal for the Redmen in the third period, as UMass completely dominated the action. Williams did come close to narrowing the lead when at 6:34 of the period they apparently had scored a power-play goal. The referee nullified the goal however, saying a Williams player was in the crease. The verbal response by the accused player was not very pleasing to the referee's ear, and the player was given a ten-minute misconduct penalty. More excitement came with only a couple of minutes remaining when a minor brawl broke out around the Williams net involving six or seven players releasing their frustrations on each other. Nevertheless, the final score was still UMass 8, Williams 4. Binkoski had twenty saves in the game, most of them very difficult ones.

As the meager crowd was leaving, the distinguished-looking man pointed a finger at me, smiled, and said, "You deserved it!" And they certainly did.

The next game for the J.V.'s, now 3-4-1, will be tomorrow at Mt. Harmon.

Frosh Hoopsters Win Ninth

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

The UMass Freshmen basketball team began its longest road trip of the season, and whipped the Dartmouth little Indians, 87-69, Saturday night.

After a slow start, with the little Redmen trailing by as much as seven points, the frosh came back to tie at 39-39 at halftime.

Whatever Coach Gaudette said at the intermission should be printed in in the next issue of "Great Speeches", since his team came back to completely dominate the last half. Coach Gaudette was lavish in his praise of the team effort. "Gillams was tremendous off the boards in the second half," and the defense as a whole, "shut off the open man and didn't let them get the second shot." The Dartmouth frosh were held to just 30 points in the second half.

Tom Gillams led the second half spurt by amassing an incredible 22 rebounds, most of them in the final half (Shades of Julius). Also tough off the boards were John Murphy with 12 and Bill Endicott with 9. Dartmouth was outrebounded drastically, 51-33.

The scoring was balanced as Endicott took game honors with 24 points, followed by Murphy with 22, Gillams, 16, and Mike Flanagan, 13.

Passing has to be the forte of this team as the smaller men were continually moving the ball towards the basket and the big men. Endicott led the team in assists with 8, followed closely by Flanagan's 7 and Jim Burke's 5.

After defeating Dartmouth handily, the frosh are still looking for a team that can keep up with them for forty minutes. The closest challenger has been Dartmouth, but the little Indians were steamrolled twice, 105-94 and 87-69. The next challenger will be Boston College Tuesday night in Boston, but Coach Gaudette's warriors have been unstoppable. The skill and teamwork of the little Redmen lead many to think of the frosh team with Julius Erving, but instead of stopping to compare, Coach Gaudette continues to look ahead and prepare these men for next year's varsity. Metawampee, beware, there is more wampum warriors in the teepee.

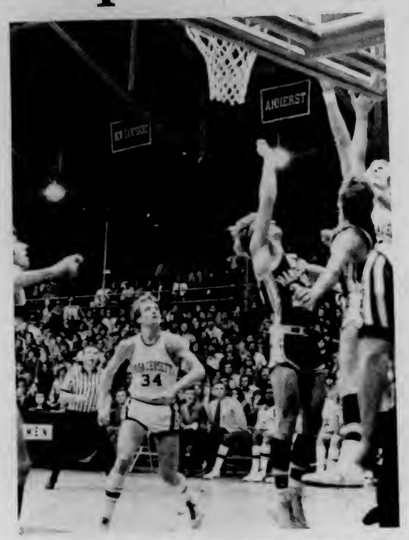
Orange Squeeze By UMass

By EARLE BARROLL

The ECAC made a good selection for its basketball game of the week. UMass and Syracuse went at it pretty good for the entire 40 minutes on Saturday, but the Orangemen had a little too much in Greg Kohls and Mike Lee and came out on top, 90-85, before an Eastern television audience.

Both Kohls, the number five scorer in the country, and Lee had identical scoring halves of 17 points, but each had their flings in different 20 minute segments and this was enough to offset a balanced UMass attack that featured five men in double figures, lead by Rick Vogeley with 17 points, Al Skinner with 16 and John Betancourt with 14.



Syracuse jumped on top quickly and for a moment appeared headed for an easy afternoon, but the Redmen came charging back into a fast paced first half and closed once to within one at 13-12 and another time to a tie at 25 before Kohls hit three long-range jumpers, and his backcourt partner Dave Duval hit another, unanswered by UMass, and this broke it open. The Orange led at the half 46-41.

With three minutes to go in this first stanza Betancourt picked up his fourth foul. This was perhaps the big turning point in the game for UMass as up until then Betancourt had hit on six of seven from the field.

"It definitely was," echoed Leaman, "he was hot from the field, but we had to take him out when he picked up his fourth and by the time he came back in the second half he had cooled off."

While Kohls was a picture of consistency in the first half, Lee was frustratingly his equal in the second half hitting on a fine array of jumpers, drives, bombs, and the like.

Kohls was somewhat stymied for a good part of the half by the successful return of captain Mike Pagliara ...his injured finger was in a rubber cast. However, Lee had more than adequate support from Duval, Wadach and Dooms to open up a big Syracuse spread of 14, 71-57, before the Redmen came climbing back with what turned out to be a semi-surge in their final stretch drive.

Behind Vogeley's shooting, McLaughlin's board work and Skinner's all-around game, UMass put a scare in Syracuse and ripped off a final seven minutes that came within a few turnovers of coming all the way back.

The Redmen were forced into a half court press as the clock became their biggest enemy.

Leaman explained, "We couldn't go with the full court press as Syracuse is a fast ball club and with Austin and Coffin on the bench fouled out we just didn't have the guys to go with the full court, so we went half court.

As for the game itself, Leaman said, "I thought we could have beaten Syracuse. We're in the type of competition now where we have to be prepared to lose at times but we're greedy, we like to win and sooner or later we have to start beating teams like Syracuse, Providence and Harvard.

"I was happy with the performances of Betancourt, McLaughlin, Vogeley and Skinner. The team played tough, they were good on defense and worked hard on offense. We just don't have the guy who can stop the other team's rally like we had with Julius (Erving) last year."

The individuals Leaman spoke of were indeed outstanding, especially Vogeley who played his best game of the year.

Next stop for the Redmen is this Wednesday night at Chestnut Hills. Does this ring a bell? It should. Boston College will be in waiting for the Redmen in one of the BIG rivalries in New England.

UMass Has No Hockey Rink--How Absurd!

By BILL BALLOU

There is an absurd problem on campus.

It seems that a university of 20,000 people, located in the ice hockey hotbed of the United States, located in an area that sees winter for about five months out of 12, and located in a prime area for winter sports of all kinds, has for its only skating facility a polluted pond that depends on the whims of nature to make its ice surface.

Daily Collegian SPORTS

An absurd problem? You don't skate and couldn't tell a hockey puck from a bowling ball so why should you want a rink? The reasons are many and varied.

David Bischoff, Dean of the School of Physical Education, prefers to say that the university needs more than a hockey rink, it needs an "ice facility". An ice facility that would indeed be the home of the hockey team, but more than that, a vital part of the already comprehensive intramural program, a lab for some totally new courses in the Phys. Ed. department, and an opportunity for ice time for people who normally would be paying high fees at ridiculous times in a private arena.

A rink is one of those rare buildings that can be used 24 hours a day and for 11 months of the year. There can be some kind of activity going on in it around the clock. In private arenas and some school rinks, many different things have been done to fill the demand for ice time. All of them involve putting people on the ice and in the building.

The first and most obvious use for a rink would be to house the varsity and JV hockey programs. These programs are currently ensconced in Amherst's Orr Rink, but that building is too small for the crowds that want to watch Redmen hockey and too inaccessible for the amount of practice time the two squads need. A more spacious facility would service the fans who can't get in to Orr, and open the doors to a considerably expanded hockey program that might bring such powerhouses as Harvard, Cornell, and BU to UMass.

The Phys. Ed. department would be able to put a skating facility to good use. It would be able to expand its skills program to include all the people that were left out of Russ Kidd's skills course for hockey over at Orr Rink. That course was swamped in people, but very limited in capacity. All kinds of skating course for people not interested in hockey are possible also. There are plenty of figure skating clubs around the state indicating the interest in that phase of ice sport.

The already extensive UMass intra-mural program could be expanded to include hockey. Non-varsity hockey is already played on an extensive basis by dorm and frat teams who are forced to travel to Greenfield in the middle of the night to get their ice time. Intramural hockey would certainly rank as one of the more heavily played sports in the entire program.

The ice facility would, of course, have plenty of time available during the week and on weekends for simple recreation skating. If you've ever waited for good ice to form on the campus pond and after one day of skating found two feet of snow on the surface, then you know how frustrating it can be skating on natural ice. And a rink would eliminate changing into your skates outdoors, losing the battle of cold feet before you even start.

For people not as participant-minded as spectator-minded, there could be a field day with a new rink. Most obvious is the expanded capacity and expanded schedule of hockey games resultant. Between 11 and 15 games of some of the best college hockey in the East.

Ice shows to go along with Winter Carnival or just for any performance will be possible with a rink. Ice Capades, Disney on Parade, etc., all figure on New England as prime area, and an ice show of national fame would seem to fit right in with the whole idea of winter carnivals.

University needs alone would keep the rink busy for most of the day, but there would be no idle ice time. Plenty of local hockey teams or skating groups would be fighting for any left over ice time at the going rate of $50 an hour.

The evidence here may seem one-sided. It is. A rink would benefit a vast number of people on campus and could be used around the clock. It might not be the boon to the world that penicillin was, but it would cure a lot of ills on campus.

Gymnasts Romp Over Pittsburgh Details In Tomorrow's MDC

Runners Crunched

By TOM DERDERIAN

The UMass varsity track team was soundly beaten by UConn and New York University at Storrs, Conn., Saturday in what Coach O'Brien termed, "A very discouraging performance."

There were a few bright spots, however, O'Brien said, "Jim Graves won the hurdles and the long jumpers have apparently broken into the 21-22 ft. range and are now in conference contention, Pete Ryan, Ed Shaughnessy, Mike Geraghty and Steve Bradley." O'Brien went on to praise the milers, Rick Barry and Randy Thomas who ran personal bests and the two-milers, Mike McCusker and Doug O'Connell.

Jim Graves was the only event winner for UMass. After the meet he had this to say about his hurdles race, "The time wasn't really that good. I was lucky there wasn't much competition, I'm satisfied with the race, but not with the time."

Jumper Ed Shaughnessy placed in two events the high jump and the long jump, he had quite a bit to say, "It is an interesting paradox. I jumped well within the 23' range but due to fouling (over-shooting the takeoff) my actual performance was an average 21'9". In the high jump, I was surprised to do an average to poor 6'4" since I had bruised my takeoff heel on the last long jump."

About the whole long jumping team Shaughnessy acted as spokesman and said, "In general the long jump was encouraging, again actual performances were only average due to our continually fouling or taking off one to two feet behind the board. If the inconsistencies in our approaches can be ironed out, then we could have a strong 22 foot squad."

Mike McCusker spoke for the 2-milers. "Well, I didn't want to lead but was forced into it...(it was well-known that Schindler of NYU was a kicker, he waits on a slow pace until the last lap and sprints ahead to win, so McCusker's tactic was to force an early pace to take a bit of the sting out of Schindler's 'Kick')...I am especially happy with Doug's race that means we can train together and be a good 1-2. I think we proved something although we lost the race, that is that we can run with this type of runner and we shouldn't be influenced by a slow early pace. My mother was there and she said after the race that, 'It was sooo pretty'. I guess that's a typical Mom's-eye-view."

The next meet is against Northeastern Saturday in Boston.

Swimmers Defeated

By JANIS AHMADJIAN

Despite hard, vigorous effort, the UMass Varsity Swim Team was defeated by a stronger M.I.T. team, Saturday afternoon 80/33. M.I.T. definitely dominated the meet throughout showing greater strength in the events.

However, Bob Okolita, a new swimmer for UMass, did overcome M.I.T. placing a first in the 200-yard Individual Medley with a time of 2:22.7. He also placed a second in the 200-yard Backstroke while George Kwiecien grabbed a third.

Grinding it out in the Distance swims: 1,000 yards Bruce Taylor placed a second and in the 500-yard Freestyle Jack Tyler placed second and Bruce Taylor third.

Joe Hebert gained a second in the 200-yard Freestyle and Jack Tyler a third.

Dick Blaisdell grabbed a second place win in the 100-yard Freestyle and third in the 500-yard Freestyle sprint.

Captain Herb Schuster placed second in the 200-yard Backstroke.

Tom Smith gained a third in the grueling 200-yard Butterfly.

In the first Diving Competition Mike Queen placed a second while in the second competition new diver Dick Hagins placed third.

After the long, hard disappointing meet Coach Bill McCafferty pointed out the team's dedication as they all got into the water again for extra practice in preparation for the big upcoming meet Thursday night with W.P.I. This is sure to be the big one of the semester with a lot of stiff, close competition in all events. Swimmer George Kwiecien stated a widespread team feeling in "UMass will peak at the W.P.I. meet."

Nader Urges Student Action

By MARK VOGLER

Expounding on consumer abuses and the undertakings of his Washington-based public interest research group, consumer advocate Ralph Nader addressed an overflowing crowd yesterday afternoon at Curry Hicks Cage. Urging students to combine both their role of a student and one of a citizen, the guest speaker pinpointed the major flaw in the American education system of today.

"The development of student concern in the 60's shook off the dual burdens of the 50's," noted Nader. "In many issues, thus breaking the stereotype that victimized students in society with a prolonged adolescence," he said.

"The question to ask yourselves is how much was done with how much, and how much more will be done in a continual way in the 70's if students will devote a little more of their time?" he added.

Nader told the crowd just what he had observed on a personal visit through the Princeton University library. He recalled that one third of the students were 'shooting the breeze', another third were gazing at pages at the rate of eight per hour, and finally the remaining third were "lying flat out with their faces on the book with saliva drooling out".

"How can we combine admitted talents and energy with moral postures in a hard hitting operation reflecting on the discontinuity of student efforts? Its got everything to do with education. A great deal of life is wasted on campus these days. Very few can escape the process. There's a lot of plain unhappiness, staying out of the main stream, drowsiness and laziness. And it's all tragic."

"What it boils down to is stepping back from the expectations that institutions are going to develop. We've got to undergo a complete revolution with habit and involvement process a continuous one. There must be a viable converging of the roles of student and citizen. There can be no distinction made between student as student and student as citizen. The combination must take place in the crucible of action in public issues and problem solving."

Nader cautioned his audience to become aware of the everyday pressures of life that we all must cope with. Some of the problems he delved into were concerning medical health, housing, mass transit, corruption in government ("it's so institutionalized most people don't look upon it as corruption any more"), property tax, patronage, Pentagon, the agricultural sphere, pollution and others.

"The country is in very serious difficulty, in most cases more serious than the demonstrations. The problems the demonstrators are addressing themselves to are here."

In regard to pollution Nader commented: "silent forms of violence have circumvented our historic sense of sight, smell, and taste and have been passed off as ailments such as tuberculosis and lung cancer."

"As our economy continues to grow, our problems continue to grow in direct proportion. It's even worse than that. It's no longer sufficient to stand up and say we're better off than other countries. We've got a lot to compare by unfavorably with people who have a smaller gripe."

The economic growth, Nader felt, should increase our standard of living. Yet, we're far from the best in the world in the areas of jails, courts, and nursing homes among a long list of others.

Before concluding his hour talk, Nader appealed to all present to collaborate in making the Western Massachusetts Public Interest Group an effective tool in the relentless fight against consumer abuse.

A question and answer period followed in the Colonial Lounge. Asked how he gets along without the finer things in life, Nader responded instinctively: "It comes easy for me. I was never much of a candidate for cars and refrigerators."

His response for the question: To what extent did you receive offers for large corporations to keep your mouth shut? "I don't get them any more. General Motors tried to hire me once. They invited me out to look at their great engineering works. I was asked how I would like to come and put my great contributions and ideas to work with their company. This turned excessive attention in their direction."

Nader, straight-faced, cool and calm, moved the jammed and packed crowd with his mastery of words and clever insertions of humor. Yet, what was so intriguing about his speech was the fact that he appeared to be quite intense and engrossed in what he was saying.

What seemed to be the same old messages-hashed and rehashed-and fed to the student congregation, turned out to be a legitimate proposal, backed with logical resolutions which typified Nader throughout the speech. Witty comments occasionally provoked a chuckle from the audience, but the general atmosphere for the most part was intense and geared toward the speaker. His interest-holding, but quick-paced delivery kept the listeners constantly on their toes. With his concluding remarks he incited a standing ovation from the 6,500 strong in the Cage.

Jean Shepherd Explains America

By CHRISTINE OLTHOFF

"How can you explain Howard Johnson's to Mao Tse-Tung?" asked Jean Shepherd to a capacity crowd in the Campus Center Auditorium last night. Howard Johnson's, that orange glow in the dark of night which, according to Shepherd, has single-handedly relieved the discomfort of more American travelers than any other institution on the American scene, is one of many peculiarly American institutions that Shepherd described last night.

Jean Shepherd, a satirical writer whose stories have been published in several national magazines, began his routine with a series of examples of television commercials. He depicted how television-watching Americans have come to see even some of the most absurd commercials as accurately reflecting reality. He best illustrated this by describing one commercial where a typical American reacts to finding a three-inch man in a tiny rowboat in a toilet tank as if it were a perfectly He has also written three books, and hosts his television show, America. Last night he concentrated his talents into entertaining a very responsive audience with satirical anecdotes and skits concerning the more ridiculous facets of American life.

Shepherd's typical American heroes are Charlie and Mabel who first appear in a car at a drive-in on Route 3 in Hackensak, New Jersey. Shepherd used New Jersey as the perfect example of how the American Dream has been translated into turnpikes lined with gas stations. Eight years after the drive-in, Charlie and Mabel appear again on the front porch of their tract house, debating the artistic value of adding a concrete Mexican to the pink flamingo and the seven polyethylene dwarfs which already grace their front lawn. Shepherd said later during a question and answer period that he recognizes that such things are important to many people in this country, and that he finds it funny, but "If people get happiness by putting a concrete Mexican on their front lawn, who am I to put them down?" he said. It seemed that this is also the attitude Shepherd would like his audience to take.

Belchertown Suit Filed

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

A class action suit was filed in Federal District Court in Boston yesterday charging that the state Department of Mental Health has been negligent in the care of patients at Belchertown State Hospital.

The suit was filed at 3:52 p.m. by the Belchertown State School Friends Association. The Friends Association was represented in court by Beryl W. Chen, a Boston attorney.

Francis Ford was assigned as the presiding judge in the landmark case, which will be brought to court next Friday in U.S. District Court at 10:00 a.m.

Among the major defendants named in the suit is Dr. Milton Greenblatt, commissioner of mental health and an ex officio member of the UMass Board of Trustees. Also named were Peter Goldmark, secretary of human services, Robert Yasi, commissioner of administration and Roland Nagel, superintendent of Belchertown State Hospital. Six other defendants were also named in the suit.

It was at first believed that Governor Sargent was named in the suit, but further developments have proved the reports false. Sargent-in the mist of revolutionary legal action concerning mental health-will give a major address today in Boston before the Massachusetts Association of Mental Health at the Sheraton Hotel.

UMass Professor Benjamin Ricci, president of the Friends Association, which represents parents of the children in the institution, said during an MDC interview that the case holds "national implications and has never been tried anywhere before."

Officers Doubt Offensive

PLEIKU, Vietnam (AP)-Hanoi's highly touted offensive in the central highlands has been so inoffensive, so far at least, that many junior field officers privately doubt the dire predictions.

"I know what they're saying in Saigon and Washington, but I'm out here and I don't buy it," said a U.S. captain who has spent two years advising South Vietnamese rangers at isolated outposts along the Cambodian and Laotian borders.

"This is the dry season. We always have some fighting around Tet and they always call it an offensive. It might have added significance this year because of President Nixon's trip to Peking. But from what I've seen of enemy movements out here, it won't be any bigger than last year."

Another ranger adviser pointed out that the Communist command usually tries to overrun one outpost or fire base in the central highlands after the monsoon rains. It was Ben Het in 1969, Dak Seang in 1970 and Fire Base 6 in 1971.

"They'll try for one again this year," he said. "There'll be some headlines and some siege stories and I think they'll be satisfied with that. But it's nothing out of the ordinary."

Yet Pentagon pundits, Nixon administration officials and others have been predicting a massive offensive since early January. This followed a trip to Washington by John Paul Vann, the highly respected senior American adviser in South Vietnam's 2nd military region.

Vann has predicted that Hanoi will stage a Tet offensive with some 50,000 troops and will be prepared to take 10,000 casualties for psychological effect.

He has been echoed by Cabinet members, the U.S. Army chief of staff, Gen. William C. Westmoreland; the U.S. ambassador to Saigon, Ellsworth Bunker, and Ambassador William J. Porter, chief American negotiator at the Paris peace talks.

Vann concedes his predictions are based on the Communist command's intentions rather than known capability, and he also concedes there is a "10 to 1 disparity ratio between what the enemy says he will do and what he actually accomplishes."

But he cites intelligence reports of unprecedented enemy activity, taken from captured documents, defectors, prisoners of war, agents and electronic sensors.

Vann was one of the few ranking Americans to predict the Tet offensive in 1968.

Lt. Gen. Ngo Dzu, Vann's counterpart, has expressed himself as "in full unanimity" with him.

Some colonels at Pleiku headquarters see the current lack of ground fighting as the "lull before the storm," but junior officers in the field contend the military situation has been overdramatized.

"The Montagnards are the best indicators of any offensive," said one ranger adviser at Duc Co, a small outpost in western Pleiku Province. "When they start leaving their villages and head for the cities we know there's going to be some tough fighting."

"Look at them." He pointed to the stilt-houses of a neighboring Montagnard village. "They're still there. As long as the Yards stay I know I'm goin to be okay."

Free Concert Tonight

The Concert Committee, in conjunction with two local bands, Rush and Clear Sky, is putting on a Free Concert to be held tonight from 7:30 to 12 midnight. There should be fine music and a good time for all those who want to make it so.

The Committee is putting on this dance in the hopes that it can test out, on a small scale, the feasibility of some of its security ideas. Of major importance is that the students bring along their University of Massachusetts or Five College ID's. These will in essence be their tickets to the event. ID's will be checked.

It is also requested that the students not bring any alcoholic beverages to the concert, in the hopes of avoiding trouble and making clean-up easier.

The Concert, to be held in the Student Union Ballroom is seen as a way of informing the students that the Concert Committee is still in operation and is concerned that the students on this campus receive high quality entertainment.

The gist of the free concert idea was born out of the desire of the Committee to keep interest in the idea of a Spring Concert alive in the student body. If enough student interest comes out of this, there will be the possibility of garnering student support once again towards taking action in presenting more free concerts in the near future, including the possibility of a big one this spring in the stadium.

Remember, 7:30 to 12 in the Student Union Ballroom. Who knows? If everything goes according to plan, we might have the Faces in the spring after all.

USCC To Oppose New Tuition Hikes

By MARK KELLEHER

Barely remembered as the student organization that organized opposition to last year's attempted tuition hikes, the USCC (University and State Communications Council) is quietly preparing for a busy Spring semester. Just like last year, proposed tuition hikes again loom as high on USCC's agenda.

On February 19 and 20, USCC plans to host a tuition conference with all state and community colleges participating. Opposition positions will be explored while the delegates figure out a course of action to take before the upcoming legislative committee hearings.

Besides being the student's advocate at the legislature, the council also has many interesting on-campus projects, too. It is now in the process of compiling a list of bills now in the Legislature that would be of interest to campus RSO groups and academic departments. An example would be the student interested in municipal affairs or environmental concerns. They could go down to USCC's office and ask for copies of the bills that would affect their particular areas of concern. The council would probably have the bills in question and if not would be most glad to obtain them for you.

The USCC also coordinates the Legislative Research Council. It's composed of students doing research work for legislators. Students in the program now are working on such matters as lowering the age of majority, laws pertaining to women and the question of tenure. Past success has been the second student trustee.

Another important event now in the planning stages is this spring's Legislator's Day. This year the council plans to invite the House Ways and Means Committee. This is the committee that just about controls the purse-strings of state government. It should be interesting to see how they react to the campus.

Salzman Rejects Terms, But Will Return Voluntarily

By SHELLEY LAUZON

In a press conference held yesterday afternoon, Dr. Freda Salzman announced she would return to work in the physics department "on a voluntary basis, in any capacity I could be used there." Dr. Salzman, a UMass-Boston faculty member was fired in 1969 on the grounds that her husband held a tenured position in the same department.

An offer was made to Dr. Salzman at the January 28, 1972, Board of Trustees' meeting by UMass-Boston Chancellor Broderick for a position as an Associate Professor of Physics. Her employment would be effective January 31, 1972, and extend to August 31, 1973. The offer was rejected as "unsatisfactory."

Asked why she has decided to return to her position solely on a voluntary (no pay) basis, she replied that she was "not rejecting the position but the terms. I want to show my own good faith. I want my job back. I feel this shows my good faith without rejecting the offer. I don't want to reject the offer until the case has been worked out."

"In principle I am being offered a position, the terms of which are unacceptable," she noted. "This is not the job I was recruited for. I understood I had a long term position: a year and a half is no understanding, just a year and a half."

The controversy began in 1965, when George and Freda Salzman were offered dual appointments in the Physics department at the UMass-Boston campus; he to a full-time tenured position and she to a part-time untenured position. Due "to the understanding of a long term position", Dr. Salzman claims she and her husband "gave up dual offers of tenured positions elsewhere to come to UMass-Boston."

According to Salzman supporters, struggles over curriculum, faculty maldistribution, arbitrary administrative hirings and firings, etc., occurred from 1965-1967. Numerous memos from former Chancellor Ryan indicated intentions to exclude close relatives as of September, 1969. The physics department then made strong recommendations for Freda Salzman's reappointment after her fourth year.

In a letter of non-reappointment to Dr. Salzman on August 31, 1968, Chancellor Ryan's last day in office, he stated that "University policy quite clearly prohibits the contemporaneous appointment, within the same department, of close relatives." All appeals to the second chancellor after this date were rejected.

Dr. Freda Salzman, former UMass Boston faculty member, explains that she will return to work "on a voluntary basis" in a press conference held yesterday. (MDC Photo by Barbara Brecher)

A complaint filed with the UMass Tenure and Grievance Committee (TGC) in February of 1970 by the physics department received unanimous support and called for her reappointment. Less than a week later, the Chancellor rejected the TGC report and cited allegations of nepotic practices by the Salzmans. Dr. Salzman noted that the allegations came nearly a year after she had begun leave at MIT and "had little contact with the University."

A key point in the issue is that Freda Salzman was hired under the same nepotism rules that she was fired under. President Wood says the issue is one of University policy. Mrs. Salzman says that "different administrators are saying different things."

She also claims she was a victim of discrimination against women and filed complaints with the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination (MCAD) in December of 1970. Additional complaints were filed with the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

"I'm very disappointed with HEW", she added. When she was told she'd be offered a new position, she called the HEW office, which "encouraged me to accept the position."

"I decided not to accept their advice," she went on. HEW had said they would begin investigating the case 2 months ago, but actually started work this past week. She feels they were motivated simply by public pressure. "How far and how long it will take I don't know."

A "new" policy was voted on at the December 28, 1971, meeting of the Board of Trustees, stating that the qualifications would be the only criteria for hiring faculty members, thus enabling husbands and wives to serve on the same staff. No action was taken in the Salzman case. President Wood, at that time, said the ruling would not be retroactive.

Efforts to gain support from the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) have produced little. "I am very unhappy with the response I got. The Boston chapter is weak; their results show this. I was hired by discrimination and fired by discrimination." She said she had hoped the AAUP would step in on these charges, but they "are tied up in legalities that are irrelevant."

Mrs. Salzman feels that Chancellor Broderick is "very much involved" in the case. "He could have reversed the previous Chancellor's decision to fire me; he could have stepped out gracefully in December even though he hadn't previously. He didn't."

President Wood has failed to respond to letters requesting access to documents, primarily those with allegations of nepotism. "The only reason they gave at first for firing me," she alleges, "was that of the hiring of relatives," and feels that "nepotism per se" was used in the issue.

Confidential reasons were given for denial to much of the information. If allowed to see these recommendations, the administration would be "destroying confidence." "That doesn't mean they have the right to slander us, of course," she added. "We don't even know the allegations," which she feels must be "unsubstantial."

Mrs. Salzman's husband, Dr. George Salzman, was present at the press conference. He added to his wife's statement on the "confidential" recommendations by saying that "the principle of secret files is a key point. The Administration has powerful tools in its hands, tools it can use yet cannot reveal because they are confidential." Mrs. Salzman added she has been denied due process under the law.

In regards to a settlement in the near future, Mrs. Salzman feels that "political play exists here in that the University is trying to negotiate the case before HEW makes its findings. The University is giving as little as possible, and it's an agonizing process." She hopes they will proceed rapidly and reach a "satisfactory" agreement. However, she added she has been "discouraged," and has no reason to believe it will come through.

Dr. Salzman announced that she has informed her department she is willing to meet, but that she must make certain stipulations about that meeting. No date has yet been set.

Placement Council Meeting On Jobs

By JAN LIVA

"Over 90% of all second semester UMass seniors know exactly what occupations they will be entering after graduation."

For those of you that can appreciate the inaccuracy of this statement, then hopefully you might consider doing something about it. The Placement Advisory Council is sponsoring a meeting tonight at 7:00 p.m. in Room 162 of the Campus Center, and is looking for interested undergraduate students to join. The council won't solve the job shortage for students nor will it channel anyone into a specific major. Rather it is a group of students working with the administrative staff of the Placement Office to improve the quality of advising given to students at UMass.

To say that the system of advising at the university is not totally adequate is to reveal the sentiments of the council. The scheme of the council, according to the present student chairman, Sean McGuirk, is to "re-evaluate the position of the Placement Office at UMass and to determine how valuable it is." The council is also looking into departmental advising to see if the individual departments provide adequate counseling facilities from the students' viewpoint.

Ms. Pearlman explained the function of the Placement Office. "It brings recruiters on the campus, sets up interviews, supplies the space for the interviews and keeps confidential recommendations on file to send to various potential employers."

Mr. Robert Morrissey, Director of the Placement Office and also a member of the council, told other council members that the Placement Office recently received a serious setback concerning any plans for expansion. Its budget funds were cut. In addition to the budget cut, the Placement Office was told at the close of last semester to vacate a significant number of its interviewing rooms where seniors were interviewed by recruiting employers.

The Placement Advisory Council, because it is composed of both administration and students, can generate student interest in the deficiencies of the Placement Office. An area of needed improvement in the Placement Office is its library facilities. The library adjoining the office contains information on career opportunities and graduate school listings. Yet much of this information is sketchy and outdated. Modern innovations such as audio-visual aids are lacking. Mr. Morrissey sees the need for these improvements but cites the lack of funds for such a project.

Presently the council needs new student members who will go with a staff member of the Placement Office to interview individual department advisers to determine what advising information is available in each department. The student interviewer will represent the student point of view, discuss student needs, ask how these needs are met in each department and perhaps offer methods for improving the advising information is available in each department. The student interviewer will represent the student point of view, discuss student needs, ask how these needs are met in each department and perhaps offer methods for improving the advising system.

If you have any suggestions, criticisms or interest in this project come to the recruitment meeting tonight.

SUG Board - Policy By Definition

By JOHN DONNELLY

Last Thursday night the Student Union Governing (SUG) Board defeated a bill which would have ended the SUG Board. Despite the fact that the bill could not gain the necessary two-thirds vote to pass, the majority of the SUG Board voted in favor of the bill. The reasons for the bill were varied, but two aspects were found in common. SUG Board wants more power and they want student support. Examining SUG Board's achievements some members are optimistic about what they have done and others are pessimistic about what they might have done.

SUG Board is made up of about 25 students, whose job it is to approve or disapprove bills, initiated by the management of the Campus Center and Student Union. Therefore the SUG Board establishes policy by definition. However, the university Chancellor, Randolph Bromery, maintains a veto power, which a SUB Board member said was used "extensively." This reduces SUG Board to an advisory role, despite all of the SUG Board's efforts, which included rewriting their constitution last year. This put SUG Board in a vulnerable position; they cannot set policy and yet can be blamed for faulty decisions regarding the Campus Center and the Student Union.

The Campus Center was built because the Student Union was not large enough and the University needed a conference center. The state, who owns the building through the Building Authority at UMass, would not offer any financial support. The building had to be paid for by the students, so each student has to pay a yearly $60.00 Campus Center fee. Added to this is the income of the various facilities at the Center which are patronized primarily by the students. So the question the SUG Board has been trying to get an answer to is that if the students assume financial responsibility for the building, why can't they assume more power of management?

SUG Board can assume more power of management, but the trustees have given governing power of the Campus Center complex to the university chancellor, Randolph Bromery. So there seems to be an inevitable power struggle which the SUG Board cannot win without student support. Support in their upcoming elections is their most immediate need. SUG Board is after student representatives. SUG Board members have repeatedly expressed the fact that student interest is of a necessity, and unless they know what the students want, they will have no clear cut views for the future.

Nixon Signs Political Ad Limit

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hailing it as "realistic and enforceable," President Nixon signed legislation Monday to limit political-advertising expenses and seal campaign finance-reporting loopholes.

The law goes into effect in 60 days, so it won't apply to early presidential primaries but it will cover later primaries, and will limit to $8.4 million the amount a presidential candidate can spend for radio and television advertising this fall.

Nixon signed the legislation the most comprehensive change of campaign practices law in a half century without the public ceremony which often accompanies presidential approval of major measures.

In a three-paragraph statement, Nixon called the bill "an important step forward in an area which has been of great public concern."

He noted that the measure stiffens reporting requirements for the source and use of campaign funds.

The new law repeals the loophole-ridden and little-enforced Corrupt Practices Act of 1925. Asked whether the administration would enforce the new provisions, White House press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler responded, "Yes."

The law limits for the first time in history categories of spending by White House candidates.

Spending limits are calculated on a formula of 10 cents per potential voter, or $50,000, whichever is larger. They apply to all candidates for president, vice president, Senate and House and cover their spending on television, radio, newspaper, magazine and outdoor advertising, and paid-telephone campaigns.

No more than 6 cents of each dime can be spent on broadcast ads, meaning the ceiling on a presidential nominee's radio-TV budget this fall will be $8.4 million. The Republicans spent an estimated $12.1 million in 1968 while the Democrats spent about $6.1 million.

The law sets no overall campaign spending limit, but does limit to $50,000 the amount a candidate for president or vice president can contribute to his own campaign. Likewise, Senate candidates can contribute no more than $35,000 to their own campaigns, and House candidates $25,000.

Periodic reports must be filed by candidates after spending reaches $1,000. The report to the Senate secretary, House clerk, comptroller general or appropriate state election officials must identify each person contributing $100 or more.

NEWRY, Northern Ireland--BERNADETTE IN CIVIL RIGHTS MARCH-Bernadette Devlin, center, marches in the protest parade in Newry, Northern Ireland, Sunday. Irish Leaders Face Court BELFAST (AP) — Northern Ireland opposition leaders met in their unofficial rival parliament Monday night with the prospect that they soon may find themselves in jail.

Police said they have taken out court summonses against 26 leaders of Sunday's 20,000-strong anti-internment march in Newry. The march, like all processions in Northern Ireland, was illegal under the government's Special Powers Act.

Bernadette Devlin, the 24-year-old civil rights activist and member of British Parliament, said she too had received a summons. She supports Roman Catholic aspirations toward a united Ireland.

Francis McGuigan a 24-year-old Belfast man, made an anti-internment protest of his own and escaped from Long Kesh camp, where around 400 suspected members of the Irish Republican Army are held without trial.

McGuigan, according to IRA contacts, was a high officer of the Belfast Provisionals, the IRA's militant wing. Police and troops threw up roadblocks around Belfast but contacts said McGuigan was clear of the city.

He was the first to escape from Long Kesh, a former airfield near British army headquarters at Lisburn, southwest of the capital.

Though the Newry march passed peacefully, the weekend produced four more dead, bringing the toll of violence since August 1969 to 239.

Two members of the outlawed IRA were blown to pieces while planting bombs in a sabotage operation on Lough Neagh, an inland sea west of Belfast. The bodies were found in a sunken barge.

Still unidentified was a man in his 20s found hooded and shot through the back of the head on a road near the border with the republic, apparently the victim of an IRA execution squad.

The victim's lower right arm was tattooed with the wings of a British parachute regiment but the army said he wasn't a soldier. The IRA has sworn to kill 13 soldiers in revenge for 13 people shot dead in Londonderry when paratroopers moved against rioters after a civil rights march Jan. 30.

The opposition politicians, meeting in their "alternative assembly" in Dungannon, said they would prepare contingency plans against prospective jailing of prominent members. Illegal marching carries a mandatory penalty of six months jail, although the sentence can be suspended at the magistrate's discretion.

The rebel assembly was set up last year after members of the Catholic-based opposition called a boycott of the Northern Ireland parliament, which now is an all-Protestant assembly.

With the Newry march safely into history, the next confrontation between demonstrators and security forces comes on Wednesday, which the Civil Rights Association has billed as D-Day-"D" for disruption.

North Vietnamese Sharpen Attacks

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — North Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops sharpened their attacks Monday on Cambodian positions less than two miles from Angkor Wat and Angkor Thom, sites of ancient temple ruins.

A spokesman for the Cambodian high command in Phnom Penh reported one Cambodian soldier killed and 10 others wounded at a forward post on the outskirts of Siem Reap, a former tourist center three miles from the ruins.

The Cambodians hold Siem Reap; the enemy has been in control of the temple ruins since June 1970. The area is 145 miles northwest of Phnom Penh, Cambodia's capital.

Siem Reap has been under pressure for two weeks and the Cambodian government claimed Sunday that enemy soldiers had massacred about 20 Cambodian civilians who were arrested in a park surrounding Angkor Wat.

According to the government, the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong forces have halted all conservation work on the temples built between 9th and 13th centuries by Cambodian kings.

An internationally backed team headed by a French professor, Bernard Groslier, has been forced to abandon its campaign to spare massive sculptures and intricate bas reliefs from ravages of elements and from encroaching jungle.

Far to the northeast in Laos, the North Vietnamese launched a campaign to protect the western flank of the Ho Chi Minh trail to permit supplies to pour.

Dock Strike Accord Near

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Negotiators in the West Coast dock strike worked Monday to achieve agreement before Congress votes on a new plan for a 60-day injunction to partially end the record 122-day walkout.

The shipper and union bargainers appeared near a contract agreement in the sixth day of talks directed by Sam Kagel, veteran private mediator.

They resumed talks less than an hour after a House Labor Subcommittee in Washington approved the injunction plan drafted by Chairman Frank Thompson, D-N.J. The vote was 5 to 1.

The Nixon administration quickly frowned upon the House subcommittee's move.

At the White House, Secretary of Labor, James D. Hodgson, described the legislation as clearly unsatisfactory. He said the measure "leaves everything up in the air" for at least another 60 days.

Thompson said Harry Bridges, president of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, told him the union would continue the San Francisco negotiations through Wednesday.

Bridges was quoted as saying the ILWU then would propose submitting all unresolved issues to Kagel for binding arbitration.

The employer Pacific Maritime Association had no immediate comment on the arbitration offer.

Thompson's bill would authorize the government to seek a 60-day injunction ordering the union and shippers to handle military and agricultural cargoes and shipments to and from Hawaii. The bill would allow other phases of the strike to run on while negotiations continue.

Thompson estimated his proposal would get 80 per cent of the strikebound cargo moving.

Thompson said in Washington he offered his proposal because the administration had failed to convince him that the national health and safety required a termination of the entire strike at this time.

He said the measure would go to the full House Labor Committee Tuesday and could be passed by the House Wednesday if it agreed to suspend its rules to allow emergency action.

In Brief...

Cambodians Shoot At Monster

PHNOM PENH (AP) — Premier Lon Nol says Cambodian soldiers who shot up a mythical monster they believed was devouring the moon during a recent eclipse wasted so much ammunition the army might have run short in case of attack.

The marshal, who doubles as commander in chief of the Cambodian army, navy and air force, described the hour-long shootout on Jan. 30 as an ill-considered action and threatened to court-martial officers and men who go on shooting sprees.

Subway Accident Injures 32

BOSTON (AP) — Thirty-two persons were injured, none seriously, when a one-car subway train crashed into the rear of another train in downtown Boston Monday.

Refrigerator Trouble in Russia

MOSCOW (AP) — Once a Soviet citizen gets his own refrigerator he's in real trouble if it breaks down, Pravda reported Monday.

The paper said its investigation showed approximately 11,000 refrigerator owners in the Ukraine on waiting lists for repairs. It added that the situation in the Ukraine is not rare.

The Communist party organ looked into the repair problem after it received several letters of complaint.

Feminist To Speak On China

Ms. Florence H. Luscomb graduated in architecture from the Mass. Institute of Technology in 1909 and practiced her profession for about eight years. Always deeply interested in public questions, she campaigned actively for women's sufferage in the days when democracy for women was still unpopular, radical and ridiculed. After the vote was won in 1920 she continued in various civic movements as executive secretary: the Boston Board of Sanitary Control supervising health and safety conditions in garment factories, and for seven years the Mass. Branch of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom. She also was active in the labor movement, being a charter member and one time president of the United Office and Professional Workers of America's local union.

Peace has, for years, been a major interest for her. At 71 she was the oldest participant in the first American Peace Walk in 1958, covering the ninety miles from New Haven to the United Nations. In 1962 she was a delegate to the World Disarmament Congress in Moscow and to the Conference Against A and H Bombs in Tokyo. She went from one to the of these peace conferences by way of China, visiting Peking, Shanghai and Canton. Among many other things she saw the ancient hospitals, Peking University, kindergartens, a major industrial plant, worker's homes both old and new, the Great Hall of the People where the National Congress meets, museums and above all, the Chinese people going about their daily tasks.

Ms. Luscomb will speak about her 1962 trip to China and show slides at 3:00 P.M. in the Emily Dickinson Main Lounge on Orchard Hill, UMass. Tuesday, February 8.

She will also speak at the first session of the Orchard Hill Colloquia on "Women in the Economy and Political System". As a participant in the early Women's Movement, as were her grandmother and mother, she will describe "Women From Serf to Citizen: 125 Years of American History" at 7:00 P.M. P.M. in the Emily Dickinson Main Lounge.

Parking Fine Action Taken

By PEGGY KENNEDY

Students who haven't paid all back parking tickets will soon receive letters recommending that they either pay or contest the fines within 30 days. Those who do not will face action in Northampton District Court.

The letters will be sent out within 3 days according to Student Attorney General Henry Bouffard.

Attempts to collect the fines began last November when John McEleney, a UMass student, attorney general to help collect them. McEleney claimed that, since all money received from parking fines goes into a student scholarship fund, he was being denied a source of financial assistance by the University's failure to collect these fines.

Student presently owe $31,000 in parking fines to the University.

Lowenstein On Campus

(Editor's Note: Due to the inaccuracy of yesterday's story, the following is being run in its place)

Allard Lowenstein, former U.S. Congressman, will be here today to run a seminar at the School of Education. This is one of four visits, each lasting three days, planned by Lowenstein for February and March.

Teaming up with Lowenstein in his first seminar will be Dean Dwight Allen, who first convinced Lowenstein to visit UMass. The topic of their dissertation will range from education to politics.

In a recent interview Jack Bierworth, one of Lowenstein's aides, said: "Allard wants to teach seminars. His experience in areas outside education will lend itself to a better perspective of education."

Some of Lowenstein's claims to fame include his persuading Eugene McCarthy to run for president, his major role in SCLC, and his chairmanship in ADA. "He wants very much for the youth in this country to vote," said Bierworth.

Today's talk will be held in Marks Meadow Auditorium at the School of Ed and is free to the public.

Infirmary Expansion Underway

By DON ST. PIERRE

Plans for the expansion of the present UMass Infirmary were revealed yesterday by Acting Director of Health Services Barry Averil.

The new facility, which will house an enlarged out-patient clinic and new dental clinic, will cost about $1.5 million.

Averil said the project has been in the planning stage for 7 years. He hopes construction to begin by June of this year, he said.

The present building was designed to handle only 10,000 students and has been tremendously overcrowded during the last few years, he said. The new building should increase this figure to 25,000 students.

Averil said he hopes the building will "be operational by mid-'73."

The increased size of the out-patient facility should "reduce, considerably, the time a student has to wait for treatment," he said.

He said the new dental clinic will operate on an "emergency only" basis, with normal dental work being handled by the student's family doctor or an area physician. He added that there are hopes of including a "preventive dental clinic" at a later date. This would provide students with check-up and cleaning facilities.

The new building will also expand the present physical therapy and X-Ray facilities.

The new reception area will be larger and more efficient and should eliminate the present confusion students now encounter when seeking care. Plans also call for the out-patient clinic to be divided into smaller units which will provide the student with a more personal environment. A Nurse Practitioner Area with 5 nurses and a doctor on call at all times should also decrease the waiting time.

Averil said there is also space for an eye clinic which may be included at a later date.

He added that the new services will be reflected in a possible 5% increase in the Student Health Fee, but that this would not be realized until the facility is completed.

The new services will be housed in a two-story building which will be located directly in front of the present Infirmary.

Averil added that there are plans now under consideration which will add two more stories to the extension and increase Health Services in-patient facilities. The building has presently only five-room wards which are unwieldy when dealing with emotional or contagious problems. He said there are hopes for single and double rooms which will provide more privacy for these cases.

He said this would help the Health Services get away from the "sick only concept, which we are presently under."

TCEA Liason Committee Created For Reform

The Textiles, Clothing and Environmental Arts Department (TCEA) of the School of Home Economics would like to announce that a TCEA Liason Committee has been formed. It is comprised of TCEA students of different classes and different majors and its purpose is to work with the faculty in improving the TCEA Department.

Meetings have already started and are being held on Wednesdays, at 4:30 in Skinner Lounge. Anyone having suggestions such as new courses for the TCEA curriculum or any ideas to improve the department are welcome to come to the meetings or contact the officers: Linda Pinard, Chairman (549-6984), or Myra Paull, Vice-Chairman (546-7090), or Dianne Snow, Secretary (545-2516). The faculty adviser is Mrs. Margaret Randall who can be reached at 317 Skinner.

The committee is hopeful that the TCEA Department will be reformed, but advancements can not be made by the committee alone; support is needed by the students.

Write-In Campaign Begun For Senator Edward Brooke

The name of Sen. Edward W. Brooke, (R-Mass.), has been added to the thicket of New Hampshire primary politics as the object of a write-in campaign for vice president.

A Manchester lawyer, John A. Graf, said he launched the campaign Monday "after one of those long-winded bar association meetings."

Graf said he's "admired Brooke ever since he was running for state office in Massachusetts" and decided to promote the senator after hearing talk that Vice President Spiro T. Agnew might be dropped from the presidential ticket.

Brooke "seemed like the best possible choice so I decided to do something about it," Graf said.

There also is a write-in campaign in New Hampshire for Agnew.

Meanwhile, former Gov. Edmund G. Brown of California-the last man to defeat President Nixon in an election-campaigned in Nashua, N.H. for Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, (D-Maine).

Brown, who beat Nixon in a guberntorial election in 1962, said in one speech that the war, busing of school children and crime were not the major issues of the campaign.

"It is the economy," he said. "Unemployment, inflation, budget deficits, balance of trade deficits, wage and price controls, higher taxes and the declining value of the United States dollar."

He claimed Nixon had lost the faith and trust of the American people "because he failed in his promises and in failing he has not brought the country together again as he said he would, but he has divided it."

In Keene, Sen. Vance Hartke, (D-Ind.), continued his criticism of American involvement in the Vietnam war.

In an interview, he gave these examples of the cost of the war: If the fighting were stopped for only three days, he said, the money saved could pay all New Hampshire's expenses for a year; if it stopped one day, the money would pay all the state's educational costs; eight hours would mean enough money to fund the state welfare budget; and just one hour's savings would pay for all New Hampshire's annual expenditures for anti-pollution programs.

One of Nixon's Republican challengers, Rep. Paul N. McCloskey, of California, indicated in Wichita, Kan., that he was pleased with his showing in a New Hampshire primary straw poll conducted for the Boston Globe.

Academic Fascism

Freida Salzman is going to return to UMass Boston. But not in the way either she or the University likes.

Ms. Salzman does not like it because she is going back voluntarily, without pay, with the issue being resolved. She has been offered a position at the University, but one she, and this newspaper, feel she cannot accept. It offers an assistant-professor, at 3/4 time, at a salary to be negotiated. If she accepted this position it would be in effect selling out. The immediate issue would be settled, but not the matter of the University's policy concerning nepotism and the hiring and firing of employees.

The University doesn't like it because it shows Ms. Salzman is more interested in teaching than playing politics, something that cannot always be said for the state University's administrators and the Board of Trustees.

There is another matter in her case, however, one that perhaps is more important than Ms. Salzman's rehiring. That is the refusal of the Board of Trustees, President Wood and UMass Boston Chancellor Broderick to allow Freida Salzman due process under the law. Since the beginning of her troubles, in 1968, she has not been permitted to know the reasons for her being fired.

Allegations have been made against her; from being a "disturbing influence" to charges of nepotism. Yet she has not been officially informed of the reasons for her dismissal. The University has been content to make vague and so far unsupported charges against her, inherently denying her the right to reply.

Gentlemen, if democracy, in all forms, cannot be practiced on a University campus, what hope does the country have? You call yourselves educators. What kind of education are you giving us? Lessons in Totaltarianism? We urge you to rehire Freida Salzman, with tenure and back pay; and to inform her, officially, of the reasons for her dismissal.

Behind Closed Doors

After a semester of palace intrigue, the contest of succession to the chancellorship is indisputably over. It had all of the necessary ingredients: secrecy, intrigue, power, ambition, and a healthy dose of vision for the future of UMass. The contest took place behind closed doors and was disguised behind lofty homilies whose meanings could be discerned only through intricate translation.

During his tenure as an administrator here, Oswald Tippo gathered around him a kitchen cabinet of persons who have dragged the campus toward excellence and innovation. People such as Seymour Shapiro, Robert Gluckstern, Thomas Campion, Randolph Bromery, David Clay, and others, should be included in the Tippo Mafia. Regardless of the unpopular positions some of them have taken from time to time, they have and deserve our respect for their commitment to the high ideal of making this campus a community of diverse people struggling to learn something important.

There was a variety of factions vying for the chancellorship. President Wood was looking for a person who would acknowledge that the campus is not an island to itself (and who would acknowledge presidential authority.) The Tippo Mafia recognized that the campus had lost its weak rebellion against "the System," and was thus seeking to sustain the campus momentum begun by Tippo. Other cliques were less cohesive. They could better be called "sentiments." One such sentiment sought to return the school to its former days as an academic enclave, where students are docile and faculty was insulated from social reality. Another sentiment might be called the "School of Ed gung-ho," which hopes to create "meaningful" education by deluging us with bookless brouhaha and group gropes. (Shades of Spiro?) All of these factions were justifiably playing a role in the selection of that person who will preside over them.

The contest of succession began at the Board of Trustees meeting immediately following Tippo's resignation. The issue was two-fold: (1) who is to be the "acting chancellor"? and (2) how is the permanent chancellorship to be selected? These two questions symbolized the confrontation between the systems office and the campus. Superficially, it appeared that the campus won, since Bromery (clearly a campus man) was chosen acting chancellor and since the search committee was composed overwhelmingly of campus people.

But beneath the veneer, a subtle victory has been forged by the President. Divide and conquer is an old tactic that rarely fails. By selecting Bromery, Wood himself decided who would be the "representative" of the Amherst campus. He did not select the obvious person, Robert Gluckstern, who as Provost was the #2 man next to Tippo. By picking as acting chancellor someone who is being wooed for other high positions, he is able to put great pressure on the Chancellor Search Committee to pick Bromery before we lose a good thing.

Randolph Bromery is the choice of the President and the Board of Turstees. That can be stated on very reliable information. Bromery is the man who can maintain continuity while still remaining flexible to the needs of the university system. It was not idle fancy when the Board chose him out of many.

But the act that prevented real campus self-determination was the trustee decision that the Search Committee must present five names in nomination for decision by the Board. There is no way that Bromery's name could not be included among those five. When the list of names is then submitted, the board will select Dr. Bromery. No one is referring to him as "acting" chancellor any more. It has been decided. The campus has its chancellor.

A Pig Conference

WASHINGTON--(I asked to speak the other night at a fund-raising affair for the National Women's Political Caucus in Washington, D.C. It is very rare for a man to confess his sins publicly before such a distinguished group. I know the speech may finish me at the YMCA locker room or the tables down at Morey's, but I have to think of my future in case the women's revolution succeeds. Although what I said was "off the record," my political advisers have warned me that the speech may be taken out of context. Therefore, I have been persuaded to release the entire text.)

"Gentlemen and sisters, this is indeed a historic occasion. We meet tonight in this dark cellar to plot our plans for turning this country around.

"I know you asking yourselves, 'Why has this man, who is known to his wife as a male chauvinist pig, agreed to partake in these subversive activities?'

"There are many reasons.

"I believe that this is a sex whose time has come. I have seen the future and it is women.

"I know what it's like to be treated as a sex object. I know when someone takes me out to dinner she has only one thing on her mind. I am sick and tired of being pinched and mauled and groped at--just because I have a pretty face.

"And let the record read, if the revolution succeeds, that I was here on the platform tonight at your first $25-a-head cocktail party, and if you manage to overthrow those sexist politicians who now rule our nation, I would like to be put in charge of the telephone company.

"I have a confession to make.

"I am a sinner.

"And I come here tonight to ask your forgiveness and pardon.

"It's true that I was a male chauvinist pig.

"I studied it at school.

"But it wasn't all my fault. I discovered very early in life that during recess it was easier to fight with girls than boys.

"I also discovered at an early age that girls would do things for you that boys wouldn't--like lend you their roller skates or their homework.

"I found out other things. I found out that girls could make me blush and boys couldn't. I discovered, and may the Good Lord forgive me for this, that girls were nicer to touch than boys and they made my toes tingle all the time.

"I thought to myself, when I was maybe 9 or 10, that someday I'd like to have a girl of my own--someone who would cook for me and iron my shirts and shovel the snow out of the driveway and make my toes tingle at night.

"Now in retrospect these were terrible thoughts I had.

"But that's how we were all brought up. We thought of women as childbearers, car pool drivers, breakfast makers and bed warmers. And if they couldn't do those things, at least they could type and take shorthand.

"Yes, sisters, I confess that I was no better than Hugh Hefner or Norman Mailer.

"I had hit bottom.

"But then one night, while I was reading Playboy and watching my wife scrubbing the floor, a light dawned on me and I said to myself, 'Is this really what I want out of life? How can I be free when this woman that I married is still in chains? What good is it to own the world when she has to stand in line at Safeway?'

"So I picked her up from the floor and said, 'Go get a job, I'll squeeze out the mop.'

"Sisters, from that day forward, I have been one of you.

"Because of these revelations I can now live with myself. My floors are dirty, but my heart is pure.

"And so tonight, I ask your forgiveness for all of the terrible sexist acts I have perpetrated on women, overt and undercover.

"I appear humbly in front of this group to say that Gloria Steinem and Bella Abzug and Betty Freidan and Kate Millett and Germaine Greer have shown me the way.

"All I ask of you is to take me to your bosoms and say, 'I forgive you, Arthur. Go and sin no more.'"

Letters To The Editor

Big Green Machines

To the Editor:

To everyone on campus it must be common knowledge by now that the big green machines trying to run over all the students on campus by-ways are not monsters from oufer space. They are, instead, the buses of the Student Senate Transportation Service. Beyond this knowledge, and perhaps an indignant memory of standing an intermittable length of time in rain, snow, or black of night waiting for a bus that never came, most people know very little else about the bus service. I think, in this case, a little knowledge will not be a dangerous thing.

The Student Senate Transportation Service is actually two services in one. Not only does it struggle to operate the free three-route shuttle five days a week around our expansive campus, it also offers buses for charter to campus groups at such ridiculously low rates that we are forbidden by law to mention them here. It is funded by the notoriously stingy Student Senate and all of its more than thirty employees are students, each of whom holds at least a class two license. The "fleet" consists of six "Great American Dream Machines" of varying shapes and vintages. Unlike rare wines, we all know Detroit has had very few good years since the first years of the model T, and the product does not seem to improve with age. Perhaps yellow would have been a more accurate color for the buses, as they often leave a sour taste in the mouth of users and drivers alike, but who could argue with free green paint? Be that as it may, as a driver who has logged more hours in the shuttle than he would care to remember, I would like to make some observations from behind the wheel.

1. Try and pick up a schedule from any one of the buses or from the S.S.T.S. office. (It is located on the top floor of the old Student Union building, way in the rear next to Course Evaluation.)

2. Become familiar with the three routes. Try and relate the maps to spots on campus where the bus stops you will be using are located. Bus stops are marked by diamond-shaped orange signs, and will usually have a listing of the times to expect a bus at that stop. It is dangerous for the buses to stop at places other than the designated bus stops, so if you want to thumb while waiting for the bus, it is a good idea to stick pretty close to the stop and grab the bus if you don't get a ride first.

3. Bus drivers try to keep to their schedules, but many things can affect the service. Bad weather, heavy traffic, defective equipment, illness, and thousands of other problems beset our intrepid drivers constantly. There are a few things the average student can do to help the drivers stay on time and provide the best service possible. Try and be visible so the driver can plan his stops. When the bus stops, let the people who want to get off do so first. He may be the person who kept your seat warm for you. Step up carefully, but quickly. Try not to block the smooth flow of the rest of the passengers. If you want to get off, make sure the driver knows. He can see you in the mirror above his head. If you're driving in campus traffic and see a bus jammed in, try and give him the right of way.

4. The drivers are all students with the same problems as you. Be personal. Let us know what you think of the service. Or if you have a problem, suggestion, complaint, or compliment our number is 5-0056. Telephone calls can't be spindled, folded, etc.

War Over Photos?

To the Editor:

Why is it that in a school that boasts a student population of 25,000, there is no provision for a department of photography. If not a department, at least one scheduled course.

Why is this stepchild of the Art Department totally ignored? Today it is impossible to imagine a world without pictures, picture magazines, motion pictures, photo essays. The emotional value of photos is of an enormous scope. Wars are covered by photojournalists, books are illustrated with photographs, Presidents pose for photographs, weddings are photographed, children are bombarded with photographs

PHOTOGRAPHS, PHOTOGRAPHS, PHOTOGRAPHS.

Photos change the emotions of nations, people go to war over photos, funds are solicited by photos, mothers show photographs.

In fact it would be hard to imagine a facet of our present culture which is not inundated, swayed, persuaded, or illustrated by photographs.

Photography is not the province of just one department nor should the old argument of whether photography is art be raised. Photography is as much a part of our society as is the car or the television.

It is a shame that while this university prides itself on the progressive steps that are being taken in Experimental Education that there is no provision being made for one of the powerful forces which affect us to be studied. It is in the express interest of this university to use this very powerful force (photography) for the enlightenment of the now stale mediums.

The only way that I could be involved in a teaching situation with photography in this university is to go through the English Department and Project 10. Think of the influence that photography has upon each of these departments in UMass.

Photojournalism—Education
Macrophotography—Anthropology
Microphotography—Biology
Medical Photography
News Photography

There has not been the slightest effort to meet these needs. Why should the people who have go out into the field to work, have to beg to get the meagerest of instruction?

I call upon any Instructor, Professor, or Teacher to see the clear lack of effort which has permeated this campus. I would like any person interested in teaching their particular specialty in conjunction with photography to either contact me or the Administration directly for acceptance of this need. I would sincerely request the Administration to recognize this specific need and to take immediate steps to rectify this situation.

As anyone who is connected with an attempt to teach photography on this campus knows, the supply of students is NOT WANTING, just the opposite, students have to be turned away. The shame is obvious. The university has not met the requirements of the students.

Now is the time for all people interested in this situation to let themselves be known, and to request strongly that photography not be the stepchild of any department, that photography be installed immediately as an active force in this academic curricula.

Retraction

The Collegian apologizes for the unsigned letter which appeared in yesterday's editorial page concerning the JOE program. It is the policy of the Collegian that no letters will be printed without the name of the author.

Therefore, the accusations made in this particular letter cannot be considered valid since the author of the letter refuses to sign his name to the accusations. It would be a gross injustice to the JOE program and the entire University community if these unaccountable accusations were allowed to slander the program. The Collegian in an attempt to be journalistically responsible retracts any validity the accusations in this particular letter may have.

We realize a mistake was made on our part but feel we would be in greater error if the mistake was allowed to go unnoticed. The Collegian is willing to print any statements in letters to the editor concerning the JOE program- pro or con-as long as the letters are signed.

Editorial Points

Don't you think the Campus Center is due for a few changes? A $75 tax sounds like management isn't doing its job.

Could the Physical Plant hurry up and sand the walkways leading from the Hill and Van Meter before someone gets hurt?

The faculty, it must be said, has concern for the individual student. But for the student body as a whole?

You can sure get into a lot of trouble for printing unsigned letters around here.

We hope that the continual outflow of students from the Ralph Nader speech is not indicative of students' willingness to work for WMPIRG.

It would certainly help out the administration at Whitmore if a new Chancellor were named. Then more definite, lasting policies could be decided. Now, many things are up in the air.

Eternal Negation

Long have I suspected this,
and it so reflects upon me, that the world itself is a reflection of all that cannot be.
In spring the green-ness covers all,
and nothing left undone.
Each and every leafing thing is lost beneath the sun.
When all has ripened, nearly,
when all the rest awaits the time,
the summer steals the flower petals and turns them into wine.
The summer also drinks the wine, and when she's had her fill
she turns the vats all inside-out and leaves the rest to spill.
When all has dried and withered, nearly,
when all the rest awaits the time,
the autumn leaves burst into flame and set aflame the sky.
The autumn also fans the flame
by setting free the wind.
She flies the burning leaves around as winter cold sets in.
When all is white-snowed, nearly,
when all the rest awaits the time,
the winter turns the earth to ice.
Your only warmth is mine.
The winter also hides the sun
reflecting on the snow.
The earth becomes a dull reflection of a non-existent glow.

He Needs People

To the Editor:

This is the year of the Primary. Thanks to the new McGovern Commission guidelines, the primaries of 1972 mean more than those of any previous election year. In order to win the Democratic nomination, any candidate is going to have to show well in the primaries.

The first, and most important primary will take place only one hour to the north of us in New Hampshire. Each and every candidate will be concentrating on winning this primary, and New Hampshire will be swamped with students canvassing door-to-door for the candidate of their choice. I feel that George McGovern is the best candidate this year. But in order to win, he needs people to work in New Hampshire. Otherwise, we might be faced with a Muskie-Nixon election. This would be the case if McGovern does not get the help he needs!

If you would like to work for McGovern in New Hampshire for one day or a whole weekend, call Reid Fishman at 546-5779, or Rich Pierce at 546-6840. For more information, there will be a meeting of Students For McGovern tonight in Campus Center Room 902, at 9 p.m.

What's in it for you? Cold weather, snow, piercing wind, and a President that will do what should have been done four years ago.

The Last Straw

To the Editor:

I have been very tolerant until now about getting ripped off. You can steal a guy's suite cushions, you can steal his Velveeta cheese, you can even get away with his expensive New York cheese, but to steal a guy's kielbasa IS THE LAST STRAW.

I'm going to get you...I'm going to search this entire campus, the whole state, the WORLD, to track you down. You may run if you like, but nowhere on this earth is there refuge for scum like you. The P.T.A. (Polish Terrorist Army) always gets their man.

So beware.. the shadow on the wall,...the footsteps by the door...or the flash by the window,...it may be me.

Sincerely serious,
Michael J. Narkewicz
